From now on, dues to this club will be 50c and renewals, 25c.

Club President Arrives Here

VIVIAN STEPHENS, president of the popular William Haines Club, recently arrived in our midst with the intention of making her permanent home here. At present, she is residing in Culver City, and from there she will carry on her club activities with the able assistance of Billy himself. Shortly, Miss Stephens says, her club journal will be out, and it's going to be a dandy. So all you Haines fans, watch out.

Anita Page is demonstrating delight at this load of morning mail from members of her fan club.

Mehaffey Club

ANOTHER new Fan Club wants to be announced—it is the Blanch Mehaffey Fan Club, with head office at Detroit. The secretary will be glad to send out further information.

Some Good Prizes Offered

HAROLD NASH, Jr., President of The Stars' Friendship Club, writes us that he is offering some good prizes to the two fans who bring in the most new members to his club by March 30. The one who gets the most members will be given one year's free membership to the club and also a set of twelve fine photos—size eight by ten—of different actors and actresses. And the one who gets the next most members will be given a year's free membership and a set of six photos—size five by seven. All that the fans who compete in this contest have to do is to send the club the dues (twenty-five cents per year) that they collect for each new member, along with their names and addresses. Of course, they must be sure and send their own names and addresses, too. Money should be sent by money order, payable to Mr. Nash. He will send the photos to the winners as soon as possible.

Fans of the Pictures' Club

ANNOUNCING the Fans of the Pictures' Club. It has just been formed and deals more with the pictures that the stars play in rather than with the stars themselves. All the members will receive each month a list of all the coming worth-while pictures. Later, as the club expands, they will receive a list of other members. The first fifty members will receive an attractive prize. A club paper is being put together, which will be called Pictures. It will be sent free to members each month. Also a membership card.

Mystery of the Murdered Actor

"Eddie was a chivalrous boy; he never could bear to hear any one say anything about a woman."

No one ever followed up her remark.

THERE were reasons why the police lost interest in Eddie Diggins, Mrs. Diggins, the woman who spoke over the telephone, and the cryptic remark of Mrs. Diggins.

The reason was this:

The police department of Los Angeles was at that time running at loose ends. The reporters became uncomfortably curious about the Crescent Tea Room at No. 1440 North Cherokee Avenue. They couldn't understand why the police had allowed such a place to run. It seemed to them a fatal lack of curiosity on the part of the police that they should not have inquired into a long line of expensive limousines in front of a tea room at four o'clock in the morning. The prohibition officers also began to follow the uncomfortable curiosity of the reporters.

No. 1440 North Cherokee Avenue was becoming for the police what is known in the parlance as a "hot spot."

The investigation of the Diggins murder came under the supervision of a police lieutenant who has since been forced to resign from the force under fire.

To silence the "damned reporters," it became absolutely necessary to find some answer to the bleeding to death of Eddie Diggins.

Some one at the police station had an inspiration of high genius.

He called the attention of the reporters and the coroner to the fact that in the fracas some chairs had been thrown around. Something hit Charley Meehan and knocked him cold with a split scalp. One of these chairs had evidently hit the big glass chandelier that hung over the ball room. Everybody remembered that it had fallen with a stupendous crash in the darkness.

What was more reasonable than to suppose than that the glass chandelier had fallen and that Eddie had fallen down in the midst of the glass; and that one of the slivers of glass had stabbed him to the heart?

Why certainly that was it! Sure thing!

The police surgeon remembered now that the wound looked as though it might have been made by a sliver of glass.

And with that, the murder mystery of Eddie Diggins was hastily and discreetly slid out into oblivion—with other police secrets.

Meanwhile there remains the echo of that woman's voice over the telephone: "I know all about why your husband was murdered." And her broken-hearted sob.

And Mrs. Diggins' cryptic remark: "Eddie never could bear it to hear a girl talked about."

To Those Who Do Not Know

. . . THIS NEW MODE OF FEMININE HYGIENE . . .

THE modern American woman is envied by the other women of the world today because of her independence. She is eager to take care of her self . . . anxious to preserve far beyond the allotted years the bloom and buoyancy of youth. The modern American woman is fast learning that this depends largely upon a subject too often ignored . . . upon feminine hygiene.

Heretofore, feminine hygiene has been achieved at great discomfort. Seldom convenient . . . under some conditions it was impossible.

No Water - No Accessories

Now, however, through the use of a harmless antiseptic in tablet form, which requires no water or accessories, American women are fast learning the convenience of feminine hygiene. Among women who know, among nurses especially, you will hear enthusiastic recommendation of this antiseptic.

These tablets are known as Pariogen tablets. For a long time prescribed by the medical profession, Pariogen is not a poison, contains no carbolic acid, cresol or bichloride of mercury, yet destroys the most pernicious germs in a few seconds.

May Be Carried in a Purse

Pariogen tablets come twelve to the tube - a tube about the size of a fountain pen. The price at any drug store is $1.00 Pariogen tablets may be carried anywhere in a purse, making hygienic measures possible almost anywhere, no other accessories or water being required.

Sent Anywhere by Mail

If your druggist is unable to supply you, or if you prefer to send direct, the coupon below and a dollar bill will bring you a full size tube of Pariogen tablets together with full directions for their use.

If, for any reason you do not wish to keep them, just return whatever remains and we will promptly refund your dollar and postage. Tear out the coupon now.

American Drug & Chemical Co., 669
420 South 6th Street, Minneapolis, Minn.

Enclosed please find $1.00 for which please send me under plain wrapper one tube of Pariogen tablets together with full directions for their use, under the money-back guarantee stated in your advertisement.

The Postal Pouch Editor will answer your questions on this page. For a personal answer enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

J. E. B.: Carol Dempster isn't working in pictures any more. Write to her at United Artists.

F. FORD: A new F-Ford? Stop stuttering! That was Elinor Fair who played opposite William Boyd in The Volga Boatman; and now she is Mrs. Bill. Which just goes to prove that romances are not always confined to motion pictures.

H. N. D.: Whatja mean, the whole address of a star? If you mean their private domiciles where the butler and pomeranian reside, you're out of luck; for I'm just as dumb as you are. But I can give you their studio addresses, where they receive all fan mail. Write to Clara Bow, Richard Arlen, Charles Rogers, Bebe Daniels, Richard Dix, and Emil Jannings at Paramount; to Harold Lloyd at the Metropolitan Studios; to Colleen Moore and Richard Barthelmess at First National, Burbank; Gloria Swanson, F. B. O., Hollywood; Joan Crawford, John Gilbert, Norma Shearer, Anita Page, and William Haines, at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Culver City. To Dolores Del Rio at Tec Art, Hollywood and to Ronald Colman, Don Alvarado, Vilma Banky, Mary Pickford, and Douglas Fairbanks at United Artists. Yes, all the stars send out photographs, but don't forget to send twenty-five cents in stamps for them.

GILDA B.: Colleen Moore is five feet, four inches tall, weighs one hundred and fifteen, and has been in pictures about ten years. You should have sent a stamped, self-addressed envelope for a personal letter.

GERTRUDE E.: Women are cats—I always suspected it, and now I know. Joan Crawford was born on March 23, 1906, so you were right—and there's no special secret about it. William Haines was born in 1900, John Gilbert in 1895, May McAvoy in 1891, and Buster Collier in 1902. Never mind about Polly Moran—her face is her fortune, which is more than a lot of these movie-struck baby dolls can say! And you're perfectly right—I'm either awfully young or in my second childhood. How did you ever guess? Brains—that's what you've got—just brains!

Will You Be Next?

Each month some star will send a personal reply to one of the letters of inquiry received by Postal Pouch. This month "Buddy" Rogers answered one of the letters and sent a beautiful large-sized autographed photo of himself to "Ginnie C." The letter and "Buddy's" reply are below.—Editor.

Dear Postal Pouch Editor:

Oh, can you tell me all I want to know about Buddy Rogers? Please try to persuade him that he shouldn't get a crush on Mary Brian or anyone else and if he does, just to spite him—I'll meet his brother.

Is he a smooth dancer? Does he like to dance? Does he drink? I hope not. Does he smoke? Is he conceited? How old is he? Does he stay out very late regularly or is he a good little boy? Is there any way I can get a personally autographed photo from him? Please help me out. What religion is he?

Sincerely,
GINNIE C.

Dear "Ginnie C.:"

I'm more than happy to know there is someone who is more interested in the real Buddy Rogers than the reel one.

I've lived with him several years and only know what he wants to do in the future as to a career.

Yes, it's true that Mary Brian is one of my friends. And that much should make me conceited. But I hope I'm not conceited.

No, I don't smoke or drink.

Of course I stay home nights—at least, quite often. I live with the family of a fraternity brother of mine from the University of Kansas. We lead a very normal life.

I'm sending you an autographed picture so that if you can read character from writing, you'll know lots more about me.

Best wishes always, from

Chas "Buddy" Rogers

GEORGE T.: I don't know where to tell you to address Jack W. Welch, who assisted in directing The First Kiss, except at Paramount, where the picture was made. You might be sure to write "Assistant Director" after his name, just to help the office boy who might suspect him of being president of the company.

EDDIE H.: Another good girl gone Hoot Gibsonish, eh? He's five feet, ten inches tall, weighs one hundred and sixty, has light brown hair and blue eyes, and was born in Tekamah, Nebraska in 1892. He was a hostler at Harry Carye's stables, then a stunt man, trick rider, and finally an actor in the movies. He is married to a former vaudeville star, and has one child. I don't happen to know either his religion or salary. Ben Lyon was born in Atlanta, Georgia. Edna Conway, who used to be at Fox, is a Maryland girl. and so is Dorothy Phillips; but these are all I know from your state. Glad you like our magazine so much—we're trying to make every issue better, and seem to be succeeding if the enthusiastic letters we receive daily from our fans are an indication.

GERTRUDE C.: Write to Charles Delaney at First National, Burbank. Did you see him with Alice White in Show Girl? Write to him direct for his photograph. My photo? Why, bless your heart, Gertie, I've not had my picture taken since the one back in the Gay Nineties with my first grandchild on my knee. But I have a long white beard, three white hairs, and twinkling, gray eyes. Six feet two in my red knit socks, and one hundred and eighty-nine pounds in suspenders. Can't you just see me? Name? Papa Postal Pouch. Sure!

HAROLD C. D.: Clara Bow is not "still married," or "married again"—it's just plain "never." Don't thank me—the pleasure is all yours.

GYPSY: Bell up for Richard Dix! Look for him in Redskin, Moran of the Marines with Ruth Elder, and Unconquered. Yes, he does deserve something better than very light comedy roles—he's a good actor.

Valentino's Hidden Loves Revealed

frenzied correspondence with her until he learned she was also writing to several other men.

While dancing in a hotel, he met a society girl of an old California family. She seems to have been quite overwhelmed by his good looks and his undoubted charm of mind. She wanted to marry him. But her family had the heebie-jeebies. They fairly wrenched her out of his arms. The idea! A penniless Italian with slicked-down hair and no job.

SHE finally married an actor of small celebrity. On Rudolph's last visit to Paris, he saw two figures—two wistful peering figures in the crowd that surrounded his hotel. He left his party and broke his way through to the side of the young lady who had jilted him, her husband standing obscurely on the edges. He greeted her with affectionate warmth and went on his way—and she looked wistfully after him.

It was while Rudolph was looking for odd jobs as an extra man and dancing occasionally at hotels, that he met Jean Acker. She was twenty-three and was struggling to butt her own way into the movies.

She was carried away into a whirlwind marriage; but she wasn't too much carried away.

This wasn't the warm, devoted love that was necessary to keep Rudolph's home fires burning.

Jean went away on location into the heart of the high Sierras—and out of the heart of Rudolph.

BUT she did not give him up without a struggle. During the divorce suit, one of her letters to him was read:

"Dearest boy of mine:

"I wish you were here in my arms this very minute. Oh, I need you so. When will I be there again?

"You remember the song: 'I'd Rather Be There Than Any Place I Know'? Well, that's the way I feel tonight.

"Try to be as good as possible. Remember I don't expect too much of my good-looking, dark-eyed boy."

Meanwhile Rudolph was getting on in the world.

He made a picture with Bebe Daniels and she stepped into and over his heart. There came a robust and hilarious affair with Nita Naldi, who was cynical, brilliant, Italian, and overwhelming.

His next real affair of the heart was one of the strangest of his love life. Madame Nazimova, while at the top of her career, had an art director—a brilliant, restless girl with an overpowering ambition. Her name was Natacha Rambova. She was born Winifred Shaughnessy. She was adopted by a millionaire perfume manufacturer and became Winifred Hudnut. She met Rudolph and became Mrs. Valentino.

This marriage was foredoomed before it started. Miss Rambova had the soul of a Napoleon. Rudolph dreamed of a fireside with babies crawling around.

She moved him into a house with black marble floors and "art" draped around in profusion.

The bust-up came when Mrs. Valentino insisted upon blossoming out as a picture producer—on Rudolph's money. She made a weird six-reel picture which cost $80,000 and never has been released.

And that was the end of that.

IT WAS while making The Eagle that Rudolph fell in love with Vilma Banky.

He had in the meantime risen and fallen. At the time of Monsieur Beaucaire he was undoubtedly the most popular star the screen has ever known. Whenever he appeared on the streets in New York, there was a wild mob scene.

Then there was Vilma Banky. Rudolph never touched the heart of the lovely Vilma. When he began paying her ardent attentions, the usual loving friends hustled around and gave her warning. "He will make a sucker out of you," they told her. "He will love you for a while; the next you know, he will be loving somebody else."

Vilma, who is a shrewd, composed young lady, made reply. "When I came to Hollywood from Hungary, I was a lonely girl. I met people and the next time I saw them, they would nod and say, 'How do' and pass on. Since I have been seen with Mr. Valentino, they say: 'Dear, dear Vilma. How long it is since we have seen you.'"

Rudolph loved somebody else and Vilma only smiled.

Somebody else was Pola Negri. I don't believe that, even now, Pola knows whether she was in love with Rudolph, or whether she was just having a grand time dramatizing herself.

For some months, the affair between Valentino and Pola kept Hollywood awake with excitement. It was the grandest and most flourishing love affair this country has ever known. It had the elaborate gestures and the grand manner of a romance of the Middle Ages.

One day, I saw Pola at the studio.

"Pola," I said, "you look so sweet and lovely that everything must be going well with you."

"What you mean well?" she asked sourly, "Love or business?"

"Well, both."

"Business—very good; love—very bad," she answered with convincing brevity.

Rudolph went flying off to New York on his last trip. After he had departed, we all plied Pola with questions as to what had happened to the course of true love.

"We were really engaged," she said, "but the fact that we both had our careers to follow accounts for the delay in our wedding plans."

Then came his sudden fatal illness and death and Pola's tumultuous trip across

3 Dangers to skin beauty

1. Germ-covered cloths
2. Harsh towels
3. Non-absorbent cotton

Avoid them in this way: rub cold cream off, not in

DO you rid your pores of the day's grimy, poisonous accumulations or do you rub cold cream and dirt further into your already abused skin?

Absorb cold cream by using Kleenex Cleansing Tissues. Their gentle softness lifts embedded impurities to the surface. They leave the skin smooth, fresh, healthy, clean! And they cost only a few cents a day, though you use three sheets at a time and discard them after one use. Send for a sample package. Try it. You'll be delighted.

Pearl White was in her heyday—Doug Fairbanks was taking Mary Pickford riding in a borrowed Chevrolet—Betty Compson loaned Tommy Meighan her hair net.

AN AMBITIOUS young Chicago school girl applied for work at the old Essanay Film Company, and was given a very small bit in Chaplin's first picture for that company, appropriately titled His First Job. Eager to demonstrate her histrionic dramatic ability, the little super emoted all over the place and eventually fulfilled her hope of attracting the comedian's attention. But in what manner! Turning to the casting director he ordered, "Take out that Swanson person and let someone else do the bit!"

Viola Dana was a star and engaged to Orman Locklear. Locklear's crash ended the romance.

Real Art was trying to launch Wanda Hawley, Bebe Daniels, Constance Binney and Justine Johnstone as stars. Bebe became one; Constance and Justine married; Wanda is still playing around the edges of the industry.

Creighton Hale was playing with Pearl White. Pearl was getting tired of serials and tried to be a star in features but found that the public had stamped her and she might as well stay stamped or get out of pictures.

Will Rogers was making Jubilo, by Ben Ames Williams, his first big screen hit. He also wrote the titles which helped to put him over big as a wisecracker.

Ten years ago January 26, The Miracle Man company went on location in Laguna Beach. At that time all exteriors were really taken on the exterior. Betty Compson was putting invisible hair pins into Tommy Meighan's hair to keep it from blowing while she had her own protected by an old-fashioned hair net. They finally resorted to a hair net for Tommy's.

Edna Purviance was suffering agonies because she did not get the Betty Compson role in that picture. Thomas Meighan had suggested her for it.

The laboratory of a modern studio is one of the most spectacular branches of the industry. But fifteen years ago Thomas Ince carried home the day's "shooting" and developed it in the kitchen sink! His ace actor at this time was Charles Ray, just a nice little country boy trying hard to get along. One day Charlie saw the preview of his latest picture and rushed to Ince with tears in his eyes. "I'm terrible!" he cried. "I guess I'll never amount to anything on the screen, after all." Ince turned to his desk with a smile and pulled forth a contract. "Maybe not," he replied, "but I've already made up my mind to sign you again—as a star." Charlie, fulfilling Ince's faith, later became one of the most popular stars the screen has ever known.

Lottie Pickford and Kenneth Harlan were running around together.

Charles Klein, now directing in Hollywood, was then producing in Germany. He brings us word that ten years ago in Europe, the first American serials were just being distributed and German producers commenced to imitate them as well as the early American westerns. But the big fat Germans looked so funny on horses and stage coaches that they turned into fairly good comedies. Madame X, Intolerance and Pauline Frederick were the rage at that time. Griffith was to them the Dean of American pictures.

Martha Mansfield was being seen places with Sam Goldwyn. Shortly afterwards Martha was burned to death during the making of a picture and Sam turned his attentions to Mable Normand.

Charlie Chaplin did his bit during the hectic days of the war by giving Liberty Loan speeches to crowds in Pershing Square.

the continent in a special train to clasp his cold hand.

After it was all over she said: "My love for Mr. Valentino was the greatest love of my life. I shall never forget him. I loved him not as one artist loves another, but as a woman loves a man."

IT WAS not until after his death that his strangest love affair was known. A little English actress named Peggy Shaw was found dead in her room in London—evidently by her own hand. And scattered about her room where she had read them for the last time were many letters from Valentino—written in the last years of his life; letters of sympathy, love and encouragement. Through them ran the wistful note of a young heart longing for what it never found—a home, a girl and babies.

Not long ago, I had a letter from a spiritualist medium—unknown to me. She told me—for what reason I do not know—that she was hearing regularly from June Mathis, the scenario writer who discovered Valentino and who died within a year of his death.

She said, across the Dark River, life was going on for them just the same. June was writing scenarios just as during her earthly life and Valentino had found in Martha Mansfield a rare and sympathetic friend. Martha Mansfield was the young actress who was burned to death a few years ago while making The Warrens of Virginia on location in Texas.

So it may be that Valentino's love life has just started. I don't know if they have homes and babies over there; but for his sake let us so hope.

Talk's Not Cheap

cost of the silent, but the point is that total production cost has leaped half as much again as it used to be, and in some of the studios it has doubled! Result, some wonderful things now happening in Hollywood: Fewer pictures, vast incursions of stage people, and the humbling and changing about of great names.

So many things can happen in capturing the imponderable, tricksy and complicated entity of sound! "Mr. Mike" (the microphone) is full of tricks. Of late he's shown special fiendishness in picking up rustling of undies and the click-click-click of garters, suggesting that he would really prefer Lady Godivas to pose before him. Or (at the other extreme) he'll go on strike. Recently ten minutes of Mary Pickford's convulsive sobbing in Coquette made no impression on his case-hardened soul. "Calm yourself, Miss Pickford," soothed Sam Taylor, "the sound-track isn't working." Those emotionally prepared tears have been entirely wasted, "Our Mary" was obliged to wait for the repairs and then work herself up again.

FOOT PAINS ENDED in 10 minutes or costs you nothing

1 Trouble starts in weakened muscles. Tiny bones of forward arch are displaced. Pain follows.

2 A super-elastic band assists and strengthens weakened muscles, replaces bones. Pain stops instantly.

Burning, aching, tired feeling in the feet and legs—cramps in toes, foot callases, pains in toes, instep, ball or heel—dull ache in the ankle, calf or knee—shooting pains from back of toes, spreading of the feet, or that broken-down feeling—all can now be quickly ended

SCIENCE says 94% of all foot pains result from weakened muscles that permit the foot bones to become displaced and press against sensitive nerves and blood vessels. Now a way is discovered to strengthen these muscles while holding the bones in position. Pains stop in 10 minutes when this amazing band, the Jung Arch Brace, is used. Stand, walk, or dance for hours—you just don't get tired. Just slips on—results are almost immediate. One of the secrets is in the tension and stretch. It is highly elastic and amazingly light and thin, yet strong and durable. An exceedingly soft sponge rubber lift is provided and urgently advised for severe cases. Worn with any style footwear. There is nothing stiff to further weaken muscles or cause discomfort.

Pain stops like magic. Soon band may be discarded and feet are well to stay. Nearly 2,000,000 now in use. Specialists, amazed at results, urge it widely.

Wear it 10 days; if not delighted, your money returned. Go to druggist, shoe store or chiropodist. If they can't supply you use coupon below and pay postman. Write for free book on foot troubles.

JUNG'S ARCH BRACES

GROW—

Yes, Grow Eyelashes and Eyebrows like this in 30 days

THE most marvelous discovery has been made—a way to make eyelashes and eyebrows actually grow. Now if you want long, curling, silken lashes, you can have them—and beautiful, wonderful eyebrows.

I say to you in plain English that no matter how scant the eyelashes and eyebrows, I will increase their length and thickness in 30 days—or not accept a single penny. No "ifs," "ands," or "maybes." It is new growth, startling results, or no pay. And you are the sole judge.

Proved Beyond the Shadow of a Doubt

Over ten thousand women have tried my amazing discovery, proved that eyes can now be fringed with long, curling natural lashes, and the eyebrows made intense, strong silken lines! Read what a few of them say. I have made oath before a notary public that these letters are voluntary and genuine. From Mlle. Heffleffinger, 240 W. "B" St., Carlisle, Pa.: "I certainly am delighted . . . I notice the greatest difference . . . people I come in contact with remark how long and silky my eyelashes appear." From Naomi Otstot, 5437 Westminster Ave., W. Phila., Pa.: "I am greatly pleased. My eyebrows and lashes are beautiful now." From Frances Raviart, R. D. No. 2, Box 179, Jeanette, Penn.: "Your eyelash and eyebrow beautifier is simply marvelous." From Pearl Provo, 2954 Taylor St., N. E., Minneapolis, Minn.: "I have been using your eyebrow and eyelash Method. It is surely wonderful." From Miss Flora J. Corriveau, 8 Pinette Ave., Biddeford, Me.: "I am more than pleased with your Method. My eyelashes are growing long and luxurious."

Results Noticeable in a Week

In one week—sometimes in a day or two—you notice the effect. The eyelashes become more beautiful—like a silken fringe. The darling little upward curl shows itself. The eyebrows become sleek and tractable—with a noticeable appearance of growth and thickness. You will have the thrill of a lifetime—know that you can have eyelashes and eyebrows as beautiful as any you ever saw.

Remember . . . in 30 days I guarantee results that will not only delight, but amaze. If you are not absolutely and entirely satisfied, your money will be returned promptly. I mean just that—no quibble, no strings. Introductory price $1.95. Later the price will be regularly $5.00.

AND speaking of crews—what with the day work and the night work that seems necessary to keep the soundproof stages going twenty-four hours per diem and get the pesky talking pictures made—you can expect anything untoward any time from the help, and you can't do anything about it! For instance, the poor, sleepy "grip's" five-thousand-dollar snore at M-G-M that broke up Norma Shearer's thrilling plea in The Trial of Mary Dugan.

About four in the afternoon his weary head sagged forward in slumber, followed by a nasal drone stertorous as a motor. Low at first and audible only to the mike, it grew in volume till its sturdy contra-bass pronounced "Blah! Blah! Blah!" to Norma's longest and most thrilling speech, ruining several hundred feet of sequence and adjourning the session summarily for the day. Nor was there any punishment for this contempt of court.

The more one studies this canning of talk, song and instrumentation, the more fantastically and almost incredibly the figures mount up. An auditor of one of the companies said:

"With so many royalties to pay, it's difficult to keep track of 'em—royalties for production rights, publishers' royalties for performing songs and pieces, sound equipment royalties, and whatnot. For instance, the music publishers assess a charge of two cents per theatre chair per year for the playing of a copyright. Warner Brothers find it cheaper to buy and publish songs, for the sum total of the sittings of the world's theatres is admittedly staggering.

"The makers of the sound equipment won't sell, but rent it out on a royalty basis, with a minimum yearly charge of $100,000 to each studio. And yet the expense has just begun, for the soundproof housings are just as stoutly built as storage warehouses, with four-foot doors and many thicknesses of sound-deadening material. The cameras are proofed within booths, and even the scene screens are deadened by a special construction of masonite and balsam wool.

"Improvements go ahead so fast that the sound studio owner must get his money back quick, which he does by charging a little matter of $2,500 a day for the use of the facilities.

"On part talkies it costs about $25,000 to add dialogue to a silent picture; ditto for an elaborate synchronization, while $7,500 will add sound to a news reel. Our first all-talking picture cost us $150,000, of which we expended $80,000 on the movie and $70,000 on the 'talk.'"

BUT let us suppose that the producer wants to do something really big, when his first thought, naturally, is of canning a stage hit. Darryl Zanuck states that Warners paid $150,000 just for The Desert Song production rights, and payments of $50,000 to $100,000 are not infrequent. Do you happen to know (as Mr. Zanuck also informs me) that such stage script has to be rewritten, likely, four or five times, using scenarists, dialogue writers, musical and dramatic planners, months of preparation, and thousands of dollars more for these high-priced scribblers?

Here's the place to put in a few well-chosen words about the musicians. We can all remember when the theatre players were better versed in art than in dollars, but the singing-and-dancing talkie is the musicians' heyday; some are purchasing Beverly Hills palaces, and others are buying astrakhans and Rolls-Royces.

Back of them is an expensive staff that includes director, librarian, scorers, recorders, and clerks. How different from the old-fashioned movie where the only "score" provided was a penny cue sheet! Now every bar of the music is recorded with full orchestra, either with the players on the sets, or synchronized afterwards.

THE craze for stage stars is in full swing. To quote the Warner executive again: "The cast demands are practically all-stellar. Pretty face and figure, or a presentable type, used to be able to get by in minor roles, but now we've got to have real actors with voices. It involves much greater responsibility for the minor players, and even the bits must be acted with an excellence not required in old-time movies.

"It takes four months to prepare a major production," avers Zanuck, "six to twelve weeks to make it, and then weeks of editing, duping, putting on master records and scoring. I am today laying out pictures to start four months from now. The amount of labor is far in excess of anything heretofore attempted. Overhead on a talkie extends for a period of time ranging from six months to one year, and each of the pictures on our new program is budgeted at an expense of $300,000 to $350,000."

How long will the high-priced talking last? Clearly not forever. A new camera is patented to take vision and sound in the one instrument, and a new silent camera is likewise in the works, simplifying cumbrous equipment. Producers are also finding that talking's too expensive when dialogue usurps "business" and action, and the old intimacy and quickness of the movie is lost. Perhaps television is what the basic companies are really after. Then the "talk-vision" can go right into the home, and the theatre be reserved for the grandiose spectacle of beauty we all occasionally crave.

Norma Talmadge and dozens of other picture folk have money invested in the new resort, Agua Caliente, just across the Mexican border near Tia Juana. The value of the stock has trebled in six months. Incidentally Tia Juana means "Aunt Jane" and Agua Caliente is Spanish for "Hot Water." Nobody drinks it there, however.

Spring Style Revue

This is one of the most positive proofs that waistlines are gradually getting back to normal. There have long been indications of this—for example, even on the very long-waisted evening gowns tight, amusing little belts have been placed snugly around the natural waistline. Decoration has emphasized the natural waistline, too. At last, it seems to have arrived. Now that girls are supposed to have shapes, the hips are narrower.

BY FAR the most popular material for spring and summer is any kind of printed fabric; but the designs are noticeably smaller this year than last, and the coats or trimming are more often of darker shades than the body of the outfit. Two- and three-piece ensembles of printed silk are to be found in every well-planned wardrobe this season; but if you would be even more up-to-date, you should have a little outfit of printed linen, fancy gingham, or bright, old-fashioned calico! While silks of all kinds, especially chiffon and georgette, are to be used extensively, this is a season when, for the first time in years, cotton is to be worn with equal swank! Perhaps the newest one-color cotton fabrics this spring is pique, which many of us remember from our little-girl days! You will see it in suits, in dresses, and in sports coats this spring. For dressier occasions the silk pique is generally worn.

Bright colors continue to delight the eye, though one famous French designer is quoted as having said, "Any color will be fashionable this year—provided it is beige." Fortunately, this is a shade that is not only wonderfully practical, but is becoming to almost everyone—blonde, brunette and redhead alike. An ideal shade for office wear, it is now the smartest shade possible for evening. One of the prettiest afternoon frocks I have seen Estelle Taylor wear was of beige satin crepe, very simply made, and trimmed with a yoke and quaintly tied cuffs of exquisite beige lace. A gorgeous sparkling rhinestone pin on the shoulder was the only note of contrast.

THOSE who look well in yellow will be happy to know that it is one of the most popular light shades of the season, with special emphasis on lemon, honey, and orange tints. Chartreuse is another highly fashionable new shade this year. Black, often accented by some vivid color such as red, is unusually attractive now; while Paris decrees that every woman should have in her wardrobe one white sleeveless dress, a white felt hat, and white and tan sport shoes. With this outfit she can combine any number of gay sweaters, cardigans, or scarfs. This is an extremely practical suggestion for the girl who cannot afford many clothes; for different accessories completely change a familiar foundation outfit.

Colored shoes to match your costume are almost a necessity to the attractively dressed girl this season. For evening, old-gold satin is the very newest thing—and practical, too, as it does not tarnish like the lamé or kid pumps. Evening bags to match the slippers help carry out the ensemble idea that is fashion's latest decree.

Stockingless legs are to be looked on with approval this summer, both for daytime and evening. Stockings, when worn, are darker than those of last year, with special emphasis on gun metal, sand, and autumn leaf—a lovely shade of reddish brown. For evening, nude and all pinkish shades will continue to be smart.

Now, here's news! Not only are most of the sports costumes going to be sleeveless this season, but neckless as well! The girl who has deplored the fact that an evening gown betrayed a very brown neck and lily-white back will find this embarrassment eliminated. Tennis frocks will be as low as your evening gowns, while bathing suits will be even lower! And since sports skirts—those actually and practically worn for tennis and golf—are short, it is now considered very smart to have matching knickers! In fact, just copy your baby sister's pantie-frocks, and you'll be sitting right on top of the fashion world!

Never since the days of bustles have backs been so decorative. Many of the very newest daytime frocks have buttons set closely together from neck to hem! As an added note of smartness, they are often left unbuttoned! Bows no longer are concentrated on the side front, but on the side back of the latest Paris and Hollywood evening gowns.

Lingerie this year is more simple than ever before. Generally speaking, it follows the natural line of the figure. The little bandeau sets are attractive and practical, while gay, printed georgette is used repeatedly in the new summer "shorts." Teddies are considered as obsolete as starched petticoats, and are about as formless. Lingerie is gradually eliminating lace, and is coming to depend on chic bits of drawn work and similar tailored touches for decoration.

In planning your new wardrobe, it is wise to remember that only girls of pronounced individuality should try pronounced effects. Eccentricities in dress are very apt to suggest sophistication that is not always pleasing to a particular personality. Although costumes should be feminine, they should never be fussy. The practical, though beautiful, invariably wins over the beautiful, though not practical.

With these suggestions, SCREEN SECRETS readers may choose their spring and summer wardrobes with confidence, knowing that these hints represent compactly the best efforts of Paris and Hollywood designers.

Protection from perspiration should be a matter of concern to everybody

Frankly, this subject may just as well be discussed without mincing words. Perspiration is natural—as natural as breathing. But excessive perspiration, such as is not unusual under-arms can be diverted to other parts of the body where it more readily evaporates. HECK will do this! HECK destroys odor! Crystal-clear, no color to stain clothing. Safe to use—easy to use. For perspiration annoyance and discomfort use HECK regularly. Men use it, too!

and NEW HUDSON COACH!

Find The Key That Opens The Treasure Chest

Many people have become wealthy almost overnight by the discovery of hidden treasures. Here is an opportunity for you to experience the thrills of a treasure hunt and receive $2,000.00 in CASH and a brand new HUDSON COACH. All you need is a sharp eye to discover the right key which may lead you to the treasure of $2,000.00 in CASH and also a brand new HUDSON COACH for promptness.

15 Other Cash Prizes

There are hundreds of dollars in these other cash prizes besides the $2,000.00 CASH first prize and the new HUDSON COACH for promptness. In addition, if you take an active part in this contest, you will receive $1.25 worth of our products FREE. If your eyes are sharp enough, you may win the $2,000 CASH first prize and the new HUDSON COACH, too, for promptness, if on time—or if you prefer, $3,400 in all.

Here is a treasure chest and ten keys, one of which will open the lock. Find the right key and find it quick. Make the $2,000.00 yours and get the HUDSON COACH, too, for promptness. There's too much at stake for you to delay a minute. These keys are all the same size and apparently are exactly alike. If your eyes are sharp and you look closely you may find a key different from the other nine. The top, the bottom, the shaft, the notches or anything else is likely to be the point of difference. If you find the right key, it may mean $2,000.00 in CASH to you.

Auto Goes for Promptness Winner Gets CASH and AUTO BOTH

I Knew I'd Forget Something!

As usual, I'd packed in a hurry. It was just a week-end trip with my husband, and there wasn't much room for those accessories of the toilet which every modern woman possesses for the practice of feminine hygiene.

Fortunately, I had a box of Dr. H. H. Warner's feminine cones with me, ready to supply instantly, without inconvenience, all the requirements of the most fastidious for cleanliness and prevention of infection.

You, too, can avoid embarrassment and discomfort by providing yourself with a box of Dr. H. H. Warner's celebrated cones. Sent in a plain wrapper, prepaid, these cones come fifteen in a box—a very generous supply. The price is $1 a box, or three boxes for $2.50, with full instructions for their use.

FREE Dr. H. H. Warner's booklet giving details, advice, prices, etc., of the many necessities to the personal hygiene of women and girls. Sent FREE upon request.

They're Funny That Way

caged. Margaret Seddon always removes the labels from her luggage after travelling; and Eleanor Boardman Vidor refuses to permit any pictures of her small daughter, Antonia, aged three, to be printed.

Lucille Webster Gleason won't inhabit a dressing room unless it has red in its color scheme, because that shade gives her luck; and Robert Armstrong cannot go to sleep at night unless he has read a chapter from the latest detective story. George O'Brien aways hangs a sign reading, "Mr. O'Brien is not in" on his dressing room door when he is occupying it, and when he leaves his sanctuary he removes the sign. Sally Blane, a 1929 Wampas Baby Star, is a rabid collector of costume jewelry and has a set for each frock; while Betty Compson collects ivory, jade, bronze, brass and porcelain elephants. She has over two hundred of them.

NICK STUART carried a locket containing pictures of his mother and Sue Carol with him to Europe, and grew panicky when flying over Mount Vesuvius when he discovered he had forgotten it. Marian Nixon has a regiment of dolls dressed in male attire; and Mary Philbin makes a specialty of collecting china dolls. Lois Moran has all of her meals served on a tray, because, she says, it is more informal; and June Collyer refuses to accept any money from her parents, preferring to make her own way in this grey world of ours. Mary Duncan will not move into her new dressing room on the Fox lot and retains the old one which has brought her good luck; and that's the way things are with Mary Brian at the Paramount hoop-la ground.

Chester Conklin has an aversion to old houses and dull woodwork. His new house is a splendid example of varnish and the polisher's craft; and Paul Page, who plays in Speakeasy for Mr. William Fox, has carried the left hind foot of a rabbit in his trunk for the last five years. He's from the South, but we needn't tell you that. Mal St. Clair, Harold Lloyd's megaphonist, six feet four and gleeful, drives a tiny French car so small that people ask if he winds or fills it. And Jack Mulhall breaks golf clubs, but don't dare ask him how it happens.

Esther Ralston has never worn a yellow dress. It's an old stage superstition. Once a yellow chiffon was designed for her, but she solved that one. When it came time to present herself in it to the director, for his approval, she stood slouched like a pretzel, with the result that a new dress was instantly ordered. Its color was poudre blue.

Eccentricities? Dearie, you haven't heard the half of them. But we won't go on. We're just that eccentric.

Nancy Carroll and James Hall worked together in Shubert musical shows in New York before they both came to the Paramount lot.

GETTING PERSONAL

Intimate items about the stars not to be found elsewhere.

Doris Dawson owns the first new Ford town car to be seen in Hollywood with its chauffeur's seat, chauffeur and other limousine luxuries.

Constance Talmadge often wears yellow roses, her favorite flowers.

Colleen Moore's secretary, Mrs. John Colville, has recently wed and has left Hollywood to join her husband in South America. As her last official act, she opened Colleen's millionth fan letter.

Ruth Elder

Calories and contracts do not go hand in hand in Hollywood. The younger players among the girls have formed a Luncheon Club and each brings a new non-fattening recipe at each meeting. Carol Lombard and Jeanette Loff are among the members.

Colleen Moore is becoming expert on skis since she visited Yosemite Valley this winter.

Dolores Del Rio likes to play ping pong and parchesi instead of bridge.

Thousands of telegrams of congratulations were received by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures, on the occasion of his recent birthday.

Mary Brian states emphatically that she is going to stay single until she leaves the screen.

Dolores Del Rio wears a flesh colored chiffon evening gown embroidered with twenty-two pounds of tiny white beads.

Adolphe Menjou addressed the National Convention of Tailors—the men who made him what he is today.

Hoot Gibson has just bought a white Rolls-Royce sedan with a special body. Some pony—yes?

Doris Hill is letting her red hair grow long.

Grant Withers has been taking whistling lessons in preparation for The Time, The Place and the Girl, his latest picture.

Baclanova wears black glasses in the daytime to protect her eyes from the California sun.

A new Los Angeles airplane will be named in honor of Mary Brian.

Estelle Taylor is wearing a most becoming new chinchilla coat.

The only motion picture director who is also a physician is Dr. Paul Fejos of Universal. He is a graduate of the Royal Hungarian University of Budapest and spent three years at Rockefeller Institute.

Dolores Del Rio was hostess at the National Orange Show at San Bernardino, California, recently.

June Marlowe is being entertained by prominent German families. She is in Berlin playing in The Foreign Legion for Universal.

The Adolphe Menjous (Katherine Carver) and the Maurice Chevaliers often play bridge together.

Joan Crawford's delicate French heeled dancing pumps have tiny rubber caulks like those on golf shoes to prevent her slipping on a highly polished floor.

Doris Dawson

Devout church goers mistook Alec Francis for a priest as he walked about the historical mission at Monterey, California, where Evangeline is being filmed.

William Powell seldom smiles, but he wore a broad grin lately when he started off on a vacation.

Ethlyn Claire, 1929 Wampas star, has a delightful Southern drawl which is going to register interestingly in the talkies.

My sole aim, during the year 1929, shall be to place as many standard, dependable Watches as I can in the hands of men throughout the land REGARDLESS OF PRICE OR PROFIT. To do this I have cut the price to ABSOLUTELY ROCK BOTTOM. I know that if I can distribute 5,000 "Santa Fe Specials" this year on this NO-PROFIT PLAN, that every Watch will be a salesman and sell at least one more. I am making this STARTLING AND UNHEARD OF OFFER to those who will tell their friends of this remarkable Watch value, if they find the Watches all and more than I claim for them.

Haven't you often wished that you could draw cartoons, illustrate some idea, sketch some pretty face, etc.? You can do all of these things. One of America's most famous Cartoonists and Illustrators has developed a great, simple, system for success in all branches of Commercial Art. This system has revolutionized the entire theory of drawing. It means that drawing can be as easy for you as writing—much simpler than learning shorthand, bookkeeping or typewriting. We are now placing this original system for learning Drawing, Art and Cartooning, consisting of 34 lessons with over 500 illustrations, within reach of every one. If you will devote a few hours each week to the Course, WE ABSOLUTELY GUARANTEE that you will learn to draw and draw well before you have half finished the Course. If we fail to make this claim good, we will refund every cent paid us. By eliminating a large office force for answering correspondence, expensive catalogs, etc., we are enabled to make a price of $2.98, the cheapest price ever known for a high-grade home study course. Many have sent us letters similar to that of Robt. P. Davis, of Detroit, who wrote: "I can't see how you ask so little, when others with inferior Courses get from $20 to $60 for theirs. It is more than I expected." Learn to draw. It is a big asset, no matter what field you are in.

RED-HEADS, blondes, brunettes and brown-haired types—how will they make up in 1929?

This momentous question—really almost as important as being selected a Wampas Baby Star—was decided definitely on the First National lot by the Wampas stars of 1929 and Max Factor, Hollywood's King of Make-up.

The roll was called—and how! "Redheads," megaphoned the director. And five of the baby stars—Doris Dawson, Ethlyn Clair, Doris Hill, Caryl Lincoln and Betty Boyd—left the ranks to discuss their own individual charms and color harmony in make-up with Max Factor.

"Blondes," the director cried, and four of the thirteen—Helen Foster, Anita Page, Helen Twelvetrees, and Josephine Dunn—stepped out to talk with Max Factor on make-up color harmony for blondes with blue eyes, blondes with gray eyes, and even bondes with brown eyes.

"Now the brown-haired types"—and Loretta Young, Sally Blane, Jean Arthur and Mona Rico came forth to check up on the exact make-up color harmony to blend with the subtle variations of complexion that give every woman, whatever her type, a distinctive charm and individuality.

"All right, now, brunettes."

"BRUNETTES! BRUNETTES!"

No one stepped forward.

"Not a brunette in thirteen. What's the answer to that, Mr. Factor?"

"You'll have to wait a minute 'til I make up an answer," replied Max Factor.

"And what else did you learn?"

"That the breaks come in the most unexpected way and from the most unexpected places."

"Yes? And—as for instance . . ."

"Well, for instance, you would never think of going to a dinner party and watching a negro butler dance a jig as a turning point in your career as an emotional actress, would you?"

"It would not occur to me right off the reel if I were an emotional actress."

"That's what happened to me," said Bessie.

"It was one of the periods when I was broke," said Bessie. "It was one of those periods when I couldn't seem to get started in any direction. I had missed out, through a sad fluke, from the one great ambition of my life which was to play Peter Pan. The part went to another girl.

"I didn't know which way to turn.

"For what reason I can't tell you—for I don't know—I had turned to New York. After I got there, there didn't seem to be much more doing there than in Hollywood. I was pretty thoroughly discouraged.

"One night I was invited to dinner at the home of Dick Rowland, then one of the chiefs of First National. Mrs. Rowland and I had been friends for a long time. During the dinner the subject happened to turn to dancing. I had heard of the Charleston which was just starting its wild career. I had heard of the dance; but had never seen it.

"Mrs. Rowland said they had a negro butler who could dance it like a star. I said I would like to see him do it; and she sent for him and asked him if he would dance it for us.

"He cleared out a place in the middle of the floor; they turned on the phonograph and then and there I was introduced to the Charleston which was to be a life saver for me.

"That colored man was a wonder. I have never seen any one who could dance it so well. I was fascinated. I had always danced like any other girl. But had never thought of dancing professionally.

"Just for fun, I asked him if he wouldn't show me how. So I got up there in the Rowland's drawing room and had my first Charleston lesson. I had it from a master foot—a master knee I might say; for it is all in the knees.

"It was so difficult and so baffling that I kept on practicing when I got home and finally I could do it pretty well. Somehow or other, I got to doing it in pictures. Presently parts came to me which consisted mainly in doing the Charleston.

"Then, one day not long ago, I got a part in this picture, The Broadway Melody. The part grew and grew until it grew into a peach of a long term contract.

Hidden ills are the most to be feared

Foes to our health stalk everywhere, yet alert men and women need not fear those ills that give warning, for modern science has perfected many a safeguard.

At the first warning of pain, do not be satisfied with superficial remedies! Gastric pains, dizziness, lack of energy, and indigestion, may be the danger signals of active stomach ulcers—one of the most dangerous of ailments because it is hidden.

For more than a generation, Dr. H. H. Warner, with his chemists and medical staff, have been perfecting a remedy for this disease, and now Dr. Warner's Stu-Mak Remedy is accepted everywhere as a harmless, healing panacea for this all too common trouble. If you suspect the presence of this ill, which may so easily become malignant, send for a trial box. The price is $2.00, or three boxes for $5.00.

"Thanks to a colored boy with limber knees who danced for me in the middle of a drawing room with the rugs pulled back, I seem to be on Easy Street again."

"That was what you learned about getting the breaks; what else did you learn?"

"I learned about money."

"What did you learn about money?"

"I learned that in Hollywood, money doesn't speak that same language that it does in the outside world."

"And what do you mean by that?"

"It is something that is very hard to explain. Only one who has been through my experience can realize exactly what I mean.

"But it is this: Hollywood is such a kind of fairyland that you don't think in terms of money. You think in terms of what you want. When you are getting money here, you get so much and get it so rapidly that it just doesn't seem like money. You find yourself with a sort of an Aladdin's lamp which you only have to rub to bring you things.

"In Hollywood you are so out of touch with the world of money and finance and commerce that money assumes an unreal character. All the people with whom you come in contact are pretending. That is their business and their life. And so money takes on a character of pretense, too. It just seems to come from nowhere.

"You know in an indefinite sort of way that the scenes you are acting have to go into pictures and you know vaguely that somebody has to buy those pictures and that the money you get on pay day must come in some manner from the sale of those pictures.

"But all of this is hidden from you by the studio fence.

"I used to own a big dairy up in the pasture country near Bakersfield. There I came in close contact with the money. I knew what it cost to feed the stock and where the milk was sold. This money was real because I had to reach out for it and struggle for it.

"The money that comes to you in a studio on pay day is more like Christmas morning. You don't know where it came from; who made it or how. The man on the other side of the little window just gives you a handsome hand-out once a week."

"Is that the reason they waste it?"

"That is just the reason they waste it.

"To men of affairs out in the world, money is money. They respect it; understand it. Money in the movies isn't actual or real. It is just a fairy lamp.

"But sometimes—as you have discovered—you rub the fairy lamp and nothing happens, except the brass gets a polish," I suggested.

"Sometimes the fairies loaf on the job," said Bessie.

Madge Bellamy Tells the Painful Truth

ing to do with the story—he was one of the few people I have ever known who appeared to be perfectly happy. He has never lost the zest and sympathy of youth."

"Yeh; that's great for Daniel, but that doesn't explain Madge Bellamy."

"Yes, it does explain Madge Bellamy; and—again incidentally—I happen to be the one who is telling this story.

"Well, Mr. Frohman talked to me and offered me a part in one of his stage productions—a real speaking part.

"He worked with me and helped me in many ways.

"Then an opportunity came to go into the movies. Mr. Frohman suggested that it offered great things for me; but he had misgivings. He said that I was not pretty enough for the screen. I dare say he was right.

"Not to put myself into the Woodrow Wilson class—but I fear I have a single track mind. When I went into pictures the one thing that ran through my mind was a whisper that kept saying to me: 'You are not beautiful enough for the screen; you must make yourself beautiful.'

IN THOSE early days when you knew me on the old Ince lot, my one thought was to make myself beautiful. When I came on the sets, I was—just as you say—thinking about being beautiful rather than about the part.

"Well, gosh—you did it," I said candidly. "How did you do it?"

"If I am really beautiful—as you say—it was just due to the fact that I thought myself into being beautiful."

"Yes; but that wasn't all," I insisted. "You were terribly hard to handle. Directors couldn't do anything with you. You were the hardest dame to handle in all Hollywood. Either you were crying—or the director was crying most of the time."

"That was another error of thought."

"How so?"

"It really wasn't so much an error of actual thought; it was a matter of upbringing. It is very hard for a girl brought up in the South as I had been to be so ordered; to be told to stand up while they looked her over like a horse."

"In other words you were too much of a lady."

"No; let's go on being frank with each other."

"Another reason why I couldn't seem to fit into the scheme of things was that I couldn't let myself go. I was always self-conscious.

"But you had been on the stage."

"It is different on the stage. The audience in front of you is a vast impersonal thing. But on a set, you are conscious of the personalities of about ten different persons—and all critical persons."

WHAT else troubled you?"

"I made one big fundamental mistake. I thought the way to conquer what was ailing me was through the intellect. I tried to make myself a better actress by developing my mind. My father had been a professor in a university; he helped me—in the wrong way.

"One time I read that a great boxer—I think it was Jack Johnson—did not think what to do; he saw what to do. That is like acting.

"Whenever you begin thinking what to do, you lose the real stuff. It becomes a matter of mechanics."

"And when you found out?"

"The hardest thing in life is to turn off your brain and turn on your heart."

"And it wasn't cutting your hair?"

"I think it was more gradual. It was not until I stopped worrying about my parts, stopped trying so hard, that I became what you call sincere. I never succeeded in breaking down the barriers that you say you felt between us. I just ceased to notice them.

"For instance the reason I can talk to you so frankly is that I have known you so long that I am no longer thinking about you; I am thinking of what we are saying."

SOMEHOW the talk turned to more serious matters. Madge said she wished that she could have her horoscope read. She said that no one can help having a feeling that there come into each life currents that are adverse and again currents that are favorable. Just so gamblers have a saying that it is no use to fight your luck. If the cards aren't coming your way, stop for a while.

Anyhow, she said, she thought it would be valuable mental discipline to be warned that an unfavorable time was coming—and to brace your soul for the shock.

And so it happened that we started for the beach—to see my friend, Nina Zipfel, a highbrow young lady who majored in psychology in a university and now has a fad for reading horoscopes. With most astonishing success.

Madge said we should go in her car; so we went sailing off in her traveling boudoir. And, after Nina's, finally wound up in Madge's beach house where her mother was having a being-alone time for a week or so.

SHE wouldn't tell me what the stars said, but Nina seemed to be duly excited over what she found in the mathematical charts which are the basis of astrology.

But going home in the rain, we trundled along for a long time in silence. Then Madge said:

"She told me that my best years as an actress are to come. That I will make money without end; but that I will never find a real love that satisfies my soul."

"Perhaps a young man will never come along with brains enough and sympathetic understanding enough to find the real Madge Bellamy behind the beautiful actress," I said.

"I wonder," said Madge.

EARLE LIEDERMAN—The Muscle Builder
Author of "Muscle Building," "Science of Wrestling," "Secrets of Strength," "Here's Health," etc.

Muscles 5¢ apiece!

Wouldn't it be great if we could buy muscles by the bag—take them home and paste them on our shoulders? Then our rich friends with money to buy them, sure would be socking us all over the lots.

But they don't come that easy, fellows. If you want muscle you have to work for it. That's the reason why the lazy fellow never can hope to be strong. So if you're lazy and don't want to work—you had better quit right here. This talk was never meant for you.

I Want Live Ones

I've been making big men out of little ones for over fifteen years. I've made pretty near as many strong men as Heinz has made pickles. My system never fails. That's why I guarantee my works to do the trick. That's why they gave me the name of "The Muscle Builder." I have the surest bet that you ever heard of.

What I'm Going to Do

In just 30 days I'm going to increase your arm one full inch. Yes, and add two inches to your chest in the same length of time. But that's nothing. I've only started; get this—I'm going to put knobs of muscle on your shoulders like baseballs. I'm going to deepen your chest so that you will double your lung capacity. Each breath you take will flood every crevice of your pulmonary cavity with oxygen. This will load your blood with red corpuscles, shooting life and vitality throughout your entire system. I'm going to give you arms and legs like pillars. I'm going to work on every inner muscle as well, toning up your liver, your heart, etc. You'll have a snap to your step and a flash to your eye. You'll feel the real pep shooting up and down your old backbone. You'll stretch out your big brawny arms and crave for a chance to crush everything before you. You'll just bubble over with vim and animation.

Sound pretty good, what? You can bet your old ukulele it's good. It's wonderful. And don't forget, fellow—I'm not just promising all this—I guarantee it. Well, let's get busy, I want some action—so do you.

Love Lingo of Joan and Doug, Jr.

"But look at Dodo" she patted his face with tender fingers. "He's gained twenty pounds in five months. Isn't that marvelous? And all because I insist on at least half a pound of butter a day and lots of certified milk and potatoes."

Blue eyes drowned in blue eyes . . . . another long embrace . . . .

When they emerged, they both took turns explaining why they didn't mind who understood their secret language now. Doug, who lived in Paris three years and speaks French like a native, is teaching his beloved and soon they expect to combine their "op" with French to everyone's confusion.

A WAITRESS from the other room came in and whispered to Joan.

"Opi wopill bope bopack opin opa mopinopute," jabbered the pretty actress, fluttering in the wake of the messenger.

This was too fast for me so while we waited Doug translated her remark into a simple "I'll be back in a minute."

Upon her return, Joan told us that some fans from a distant city had begged for a glimpse of her.

"A mother and daughter—" she began.

"How old is the little girl?" interrupted Doug.

"Oh, 'bout twenty-three. She particularly wanted to see me because she wanted me to meet her new husband. Wasn't that sweet? I told her she was lucky," sighed Joan.

"Why?" languished Dodo.

"Opi lopove yopou," murmured his lady love.

"Opi lopove yopou, topoo," cooed he.

Of such is the language of love . . .

PROMINENT among recent social events was the dinner dance at the Breakfast Club given by Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Willat (Billie Dove). The two engaged couples—Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon, May McAvoy and Maurice Cleary,—were the butt of a gay little joke fostered by Estelle Taylor and Marion Davies. These two pretty plotters arranged with the male guests to separate the lovers every time they tried to dance together. Tom Mix, Johnny Hines and Harry Crocker entered into the game with great zest, but Grant Withers was so interested in securing dances with blonde Claire Windsor that he hadn't any other time.

The other merry-makers were Rod La Rocque and his lovely wife, Vilma Banky, Louise Fazenda with her handsome husband Hal Willis, the Jack Warners and Ray Rocketts, Mr. and Mrs. Jack White (Pauline Starke), Clara Bow, Lya de Putti, and others.

DRAMA

THE DOCTOR'S SECRET—The doctor speaks his mind, but he doesn't tell the half of it—luckily for Ruth Chatterton. One of the best talkies so far.—Paramount.

IN OLD ARIZONA—Edmund Lowe, Warner Baxter and Dorothy Burgess in a snorting melodrama of the old West. You'll jump when you hear those pistol shots. The first outdoor talkie.—Fox.

SHOPWORN ANGEL—Nancy Carroll is an angel of the chorus with a price tag. But Gary Cooper, the pure-hearted lad from the sticks, never found that out. The worst ending of the year.—Paramount.

NED MCCOBB'S DAUGHTER—The lass who loved a bootlegger. Robert Armstrong is convincing as the booze baron. Lively, fast-moving entertainment.—Pathe.

WEARY RIVER—Not a geographical picture. It's the name of a song—and Richard Barthelmess sings it for his supper. He can't down his sinf l past however. He's still a bad man with a good voice. And there's Betty Compson.—United Artists.

THE GODLESS GIRL—A sound picture making a great noise about what goes on in reform schools. With a few words thrown in about the evils of atheism. It's the De Mille Millenium in religious pictures.—Pathe-De Mille.

REDSKIN—Richard Dix is an Indian who becomes Americanized and finds no "welcome" on the door mat when he goes back to his father's tepee wearing a straw hat. It's all in color, but the story is pretty hard to believe.—Paramount.

THE DIVINE LADY—Corinne Griffith is picturesque in picture hats as Lady Hamilton, who started life as a street gamin and became the sweetheart of Lord Nelson. Some rousing battle scenes.—First National.

WEST OF ZANZIBAR—Lon Chaney up to his ears in black magic and blacker mud. Mary Nolan is delectable, though dirty-faced, as his daughter. All very grim, gruesome and grimy.—M-G-M.

ROMANCE

LADY OF THE PAVEMENTS—Lupe Velez in hoop skirts. A rollicking romance of a cabaret dancer, who learned how to please a Prince. Jetta Goudal is poisonously pretty as the feminine menace.—United Artists.

DREAM OF LOVE—Joan Crawford and Nils Asther in a royal romance. Nils is a Prince with modern ideas that are slightly cramped by royal traditions. Joan is a gypsy at heart—and what a heart!—M-G-M.

NAUGHTY BABY—"Alice White" is what the wild waves say when they wash away her bathing suit in this. There's no denying that she's naughty, but oh, how nice! Clever comedy with lots of lingerie.—First National.

THE RESCUE—Ronald Colman is a fearless sea-faring man and Lily Damita, the lady who gums the works for him in this picture version of Conrad's famous novel. The action is a little slow.—United Artists.

A LADY OF CHANCE—They call Norma Shearer Angel Face, but you'll wonder why after you see the tricks she's up to. Johnny Mack Brown is the victim of her wiles who leads her into better ways.—M-G-M.

THE REDEEMING SIN—One good sin deserves another, says Dolores Costello, who is an unsullied rose of the Paris underworld, as she playfully pushes her aristocratic sweetheart into a nearby sewer. A strong favorite for the worst picture of the year.—Warner Bros.

CHINATOWN NIGHTS—More excitement in Chinatown than you'll ever see from a sight-seeing bus. Wallace Beery is a bass-voiced political boss and Florence Vidor, a blue-blood in search of adventure. She finds it.—Paramount.

ANNAPOLIS—The Rover boys join the navy. Lots of good, clean, school spirit and familiar hokum in this one. Not much except for the beauty of Jeannette Loff, and the settings.—Pathe.

A WOMAN OF AFFAIRS—Greta Garbo and John Gilbert in The Green Hat dyed another color to suit Mr. Hays. Very sophisticated and ultra, but slow-moving with all.—M-G-M.

HIS CAPTIVE WOMAN—Milton Sills is a cop and Dorothy Mackaill, the girl he is seeking. All about what happens when he catches up with her on a desert island. Just what you might expect from a desert island picture.—First National.

OUTCAST—Corinne Griffith is a girl of the streets who gets uplifted by Edmund Lowe and does a bit of uplifting on her own, just to show her appreciation.—First National.

COMEDY

WHY BE GOOD?—Colleen Moore is still making whoopee as a flapper who is not quite good enough to be true—to any one man. But after you see her you'll agree with the title.—First National.

THE GHOST TALKS—Farce comedy of the familiar stage type with bandits and detectives popping in and out of corners and predicaments. Introducing a popular newcomer—Helen Twelvetrees.—Fox.

MARQUIS PREFERRED—Adolphe Menjou in a picture of the familiar Menjou pattern and patter. Lacks the dash and sparkle of the old-time Menjou comedies.—Paramount.

ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE—Bill Haines resurrects the famous wise-cracking-safe cracker of stage fame for the films. Lots of good Bill Haines comedy in it.—M-G-M.

SHOW PEOPLE—Marion Davies and Bill Haines kidding themselves as movie stars. All about Hollywood as it might be if it were that way. Comedy and heartbreak skillfully mingled.—M-G-M.

Grocery Bills all Paid and $10 a Day Besides

If you want plenty of money to pay all your grocery bills—and $8 to $10 in a day besides—just send me your name and I'll show you a new, pleasant, interesting way to get it. I'll give you the same chance I gave to L. C. Van Allen, of Illinois, who reports that he averages more than $100 profit a week. You don't need any experience. Gustav Karnath, a farm laborer in Minnesota, says, "Made $20.35 the first 5 hours." Mrs. B. L. Hodges, of New York, writes, "Earning more money than ever before. Never fail to make a profit of $18 to $20 a day." And right now I am offering you the same opportunity I gave these people.

Big Profits for Easy Work

I am President of a million dollar Company. I distribute high-quality Groceries and other Household Necessities direct from factory to user through Authorized Local Representatives. My goods are known everywhere. I have more than a million customers. Last year they bought fifteen million packages of my products. This put nearly two million dollars in the pockets of my Representatives. Now I invite you to share in these profits. I need men and women everywhere to help me handle my ever-increasing business. I'll give you an exclusive territory and help you make big money from the very start.

No Capital or Experience Needed

You don't need capital, training or experience. Your own home will be your headquarters. You will be your own boss and work as you please. All you have to do is call on your friends and take care of their orders. It is easy. And I never sell to stores. You alone get the profit on all orders from your territory. Victor Baumann, of Florida, says "Made $83 clear profit first 5 days." Mrs. A. R. Roof, of S. C., says, "Made over $50 the first week I started." Get into this interesting, big-pay work yourself. YOU DON'T RISK A CENT. Keep your present job and start with me in spare time if you want to. Oscar Stuart, of W. Va., reports $18 profit in 2½ hours. I offer you the same chance I gave him and all the others who are clearing handsome profits.

SEND NO MONEY

Just send me your name—nothing else. Grasp this wonderful money-making opportunity right now. You have everything to gain—not a penny to lose. So mail the coupon. I'll send you my amazing new plan that offers plenty of money to pay all your grocery bills and $8 to $10 in a single day besides. And I will tell you how to get a newest model Ford Tudor Sedan without cost. I will give you the big opportunity you've been waiting for. Mail coupon TODAY SURE!

He Cheated-

BUT SHE KNOWS IT!

Yes, Now she knows—because the first glimpses of his handwriting revealed his real character as she had never understood it before. She saw at once he was faithless and deceitful, and she realized his charming manner and impassioned words were only a cloak for his infidelity and hypocrisy.

Would You Have Known?

Or would you have loved him and suffered agonizingly in consequence. Learn to read a person's true character in his handwriting and you will see the minds and true characters of people spread like an open book to your gaze.

Handwriting and Character

shows you how to master this remarkable science, simply and quickly. There are more than 425 examples, rules, tables, etc., which make the study easy and in only fifteen minutes you will be able to tell more about your friends than after years of intimacy, merely by watching how they cross their "t's", dot their "i's", slant their writing, etc.!

Find them out before it is too late!

The Thief,
The Liar,
The Unfaithful,
The Heartless,
The Vain.

They cannot hide from the Graphologist. Their handwriting cannot be disguised, try as they may.

Endorsements by High Authorities

The author's entire life has been devoted solely to this fascinating science. Let him show you in a few minutes how to pick out a person's true traits. This amazingly accurate work may save you years of misery, perhaps thousands of dollars and untold embarrassment, just by putting you wise to your sweetheart, employee, partner, friend or enemy before too late. The most complete and comprehensive book on the market. Was originally a $20.00 course. 368 pages, cloth-bound.

hot dog, one hamburger and one Coca-Cola. I forget to say I can talk "Coca-Cola." I give Mil-a-tone half and I have seventy-five cents left. I do not know where to go; I do not know what to do with it. I go to the door. I sees a big car with a beautiful womans go by in it. I toss my head and I say, "In one year I will have a car like that. I am in Hollywood; I am going to make good in the theatre and have everything which is nice for Lupe."

AS I stand in the door of the station I see a taxi. I runs out and says, "'otel!"

"What hotel?" he asks me.

"'otel, 'otel, 'otel . . ." I say it over and over and stamps my feet at him and then jumps in and slams the door. He takes me to the Hotel Louise. I do not know how I will pay but I am not afraid. Something will happen; something always comes up for Lupe. I get out and I runs in to what is a beautiful building. I go to a mans behind the desk and he looks at me crossways. I scream and run out and jump into the taxi. To see anyone with cross eyes is very bad luck, always. And Lupe does not want bad luck to begin in America.

"The driver, he fight with me but I scream 'otel' until he take me to the Cecil. I jump out and run in and he waits. There is a good looking man at this hotel with beautiful blue eyes. I love blue eyes. He is kind; he is sweet; he want to help me. He call someone who can talk Mexican. They telephone Richard Bennett at the theatre and he say to take care of me. So they pay the taxi and I go into a beautiful room which has a bath all to itself. I am wild with happiness because now I know everything is to be easy.

But things were not to be so easy as they looked to Lupe at the moment. There were many, many barriers yet to be hurdled, before her feet were securely planted on the road to fame. How success finally rewarded her struggles will be told in her own flashing, fascinating words in the concluding installment of her life story, appearing in the June issue of Screen Secrets, on sale May 10.

Nothing Extra

AND take the case of General Watishevla Savitsky. He was playing extra in Corinne Griffith's picture Prisoners when someone discovered that he really was not only a Russian general but Minister of War and right hand man to the Czar before the big world-fiasco. A picture of the Czar standing beside the General which chanced to fall into the hands of Miss Griffith told the story.

"My, but you were brave," she told him.

"No! That was not brave," he answered. "But this is brave. This playing an extra."

Then it was discovered that he had had five days work in five months at seven-fifty a day and had lived on it.

The chance discovery won him a contract for extra for the run of the picture. But it brought no renown with it.

De Mille Data

WHAT these press agents don't figure out in the interest of their clients. Baret Kiesling has compiled these figures for Cecil B. De Mille and his new picture Dynamite.

It's his first talkie but his fifty-fifth production.

It began fifteen years and five weeks from the day a De Mille cameraman started grinding.

Or 758 weeks from the first day of work on The Squawman.

Robert Edeson plays his twentieth De Mille role in it.

Julia Faye her fifteenth.

George Fawcett replaces Theodore Roberts as the Grand Old Man of the Movie Unit. It would have been Roberts' twenty-first De Mille picture.

Clarence Burton has played the role of an officer in fifty-four out of the fifty-five De Mille pictures.

When Janet Gaynor began work in Christina, her latest starring vehicle, a fan in Texas sent her a pair of ducks designed to fit into the Holland background of the scenes. Accompanying the ducks was the suggestion that they eventually grace the dining table in the little Fox star's home. But Janet has become so fond of the ducks that, when the picture is completed, she will give them a place of honor in her own Hollywood back yard.

Why We Are Going to Marry

It seems I have always attracted men who were weaker than myself. I do not mean weaklings. I mean men who clung to me and drained my personality, taking everything and giving nothing. I was always forced to mother them; to be mother—sister—sweetheart to them. They were of the type, that, if they enjoyed books, could see no reason why I should be interested in fencing and swimming, as well as reading. And if they were keen about sports, could see no reason why I enjoyed books and collecting antiques.

It was an eternal wearing down of my resources, my personality, with nothing in return.

As a result, part of me was forever searching for someone to depend upon, someone with self-reliance that I could anchor to, like a ship tossed in a storm.

Then came Ben, who is the most practical, self-reliant person I have ever met. He came and filled every void that had been in my life. Sometimes I feel that it must be a dream, that I must awaken, that no one could possibly be so perfect.

He is perfect in his tolerance. We have tacitly agreed, without a word, that there will be no post mortem of our past lovers. Not that we avoid mentioning the names of persons who have been dear to us—no, we mention them and discuss them, but never argue over them.

Our meeting, last November, was brought about romantically. I was having a party when someone suggested telephoning different people and pretending we were the 'phone company. We would rib them by saying we were testing service. It was about one a. m., and we had already disturbed various sleepers when someone suggested calling Ben. He was terribly peeved.

"I've had this joke played on me before," he said. "This is not the telephone company. Good-night. I have a seven o'clock call tomorrow morning."

"This is the telephone company. Your disregard is stopping service on two other lines."

With that he was all contrition, and we, dirty dogs that we were, continued:

"We believe there is some dirt in your transmitter. Will you kindly remove it and wash it?"

Some of our victims that evening had whistled (to test the 'phone) and stood in distant corners and yelled (to test the 'phone). But Ben sensed the rodent in the plot. And grew very, very furious.

The next morning he telephoned and apologized. I was giving a little dinner party that night and invited him to attend. And we went to a theatre together.

It wasn't until we met in Agua Caliente, some weeks later, that I realized how fine and real he was. I had gone with Mrs. Arthur Loew's party, and Ben was with his mother. He didn't insist that I lunch with him. He knew my presence was due my hostess. He didn't, as many men have done before, set out to make me jealous by inviting another girl to lunch with him. No, he was cordial and affable and genuine.

It was then I knew that I loved him.

I love, too, his old-fashioned characteristics—his charm and deference, all so strangely mixed with an entirely modern outlook on life. And his inherent bravery which makes him do daring things without a single gesture of bravado. Those are the things that I adore in Ben.

All my life I have visioned a man like him. Every man I have ever met I have tried to fit into the pattern that I had molded. And not one fitted. They were either too bulky or too small. They would have to be pared down or inflated. They were all disappointing. Then Ben came and I realized the pattern had been made for him.

There shall be no two-breakfasts-a-week-together arrangement when we marry. And so far we have set no definite date. He shall have his independence. I shall have mine. We shall have our careers and each other.

We shall have that precious knowledge that we can trust each other.

Why We Are Going to Marry

put it on. Neither would Bebe. It remained on earth.

We zoomed all around the sky—down to the beach to her house and dipped low around it to signal to her mother. Never once did Bebe shriek, nor was she ever frightened.

There was a perfect tribute of confidence to me. That's what a man likes. That's where Bebe is apart from most girls. With utter trust she placed her life in my hands. There was no show of words. It was concrete evidence of her faith in me.

I would never marry anyone outside of the profession. I have always said that. I find that girls who are not of the theatre are entirely removed from the intense circle in which professionals move. Bebe and I have been brought up, practically, in the theatrical world. She was born to it, and I ran away from school as soon as I was old enough, to join it.

We are both aware of what it signifies. We confront, frankly, its dangers and temptations. We are going to combat all difficulties, if any arise, with understanding and lack of jealousy.

For instance, if I am to work at night and Bebe has a dinner invitation—as she did recently—and I discover that the night call has been cancelled, I do not want her to give up her engagement. I want her to go and enjoy herself. Of course, I would rather be with her, and she with me, but we both agree that we must not become so welded as to exclude the world.

There is much else to say. Volumes have been written and volumes remain to be written. But I am not to write them. Let it suffice that Bebe and I are in love, are engaged, and are to be married. A marvelous triad in itself.

With a quick gesture, Billie threw herself across the divan where Abbott was sitting.

girl perched on the piano before him.

"Why, hello there, 'Tuck'!" he drawled humorously, as if seeing her for the first time. "How's my little girl-friend?"

Shyly, yet trying hard to remember to be sophisticated and ultra-modern, Kentucky slipped down beside Gil, momentarily forgetting Billie in her eagerness to be near the man she loved.

"You're a good kid," laughed Gil, flattered and amused. "Where've you been all my life?"

Desperately Kentucky tried to think of some snappy wise-crack such as Billie would have thrown back without a moment's hesitation; but Kentucky, hopelessly in love, was dumb. Fortunately her confusion was short, for Gil, catching a signal from Billie in a doorway across the room, struck a chord to silence the crowd, then led into a wild syncopated melody.

Billie had resolved to force Glenn Abbott into looking at her. Now as she spun across the floor in a breathtaking whirl, her flaming young body very little concealed by a wisp of bodice and a brief flare of skirt, she was rewarded by the gleam of awareness in his eyes. It was a dance of Billie's own creation, colorful and swift, ultra-modern and astonishing, calling into play every seductive curve and muscle of her passionate young body.

A CURIOUS change came over Glenn Abbott's frozen expression. Gradually his indifference yielded to the intensity of her movement. Sensing her triumph, Billie whirled toward the divan on which he had thrown himself carelessly. Several times she approached him, smiling sensuously, then lightly spun away as if to evade pursuit. Now as the music rose to a pulsing climax she whirled toward him once more and threw herself across the back of the lounge.

Abbott looked at her beautiful white body silently, stirred to the very depths of his being. Apparently unaware of his gaze, Billie lay with half closed eyes, her hair disheveled, lips parted, her breast rising and falling quickly.

Gil, watching jealously from the balcony, seized a cocktail from the piano and drained the glass thirstily. God! How lovely she was! He had promised to let Billie play Abbott for that dip-

Are You Jealous of Your Physical Superiors?

Do you look with envy and hatred upon the man who stands out in a crowd, the picture of health and vigor and strength—the real manly fellow? Do you sneer at the peppy pugilist, the powerful wrestler, the speedy runner, the graceful dancer—do you call them "big stuffs"? Beware, man, if this is your feeling towards strong, healthy men—you are filled with jealousy. You feel your weakness. In your heart you wish you were like those fellows. You want to be strong, healthy, command the attention of men and the admiration of women—you wouldn't be a man if you didn't. You know your weaknesses, even if you are hiding them from others, and envy those who are your superiors—those who seem to get the center of the stage wherever they are. They are the "life of the party" always, everywhere. They are the fellows that get all the promotions, all the good jobs.

There's No Place for Weaklings—and you needn't be a weakling, jealous or have physical superiors STRONGFORT Builder of Health—you can be strong and healthy yourself. You don't have to be ailing or complaining or be ashamed of your weakness, even though you know better than anyone else what brought you to your present condition. There's a way out of your dilemma.

STRONGFORTISM—Will Do Wonders For You!

It is through STRONGFORTISM that I reclaim wrecked and weak men, make them into new beings and give them a body and arms of which they can boast.

"Thought you could run away from me, didn't you?" murmured Gil.

lomatic post in Paris; but in spite of himself Gil resented her playing up to him, loathed the passion in Abbott's eyes as he looked at her.

Outside a sudden burst of flame pierced the darkness, and the whole world seemed ablaze with colored lights. Rockets raced skyward; showers of stars burst over the lake; the entire estate was abloom with fiery blossoms.

"The fireworks!" cried Blondie, seizing the hands of Gil and Kentucky and hurrying them toward the door, beckoning Reg to follow. The ballroom was quickly deserted. Only Billie and Abbott remained, lost in new consciousness of each other.

"You're wonderful—Billie," he whispered, leaning over her, his arms reaching out to clasp her in a strong embrace. Billie, stirred to the depths for the first time in her life by his unconcealed passion, lay breathless, unable to move. She had wanted only to pique his interest—and he had unexpectedly awakened new disturbing emotions within her.

Suddenly the lights were turned out in the room so as not to detract from the illumination outside. Billie sprang away from him, afraid to trust herself in the sheltering darkness. From the arch of an open window they stood watching the display. The lake was ablaze with bright gondolas filled with hilarious couples. The entire estate was a riot of color, flame, and excitement.

Gil grasped Kentucky's hand and ran toward the lake. Blondie mischievously caught Reg and held him back. "Kentucky's slogan is evidently not 'A safe and sane Fourth'!" she remarked meaningly, indicating that Gil, a little drunk with wine and general festivity, was not unlike dynamite.

"Aw, bury the cat!" growled Reg; but he watched them with covert interest as they disappeared around the house.

Gil, hurrying past the window in which Abbott and Billie were stationed to watch the fun, suddenly halted.

"Come on, Billie," he said, holding out his hand to her and ignoring Abbott, "we're going to the lake."

SHE tried to warn him with a look; but he chose not to understand. At last she replied firmly, drawing her partner's arm through hers, "I've just promised Mr. Abbott to dance as soon as the lights come on. Run along, Gil, and entertain 'Tuck.'"

The boy made a poor attempt at a smile, then turned on his heel. "Come along, Kiddo!" he cried, seizing Kentucky about the waist. "We're going to make whoopee!"

Glenn Abbott watched them out of sight. "I seem to annoy the young man," he commented dryly. "Evidently he wanted you for himself."

"Who?" laughed Billie with fine assumption of surprise. "Gil—Gil Johns? Nonsense!"

Abbott was apparently not yet convinced that there was not some secret bond between Billie and the boy. The girl quickly changed her tactics. Leaning against the wall, both arms behind her, eyes raised challengingly to his, she said, "I've heard you don't usually surrender so meekly."

The man drew close to her again, looking steadily into her upturned face.

Now he raised her hand to his lips and kissed it several times.

"You have heard correctly. I take what I want, without scruples."

Outside a rocket whizzed skyward and burst into a shower of falling stars. Abbott's eyes followed it, and he smiled a little crookedly.

"Dynamite?" she laughed, catching the meaning in his expression. "Thanks for the warning!"

ABBOTT caressed her hand, his eyes moving from it to her round white throat. Billie laughed uneasily. "Now if you'll just return my hand—" she began lightly; but Abbott suddenly crushed her in his arms and silenced her. Billie instinctively shrank from him, inspired for the first time in her life with an actual physical fear. She who had loved so lightly and often before, and who had in a spirit of casual fun promised to marry Gil, was beginning to realize passion.

The orchestra, which had taken its place again, began a slow tango as the lights gradually began to come on.

"Didn't you promise me this dance?" the man spoke in a low voice, as if to deny that he had been unable to resist taking her in his arms.

Billie relaxed thankfully and nodded as she allowed him to swing her into the midst of other couples in the dimly lighted room. His arms, tightening about her, cheek close to her hair, stirred to warring tumult the strange and overwhelming emotions within her.

Gil, seated close beside Kentucky, unsteadily poured out two more glasses of champagne. Together they drank as the gondola, guided by a picturesque masked man, floated away from the crowd of merrymakers on land.

"He oughta sing," remarked Gil a little thickly, hailing the gondolier.

As a romantic Italian love song filled the night, Gil put his arm about Kentucky. The child, listening breathlessly, turned toward the man she loved so ardently, eyes full of happiness, her warm soft mouth on fire with the desire to enjoy.

Gil had drained his glass, but Kentucky's had not been touched. At the sight of it Gil momentarily forgot all thought of romance. "It's got to be 'bottoms up'!" he declared, filling another for himself. "I drink to your two bright eyes of blue!"

"Isn't the thrill and joy of—all this—worth—everything?" she whispered breathlessly.

"Now aren't you the wise little philosopher!" he laughed, rumpling her hair, then turning to pour out another drink.

The gondola drifted away from the garden where the fireworks were beginning at last to wane. Across the water came Blondie's cry, "Gil—Gil—Kentucky! Come to life! Where are you? Come back!"

Reg and his crowd began to chant drunkenly, "Oh, where, oh, where has my little dog gone?"

Gil was about to shout back when Kentucky pressed warm little fingers against his lips. "Let's hide and fool them!" she whispered.

THEY had drifted toward a dark bank of pampas grass fringing the lake. That would make a clever hiding-place!

"Let's!" agreed Gil enthusiastically, motioning the gondolier to pole toward land. "Here's to a smart girl from the South!" he added, draining another glass of champagne.

The boat shot into a canal almost completely hidden by the tall grass. Reg and Blondie passed, calling insistently, while Gil and Kentucky crouched silently in the depths of their gondola. When the voices had died away in the distance, Kentucky suddenly sprang ashore and smiled back provocatively at Gil, who stumbled recklessly after her. Playfully she ran from him, the tall grass swaying in the moonlight as she brushed it aside.

Instincts of a bygone day were awakened in Gil. As a caveman hunted for his maid, so did Gil pursue Kentucky while the gondolier, shrugging, poled into the lake again, alone.

Gil caught an occasional brief glimpse of the girl as she ran through the pampas grass. Sometimes he lost her altogether, and was obliged to search for her. Now, as he reached a tangle of head-high grass, there was no sign of Kentucky. Baffled, he stood quite still and listened. Suddenly from behind him two soft, bare white arms caught his shoulders. He grasped them in his strong hands and pulled the girl toward him.

"You nervy little devil!" he laughed, closing her tightly in his arms. "Thought you could run away from me, did you?"

He was conscious of her arms creeping convulsively about him, of her eyes downcast beneath heavy lashes, and of half-parted moist red lips seeking his hungrily. Passionately he crushed her to him, his mouth against her own. Kentucky sank into his arms forgetful of everything else. She was Gil's—she adored him, worshiped him—and he could not resist her . . .

From out of the night came the soft, haunting melody of an Italian love song. In the garden, beside the lake, one last gorgeous shower of stars illuminated the darkness, and fell to earth . . .

Within the ballroom Billie danced in the arms of the man who had fired her with her first passion; while out beyond the lake the tall grasses waved gently, compassionately sheltering another couple who had just discovered love . .

Gil, Kentucky, Billie and Abbott suddenly find themselves involved in a hopeless love tangle. What will be the outcome? Don't miss the next installment in the June issue of Screen Secrets, out May 10.

Lily Discovers America

"And the house man is quite Chinese," she enthuses. "And here is a brass gong," giving the latter a smart resounding rap.

She wore a rich blue silk mandarin jacket and pajamas covered in multitudinous and highly colored embroideries. that made her a brilliant figure against the dark background of her furnishings. A pair of Parisian pink traveling trunks saddled by baby blue stripes seemed all out of place.

On her personal appearance tour, Lily literally "flu" through America. She suffered from the grippe at the time she was making sixty-eight personal appearances in nineteen days in ten different cities and while she made seventeen radio speeches, posed sixty-seven times for photos and attended twelve luncheons and five teas.

"Between each, I fell in bed," relates Lily. She is still charmingly unaware of American flapper slang or she might have used "I faw down." Her own odd way of twisting adjectives is far more amusing than anything our language has to offer:

"Photographers do not care if I am ill." She runs her fingers through her mass of light brown curls often as she talks. "They start coming at seven before I get my bath and fill the room with smoke powder and elbow each other and say 'I was here first. You go to H—!'

"New doctors come in every city and squirt different things up my nose. They argue which one should hold the thermometer."

IN NEW YORK, a press agent printed a story to the effect that Lily Damita had said she did not like millionaires because they could only talk about the stock market and the automobile business. It even went so far as to say she preferred poor boys. The paper included the name of the St. Regis Hotel in the story and told the world she was stopping there.

"Never did I know there were so many poor boys in America," said a distracted Lily.

"I receive 5,000 letters a day, all from young men wishing to prove they were very poor and would like to marry me. At two and three in the morning boys from down in Jersey would phone long distance to me."

Bellhops did a marathon with gifts—gramaphones, candy, fishes, luck pieces, love birds, Black Narcissus and clouds of handkerchiefs, for some earlier edition had also stated she had a cold.

So Lily had to tell the hotel to shut off the phone entirely. At that, she had a very glorious social time in New York. She went to a party given by W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and met French Ambassador Claudel, went to another affair at Mrs. William Astor Chandler's and met the Grand Duke Alexis, cousin of the late Czar, had tea at the Messmer Kendalls and at the Bernard Gimbel home.

Lily likes big cities.

"Hollywood is leedle. I like better Paris, Berlin, New York or Chicago. Here, everyone knows all you do. They gossip too much."

IF LILY planned to keep the visit of Prince George of England a quiet little affair, she had not counted on the American type of brass band publicity. Everyone knew each move the celebrated Englishman made. That's Hollywood. And there is a certain duke who comes out west occasionally to see Lily but he is hardly through the first orange grove before everyone is buzzing again. Your heart is the world's football.

"But, I am going to stay in Hollywood and make a great star of myself here. I will not give up as other foreign girls. Arlette Marchal gave up. She now works in the German films and has married Marcel De Sano, the director, who also left Hollywood. Paulette Duval went back—Pola Negri. And many others.

"I want to be young in the films—myself. In The Rescue with Ronald Colman they cast me as a married woman with dignity and more age than I wish. I want to play comedies of youth—to wear sport clothes and pretty frocks and not be so sophisticated!"

LOVE? Oh, Lily has her flirtations. No one with her sparkle and vivacity and sense of humor could escape romantic affairs. She has been engaged to royalty, too—Louis Ferdinand, son of the gentleman who was known as the Crown Prince of Germany before the big disaster. And she was engaged to Carlos of Bourbon. Lily isn't frowning on Cupid nor does she shun men for art. Her heart hasn't been captured completely so she can handle suitors in vast numbers and not lose her head over any of them.

The talkies are a problem Lily is going to meet squarely.

"I will fight to stay in the talkies," beating fist on hand. "Maybe with too much personal appearance tours I pick up funny Boston bean accent or western burr in voice, eh?

"But after while I will speak perfect English. Mr. Goldwyn borrowed me to M-G-M to play the lead in The Bridge of San Luis Rey and in this it is all right for me to have accent. When he borrows me soon again I will be cast in foreign girl parts with accent. But that does not satisfy me entirely. I want to be able speak good English if they wish me play American role. I will fight to do so and when a woman fights she gets what she wants!"

Lily's pink trunks are not going honeymooning or off to Europe very soon. First, she must make good in a lee-dle town.

Fan Clubs

Frank Orlando is the Secretary of the club and yearly dues are fifty cents.

A Club for Blanche Mehaffey

OMAR BIDDLINGMEIER, president of the Blanche Mehaffey Fan Club, desires announcement. The club is growing rapidly and has members in almost every state as well as many foreign ones. Mr. Biddlingmeier is also president of the Haver-Lyon Fan Club now. Mary Greco was formerly in that capacity but resigned. This club has over 425 members in every state in the union, as well as in Germany, England, Canada, Hawaii, Egypt, Holland, Brazil, Cuba, Peru, Belgium, Arabia, South Africa, South Wales, Spain, Ireland and Mexico. Dues to this club are 25c and either star will send members a photo on request. Dues to the Blanche Mehaffey club are 50c and that includes a large photo of Blanche.

The Paramount Stars Fan Club

THE Paramount Stars' Fan Club has been called to our attention. It boosts Paramount stars and pictures. A complete list of the players that they boost will be sent on request. "All new members," says Miss Barbara Dayne, the club president, "are given an autographed photograph of their favorite Paramount player, a personal letter from him, and news of Paramount activities at different intervals. The name and address of different 'Paramount Fan Friends' will also be sent you, so you may correspond with them. Dues of the club are 30c yearly, payable in coin or stamps in advance. We invite you all to join and roll along in happiness with us."

About the California Club

THE California Friendly Club is now entering upon its third year as a fan club, with Miss Ruth Quisenberry as president, and they are now sending out a membership list and news-sheet every three months. Their honor roll has some seventy-five or more stars of the screen and stage, and they are adding to it each month. The fifty cents that it costs to join this club will give twelve months of real pleasure to the boy or girl who likes to write letters and receive them.

Album to be Given Away

JULIA DAVID, president of the Helen Ferguson Friendship Club, has asked her friend and favorite star—Miss Ferguson, of course—to send her the name and address of the club member (boy or girl) who writes Helen the most human letter, and she will present him or her with a beautiful album with the winner's name gilded on same. Who will be the lucky winner? Be sure and say you are a member of the club when you write, says Miss David.

WAISTLINE FAT
Can Be Quickly Reduced
—Without Drugs and Diets or Exercises

HOW many times have you made up your mind to reduce? How many times have you said to yourself: "I'm going on a diet" or "I'm going to start exercising"?

For a whole week you may have struggled through gymnastics and starved yourself. You rolled around the floor, cut out desserts and starchy foods. And at the end of the week you found that you had lost only 2 pounds!

A good diet strictly lived up to, and a course of exercises rigidly followed will undoubtedly help you reduce waistline fat. But from your own experience you know how slow and unpleasant these methods are.

Look Thinner at Once

Instead of wasting your time—instead of risking your health by weakening diets, exhausting exercises and pill-taking in an effort to get rid of bulging waistline fat—try the popular Weil Reducing Belt for 10 days—at our expense.

Made of scientifically treated rubber, it fits snugly to the body—and every move produces an unconscious massage which moulds away the flabby flesh. It not only makes you look thinner at once, but keeps you so—permanently. Every instant of the day this famous Weil Reducing Belt is at work slenderizing your figure.

How to Dress on $13,000 a Year

ostrich feathers. (But these were inconsequential. They cost only about $10 apiece, on the average).

Then there was a negligee made from filet of lace over layers of chiffon, hand-embroidered in rosebuds, a beautiful creation.

Of lingerie, there were about two dozen sets—teddies, step-ins, silken trunks, chiffons and a chestful of all those pretty "undies" which women so adore. And silk stockings!

I spoke of the growing fad among actresses of going bare-legged in Hollywood during the summer time.

"I could never do that," said Claire, "because I'm not the type. It's fine for some girls but it wouldn't become me."

Next we came to her jewelry chest. Stacks of bracelets, earrings, finger rings, lavallieres, necklaces, strings of pearls, breastpins, set with beautiful emeralds, rubies and diamonds.

"Rare outfit, that!" smiled Miss Windsor. "It's the trick jewelry I wear on the stage or at the studios."

After I had glanced at about fifty pairs of gloves and learned that she never has a pair cleaned more than once, I looked at two ermine coats which were hung ignobly in the company of a dozen or more mere tailored garments. I came to the conclusion that Miss Claire is rather comfortably fixed in the matter of raiment for several weeks—maybe two months.

"I make no claim to the title of 'The Best Dressed Woman in Hollywood,'" she protested. "I don't know where the idea started. I do try to dress well and it does take a lot of money. But I've found this out: If you are well dressed and you know you're well dressed, you have a different outlook on life than you have if you are cheaply attired and feel that people know it.

"Another thing, eight hours of sleep are necessary to the woman who seeks to preserve her looks. I find that when I'm held at the studio so I can't get in my eight hours of rest, I appear fagged or tired-looking the next day. Sleep is the greatest beauty-builder on earth."

I pulled on my $38 cloak, reached for my $4 hat, climbed into my little Buick coupe, drove carefully around Claire's limousine so as not to bump it and churned the road to my flat.

Thirteen thousand, two hundred and fourteen dollars for wearing apparel!

Well, I'd do it, too, if I had Claire's beauty and the thirteen thousand.

She finally married "Lefty" Flynn, the old football star who had turned movie actor. Both of their film careers have slumped into the discard—likewise their marriage.

Lupe Looks Her Over

I WAS present at the Mayfair Club dance the other night when the delectable Lupe Velez got her first look at the new poacher upon her domains. Lupe was dressed like a languid queen; and she gave little Armida just that kind of a look. Being a languid queen isn't the best thing that Lupe does.

Chili and Dolores

THIS is the way I size up these Mexican beauties: Lupe is a dish of hot chili. She is primitive, cyclonic, and a wild passion of temperament. Lupe is the warm earth, as vital and elemental as a storm at sea.

Dolores Del Rio is a bull fight—beautiful, ruthless, cruel, graceful, intellectual. She kills with magnificent gestures.

If Lupe got mad enough at you, she would knock you down and bite you into shreds with her big, white teeth. Dolores would stick you to the heart; but she would be sure that the little red flag was draped gracefully over the deadly espada; and that none of the blood got on her little beaded shoes.

Not Spanish Now

THE last crop of Latins who invaded the screen some years ago insisted on being called Spanish. But these girls will slay with a look if you do not call them "Mexican." This, no doubt, is because Mexico itself is remembering to be proud of its Indian heritage.

Shoe-Shining Actor

OSCAR, the black boy who shines shoes at Paramount, can fairly claim to be the only actor who had his name in electric lights and went on smearing shine. Oscar used to be Wally Reid's valet. When Wallace died, Oscar went back to the shine stand. From time to time, they have given him parts in various pictures—notably in Old Ironsides. He had a part in a recent crook picture which so impressed the proprietor of a colored theater in Los Angeles that the name of the star was contemptuously pushed to one side, and Oscar's name burst out into lights in front of the theater. Oscar says, with philosophy, that the life of an actor is an uncertain adventure; but shining shoes is a meal ticket.

Have You These Symptoms of NERVE Exhaustion?

Do you get excited easily?

Do you become fatigued after slight exertion?

Are your hands and feet cold?

Do you suffer from constipation or stomach trouble?

Is your sleep disturbed by troubled dreams?

Have you spells of irritability?

Are you often gloomy and pessimistic?

Do you suffer from heart palpitation, cold sweats, ringing in the ears, dizzy spells?

These are only a few of the signs of weak, unhealthy nerves that are steadily robbing thousands of people of their youth and health.

What Causes Sick Nerves?

WOMEN In women this is largely due to over-active emotions, and to the constant turmoil in their domestic and marital relations.

MEN In men, these signs of nerve exhaustion are produced as a result of worries, intense concentration, excesses and vices. The mad pace at which we are traveling is wrecking the entire Nervous Organization.

How to Strengthen Your Nerves!

No tonic or magic system of exercise can ever restore the health and vigor to weak, sick, unbalanced nerves. To regenerate lost nerve force, to build up strong, sound nerves, requires an understanding of the action and abuses of nerves. It needs a knowledge of the natural laws of nerve fatigue, of mental and physical relaxation and nerve metabolism. And it is only through the application of these laws that stubborn cases of Nerve Exhaustion can be overcome.

Read This Wonder Book

Based upon many years of intensive experience and study, the famous author, Richard Blackstone, has written a remarkable book, entitled "New Nerves for Old." In plain language he gives certain easy-to-follow rules that have enabled thousands of men and women to regain their lost nervous energy and to acquire glowing health and youthful vitality. It enables you to correctly diagnose your own case and shows you how to bring back your lost nervous vitality.

"New Nerves for Old" is worth its weight in gold—and yet its cost is only 25c, stamps or coin. The book will prove a revelation to you. It will help you throughout your entire life; it will help you to build for yourself a solid foundation for your future success and happiness. Mail coupon for your copy today. Address, Richard Blackstone, N-705 Flatiron Building, New York.

Gary, as a youth of seventeen, on his Montana ranch with a hawk he has just shot.

Gary's Life of Dreams

wood was glad to see even a failure. He told me then that they had seen the rushes and that I actually wasn't half bad and furthermore that I was to play the part.

"I went back, confident and happy. I finished the picture and I have never had stage-fright again."

GARY paused for a moment. His smile as though he was feeling a bit sympathetic for the little boy who had been himself only a few years ago. Then he continued, "From that I went into westerns. I was starred in them. I liked them even though they were just small program pictures. They were more like my yokel dreams than anything I had done so far. I knew they would play all the small ranch towns in the Middle West and I used to wonder if the kids would like me—if I would thrill them as Bill Hart used to thrill me.

"After I finished the westerns, First National borrowed me for Lilac Time with Colleen Moore. We were a long time on that picture but I enjoyed every minute of it—especially listening to the aviators talk. I used to wish I had been in the racket with them.

"Soon after that we made The Legion of the Condemned with Fay Wray. That picture sort of established me as being in the profession. Before that time no one seemed to know I existed and cared less. People began to notice me and fan mail started coming in. It made me feel that perhaps my efforts were appreciated a little.

"I have made several pictures since then—playing a different type in each one. You see, I haven't been established as any particular type yet. I know what parts I can play best but it seems that in this school of acting you go through the process of finding yourself. Well, as I said before, I'm merely in the making and the schooling doesn't hurt me a bit."

"Are you glad you went into pictures, Mr. Gary?"

He smiled, that same wistful smile that all Gary fans love. "Yes and no! One might say it was a dream come true but dreams are perfect in every detail and life is not. I may, when I am working, lose myself completely in a part and be happy. But when the day is done and I wipe off the grease, I know that I have only been acting and that acting is work. In my dreams I had only to please myself—here I have to please my director, my producer and my audience. But with all the idealism knocked out of me, I haven't gotten over dreaming—on the ranch I used to dream of acting. Now that I am acting—I dream of the ranch."

GARY COOPER smiled a sad little mind, I knew, was wandering back to the big outdoor stage—the real land of make-believe.

"I own a ranch now. It's all mine. I plan to add to it. To build a rustic hut of logs, a huge fireplace, to ship up a bunch of horses. I want to have a place where I can go and relax, where I can have my friends, my real friends, and be at peace with the world."

"Real friends, Gary? You say that as though you doubted the sincerity of some friendships."

"I do! I don't make friends very easily but when I do I like to keep them. I think the word 'friendship' is too often lightly used. To me a friend is a person that time does not change. Often I meet boys who knew me when. Perhaps they are driving a truck now. I try to be friendly but they act as if a little success had carried me out of their reach. I don't know whether they do not care for my friendship any more or whether they think I am high hat and I leave them with a feeling that I wish we had not met again. Then again I meet fellows who are just as natural with me as they were in the old days. My work isn't mentioned. It's just old time pals together again. Hollywood is rather hard on friends. You lose track of people so easily. I am at one studio, they are at another. They don't look me up and I can't get away to look them up. Once in a while we meet accidentally but it is only for a moment—like ships that pass at sea. That's why I'd like a place where I could take them, say, about once a year."

The telephone rang. "Yes, yes, mother. I'll be right home. I won't keep you waiting." He turned to me. "My mother and father are with me now and mother still expects us to be on time for meals. Sorry I couldn't give you a decent story—"

And he was gone—gone like others, swallowed up in the whirlpool of Hollywood. But he was wrong about the story. I had one—one that would linger in my memory a long, long time. Gary and his dreams. Gary and his acting. For he was an actor even back in Montana. But aren't we all actors in this game called life? I went on my way just as Gary had, but running through my mind like a long-forgotten melody was:

"All the world's a stage,
"And all the men and women merely players—"

Eastward Ho!

has proven conclusively that where there's an ill there's a way. Incidentally, they'll play in Dark Streets for First National together when he's up and around again.

Nancy Rests Up

SWEET li'l Nancy Carroll has been in our midst for some days now. After the making of The Wolf of Wall Street and Shopworn Angel she decided that it was time for her to beat it to New York for a vacation and a visit with her folks in the Bronx. So Nancy hasn't seen much of anyone but has just enjoyed herself taking in shows, buying clothes, and devoting herself to her family. Ever since being pleasantly surprised by Nancy's swell job in the talking sequences of George Bancroft's latest film, I've been convinced that there are big things in store for her under the Paramount banner. Nancy, y'know, was just a little show girl in the Winter Garden less than two years ago. As in many another case, X marks the spotlight where the body was found by an enterprising movie producer.

Besides having lovely light blue eyes, Nancy is one of the few Hollywood players who has flaming red hair. And for these twenty odd (very odd) years, I've been betting on the red! Maybe you don't agree. Maybe you're just not hair-minded. My own opinion, however, is that red hair is bound to come out on top. Don't shoot.

Oh, yes, Nancy will play in Sin Sister next. And I didn't say Thin Sister, either, Oscar.

What Brice Glory!

NOT so many days ago, the dapper Mayor of this town, Jimmie Walker, signed, sealed, and delivered a marriage license in City Hall to Fanny Borach and William S. Rosenburg. Sounds tame, friends, but it was an event. The gentleman is young Billy Rose, age twenty-nine, who has to his credit the creation of a number of song hits, among them Barney Google, Back In Your Own Back Yard, There's A Rainbow 'Round My Shoulders, Me and My Shadow, and so forth.

The woman, aged thirty-seven, is one of Broadway's most popular comediennes, none other than the Rose of Washington Square—Fannie Brice!

Our cleverest Broadway play boy, Walter Winchell, wisecracked about that wedding as follows: "A Rose by any other name would still be Fannie Brice."

But there you are. Fannie was one time in the public eye for her amazing loyalty to her second husband, Nicky Arnstein, who was sent on several extended vacations by the government for shady transactions. Fannie, song-singer extraordinary and interpreter of that wow, My Man, which she sang, they say, to Nick himself.

JOTTINGS: Paul Ash was master of ceremonies at the big annual Paramount Pep Club ball at the Astor with Eddie Cantor, the Marx Brothers, Bert Lytell, Nancy Carroll, Richard Dix, Lenore Ulric, and many others present; a good time was had by Paul and everyone else . . . Barbara Bennett, daughter of the famous Richard Bennett, was wed to Morton Downey and will be his leading lady in Gene Markey's Mother's Boy for Pathe . . . Harry Beaumont, M-G-M's star director, came to the city to see the opening at the Astor Theatre of his The Broadway Melody; he will spend a couple of weeks here searching for new talent for his next show . . . Estelle Brody, the English actress who starred in Mademoiselle from Armentieres, the British film shown here recently, is in Papa Knickerbocker's town on her first visit to America . . . Margaret Livingston is vacationing here for several weeks between making Universal pictures . . . The New Frivolity night club has finally gone over with a bang since it's being visited by the big guns . . . With George Le Maire offering big cash and contract prizes, all the lassies are eagerly awaiting the big A. M. P. A. ball . . . Have you heard about Peggy Udell, the New York show girl who's gonna enter a convent? They say it's not a publicity stunt, either; oh, well, nun but the brave . . . Stop.

Hollywood's Perfect Hostess

hasn't had everything her way—not by a generous bushel measure. There have been unkind things said by the thousand. But just as she changed from successful dramatic interpretations of knighthoods in flower and trailing-gowned ladies, to a little comedienne who can make slapstick slappier and stickier, by sheer persistence and good sportsmanship, so, by the same token, she made herself social queen of the movies.

"If I've made a success, perhaps it's because I have that instinctive ability to feel other people. I seem to absorb personalities; to grasp folks' feelings. That's how I can imitate them. Perhaps, that's the reason I can entertain them."

Yet, she claims that it's not an art born within but one acquired by training. If that's true, then you or I or any other person could do it, by just profiting by the rules laid down by this little lady who's always entertaining.

Miss Phyllis Haver—Lovely Pathe Star

Wherever beauty Congregates Maybelline tells its own Story

IN Hollywood there occur certain social events which bring celebrities of the screen together, to make the most striking panorama of feminine beauty the world is privileged to look upon.

Gorgeous jewels are in abundance and gowns are such as seem possible only in fairy tales. Yet the material glitter and grandeur of the spectacle is noticeably dominated by an exquisite note of charm—a charm which everyone feels—and which, quite obviously, emanates from the eyes of those present. For, every eye sparkles, and is vividly aflame with amazing expression as it casts melting glances thru dark, long, luxuriant lashes made so by Maybelline.

Such is the story of Maybelline and the fascinating eyes and lashes it makes—whether the setting be in Hollywood as typified by Miss Phyllis Haver, whose picture appears herewith, or whether it be any assemblage of smart society anywhere. For Maybelline is always in evidence where beauty is made more beautiful by eyelashes transformed from scantiness to dark, dense fringes of enchanting loveliness.

Have you tried genuine Maybelline?

Solid Form

BOTH Solid and Waterproof Liquid Maybelline are made in Black and Brown from secret formulas and are widely imitated but never duplicated. Both forms are perfectly harmless. To be sure that you get the genuine, look for the Maybelline Girl on the package. Obtainable at all toilet goods counters—75c. MAYBELLINE CO., CHICAGO.

Liquid Form (Waterproof)

"I find Maybelline ideal for darkening and beautifying eyelashes and eyebrows. It is so easy to use and gives such marvelous results.

I would not think of being without Maybelline for everyday use, as well as for best effects in my screen work." Sincerely yours,

Phyllis Haver

Free Razor Blades For Life

With Amazing Invention

Sensational New Machine Practically Ends Buying Razor Blades! Makes Shaving 100% Easier and Quicker! Read how it Works. Then Mail Coupon Below For Unique Free Test and Money-Making Offers!

SCORE up another triumph for American inventive genius! For here at last is a device every shaver has long needed. No more razor blades to buy! No more trouble shaving tender skins or tough wiry beards! And shaving time cut in half! No wonder over a million men have switched to this new way to shave without buying blades.

Imagine getting 1500 keen cool shaves from one razor blade! Imagine an old Gillette blade lasting thru two years of shaving—almost 500 shaves in all! These are the startling results reported by J.T.Main, Wisconsin, and E.L. Vinal, Oregon. Thousands of other reports just like these pour in every month. And here's why such amazing records have been made possible!

Unlike Stroppers

This startling machine — named KRISS KROSS—contains several patented features that make it entirely different from ordinary blade sharpeners. It fits any blade (except Durham Duplex), and a child can operate it. It introduces a new blade sharpening principle that makes perfect blade edge an automatic certainty. Actually you can take a new blade fresh out of the package and improve its sharpness 50%.

Limited space here prevents full and fair description. Full details will be sent upon receipt of coupon. The makers (who are the world's largest manufacturers of mechanical stroppers) will also send this machine anywhere for a test of results—you to be the judge. And as a reward for prompt action, they will include the gift described below.

New Type Razor FREE!

The inventors have another new invention—an amazing safety razor that instantly adjusts to the most convenient shaving angle. This is not yet ready for sale. But we want the judgment of a million men before advertising it. So we include one free with every Kriss Kross purchased. And Kriss Kross costs you nothing—it pays for itself in razor blades and priceless shaving comfort. But mail the coupon. You can't buy Kriss Kross in stores. No obligation. Act now.

I MADE $5300 LAST YEAR and Won this Model A Ford FREE Besides!

B.G. Loughren won this free Ford in two months—and made $5300 last year and received two more cars. Many others received free new Fords too. Emil Ham made $50 a day his first four days. That's the way Kriss Kross men are cleaning up. And who couldn't make big money with a device that ends razor blade expense and includes a free razor!

No alibis now for not learning to play!

"—AFRAID TO BEGIN"
"IT'S TOO HARD—TAKES TOO LONG"
"I DON'T KNOW ONE NOTE FROM ANOTHER
"I DON'T LIKE THE IDEA OF A PRIVATE TEACHER"

Easy as A-B-C to become a popular musician on an instrument this "no teacher" way

WHY let your imagination run loose and keep you from becoming a popular musician? Haven't you heard that there is a way of learning to play your favorite instrument in a few short months? Without taking lessons from a teacher! Without paying expensive fees! Without any tiresome technique or dry-as-dust exercises to struggle through—a way that has been vouched for by over a half-million people in all parts of the world!

The U. S. School of Music has completely removed all the difficulty, boredom and extravagance from music lessons. It has made the reading and playing of music so downright simple that you don't have to know one note from another to begin.

It's So Easy!

Your own home is your studio. The lessons come to you by mail. They consist of complete printed instructions, diagrams, and all music you need.

You study with a smile. For instead of just scales you learn to play real tunes from actual notes—right from the very first lesson on. And you're never in hot water. First, you are told how a thing is done, then a picture shows you how, then you do it yourself and hear it. No private teacher could make it clearer or easier.

"Goodbye Blues"

Sooner than you realize you will be bringing cheer to the folks at home with your playing. Gradually you gain confidence and professional expression. Then parties, popularity, orchestra work follow in short order. You'll know how good it feels to be out of the wallflower class and into the whirl of things . . . to be able to provide musical enjoyment for others whenever you are called upon.

The abundance of joys that music can bring into anyone's life is now yours to share. Let the time-proven and tested U. S. School home-study method help you to increase pleasure and financial gain. Bear in mind no matter what instrument you select—the cost of learning in each case will average the same—just a few cents a day!

Free Book and Demonstration Lesson

Our wonderful illustrated Free Book and our Free Demonstration Lesson explain all about this remarkable method. They prove just how anyone can learn to play his favorite instrument in half the time and for just a fraction of what old slow methods cost. The booklet will also tell you about the amazing new Automatic Finger Control.

If you really want to learn to fly—if new friends, good times, social popularity, and increased income appeal to you—take this opportunity to make your dreams come true. Now! Sign the coupon and send it before it's too late. Instruments supplied when needed, cash or credit. U. S. School of Music, 366 Brunswick Bldg., New York City.

. . . The Book That Zealous Reformers Once Burned in Public!

At Last!

Censorship No Longer Denies You This Thrill of Thrills—

Tales from THE GREAT DECAMERON...

YOU'LL never know life until you've read this greatest of all forbidden books! You'll never know how utterly stark and vivid a picture of human passions can be painted in words until you've feasted on the most fascinating tales from the greatest of all true-to-life books — the immortal Decameron of Boccaccio!

Between its pages, the thrill of a lifetime of reading awaits you. Before your very eyes is unfolded the glittering pageantry of a golden age now vanished—an age when passion, intrigue and high-riding romance held full sway. Past you, in a breath-taking parade, sweep some of the most beautiful, yet unprincipled, women of all time—women whose intense fascination fired men's blood and even altered the fates of empires . . . Here you will find tales of scarlet days, when a robust world drank of life and love to its very dregs!

Few writers have ever dared to write so intimately of the frailties to which the flesh is heir. But the flaming pen of Giovanni Boccaccio knew no restraint. Sophisticated and fearless to the ultimate degree, his stories are not only brilliant fiction of the most gripping variety—but also the most illuminating record of life in fourteenth-century Italy ever penned. Hardly a detail of these stirring times escaped his watchful eye—and what he saw, he wrote, without hesitation nor fear!

These Great Writers Have Taken Plots From the Decameron

Shakespeare took parts of The Merchant of Venice, Cymbeline, All's Well That Ends Well and Romeo and Juliet from these stories. Lessing took the plot of Nathan der Weise, Chaucer the idea of his Canterbury Tales, Dryden, Keats, Longfellow and Tennyson wrote poems—all based on these great tales, which have outlived thousands of manuscripts written since their day.

Mystery No Longer Shrouds This Brilliant Masterpiece!

Perhaps no other book ever written has had such an amazing history. Written in so vigorous a style as to be actually startling, it has long been a storm center of fierce controversy and even persecution. Critics and the haute-monde have acclaimed it with unstinted praise for its sparkling vividness and subject matter—while prudish zealots and tyrannical reformers, aghast at the utter frankness with which Boccaccio exposed human life and love in the raw, resorted to every possible means to keep this masterpiece from general circulation. At one time they actually went so far as to gather all the available copies and have them publicly burned!

But all that was yesterday! To-day the thrill that awaits the reader within the glowing pages of Decameron Tales is no longer denied you. This is the age of reason—and the peerless word-artistry of genial old Boccaccio has come into its own at last! . . . Now, for a short time only, you can inspect these great examples of realistic writing in your own home for five days, without obligation!

A Literary Treasure-House

Rich in fascinating plot, tense with action and vibrant with human passion—the Decameron has furnished plots for the world's great masters of literature. Longfellow, Keats, Dryden, Chaucer, and even the great Shakespeare himself sought these immortal pages for inspiration. In no other volume are the morals and customs of Italy of the fourteenth century so graphically laid before you—the way people lived, the hovels and palaces they dwelt in, the fantastic pleasures they indulged in—all are told with both wit and pathos that are indescribable. Thus the stories not only amuse and entertain, but constitute a landmark of literature which must not be passed over if you would broaden your vision—make yourself truly cultured.

YOU STEP UP TO A BIG JOB WHEN YOU MAIL THIS COUPON

(C) 1929 by C. W. V. D. M.

A monthly feature devoted to bringing our readers the latest, most authentic news of talkie personalities and developments.

THE famous chimes of Big Ben of the House of Parliament in London will be heard in a sequence of Bull Dog Drummond. As there isn't another in the world that sounds like Big Ben a record of it is being made in London, which will be shipped to the Sam Goldwyn Studios in Hollywood and incorporated in the talking picture. What price authenticity?

SOME sounds do not register correctly in the talkies. A falling human body is one. It makes too much disturbance on the recording apparatus. After much experimenting, it has been learned that when a ripe pumpkin is dropped from a height of several feet it makes just the right amount of sound to give the illusion of a falling body.

AMERICAN talking pictures will popularize the English language in every foreign country," is the belief of Louis B. Mayer, general manager of the M-G-M studio. "Our language will become universal just as American pictures have popularized American habits and clothing abroad."

CAMERA booths for the talkies have been makeshift affairs. They are ill-ventilated and sound-proof of course. However, they are claiming the attention of inventive minds and will no doubt meet the requirements of the man inside, very soon. They are built, now, so that a trap door can be lifted from the bottom, when the camera needs to shoot towards the floor; also, a door is placed at the top to enable the photographer to shoot upwards, and the third, which is actually the one most in use, opens straight out for all ordinary shots.

WITH the advent of talking pictures, there has been a distinct falling off in fan mail to the established stars, whatever this may indicate.

PERFECT recording of sound film in synchronized pictures on location miles from the studio has been made possible at last through a complete portable recording laboratory. The machine, built in New York with Electrical Research Products equipment consists of a 6,800 pound Reo truck, equipped with a sound-proof body which houses a generator set, storage batteries, a film recording machine operated on the Neon light principle as in the studio recording building, and electrical distributors making possible synchronization of cameras on location. The truck may be moved to any location, microphones and cameras connected to the proper terminals, and then, by a system of hydraulic jacks, the entire affair is lifted off its wheels, making it solid as a building. It is as complete a recording outfit as is in the actual sound stage recording building and any location trip is possible without using remote wire control back to the studios. At last sound pictures are practical on location.

SCREEN SECRETS offers five dollars each month for the best letter by a reader giving a frank opinion of the talkies. This month's winner will be found on page 111.

Behold what the talkies have done to rehearsals! Johnny Mack Brown and Norma Shearer, rehearsing a love scene for The Little Angel, keep the manuscript in view.

SCENERY on wheels is the latest development in the talkie field. Settings, now built of sound-proof material, which has been acoustically treated and is several inches thick, often weighs tons. They are now built in units which are mounted on triangular bases rolling on small rubber-tired wheels, so that they can be wheeled in and out of position. When the units are wheeled into place, they are clamped to the floor of the sound stages by brass levers on their carrying trucks, and thus held rigid while in use.

PEGGY WOOD, well known musical comedy artist of New York who sang in The Clinging Vine and Buddies has come to Hollywood to play in talking and musical films.

LIONEL BARRYMORE, directing Madame X at the M-G-M studio, has a small medical battery by which mild shocks can be transmitted through the carpet to signal his players without distracting their gaze, and without sound.

A SWEET, low voice will be cultivated by every woman in America after talking pictures are perfected," says Al Santell, well known director. "Motion picture stars have set the fashions in clothing and deportment, and now they may set new standards for voice control and modulation."

Soon we shall be referring to our favorites as being "easy on the ears."

Now You Can Reduce 2 to 4 Lbs. in a Night

Eat what you please
Wear what you please
Do what you please
Take no risky medicine

Send the Coupon for your first three Fayro Baths

Thousands of smart women have found this easy way to take off 2 to 4 pounds once or twice a week. These women take refreshing Fayro Baths in the privacy of their own homes.

Fayro is the concentrate of the same natural mineral salts that make effective the waters of twenty-two hot springs of America, England and Continental Europe. For years the spas and hot springs bathing resorts have been the retreat of fair women and well-groomed men.

Excess weight has been removed, skins have been made more lovely, bodies more shapely and minds brighter.

The Hot Springs are now Brought to You

A study of the analyses of the active ingredients of the waters from twenty-two of the most famous springs have taught us the secret of their effectiveness. You can now have all these benefits in your own bath. Merely put Fayro into your hot bath. It dissolves rapidly. You will notice and enjoy the pungent fragrance of its balsam, oils and clean salts.

Then, Fayro, by opening your pores and stimulating perspiration forces lazy body cells to sweat out surplus fat and bodily poisons. Add Fayro to your bath at night and immediately you will lose from 2 to 4 pounds in an easy, refreshing and absolutely harmless manner.

Your physician will tell you that Fayro is certain to do the work and that it is absolutely harmless.

Fayro will refresh you and help your body throw off worn out fat and bodily poisons. Your skin will be clearer and smoother. You will sleep better after your Fayro bath and awaken feeling as though you had enjoyed a week's vacation.

Lose Weight Where You Most Want to

Fayro reduces weight generally but you can also concentrate its effects on abdomen, hip, legs, ankles, chin or any part of the body you may wish.

Results Are Immediate

Weigh yourself before and after your Fayro bath. You will find you have lost from 2 to 4 pounds. And a few nights later when you again add Fayro to your bath, you will once more reduce your weight. Soon you will be the correct weight for your height. No need to deny yourself food you really want. No need for violent exercise. No need for drugs or medicines. Merely a refreshing Fayro bath in the privacy of your own home.

Try Fayro at Our Risk

The regular price of Fayro is $1.00 a package. With the coupon you get 3 full-size packages and an interesting booklet "Health and Open Pores" for $2.50 plus the necessary postage. Send no money. Pay the postman. Your money refunded instantly if you want it.

HERE'S PROOF

Read what Fayro Baths have done for others

"Three Fayro baths reduced my weight 11 pounds in 8 days. I feel better than I have felt for years."

"I weigh 16 pounds less and feel younger and sleep better. Fayro is wonderful."

"My double chin vanished in the magic of Fayro baths."

"My hips were always too prominent until I commenced Fayro baths. I have lost 12 pounds."

"Thank you for Fayro. I lost 14 pounds in three weeks; feel better and certainly look better."

"Since childhood my thick ankles have always been a source of embarrassment. Fayro baths have reduced them beautifully. Thank you very much.

For obvious reasons, names are not quoted, but every letter published has been authorized and name and address will be given on request.

If each healthful bath of Fayro does not reduce your weight from 2 to 4 pounds, we will refund your money without a question. You risk nothing. Clip the coupon and mail it today.

I Sell Records a Queer Way

So people tell me, because I will gladly send to any person who sends me his name and address, a selection of ten records absolutely ON TRIAL, entirely at my risk. Choose any records you want.

Furthermore, I positively insist that you return the records to me at once, if they are in any way inferior to records that sell for three or four times as much. Don't be "sorry" for me, but shoot the records back, and let me stand the postage expense both ways, unless the records are better, clearer and richer in tone than any records you have ever before had, at any price.

I have built a million-dollar business in records on just these "queer" methods, trusting absolutely in the honesty of my customers, and making them the sole judge of whether or not the records will cost them even one cent.

I've built these records to give you pleasure, enjoyment and some real honest good times for months and years to come. I've tried to study the wishes and tastes of the great music-loving public and I've collected in this list below, the very CREAM of my entire catalog. All the records are electrically recorded—and nearly all of them have been done within the last few months, and are in the very latest and best style of the present day. They are all in the standard ten-inch size with music on both sides and play on any phonograph, just like 75-cent records. They include the most recent hits, as well as famous old favorites, and I'm willing to stake my last dollar that they are GOOD.

Choose any ten records you want and simply write their catalog number on coupon below. Send no money. See terms on coupon and see how fully I protect you in every way.

Grow-Yes grow-Eyelashes and Eyebrows like this in 30 days

By LUCILLE YOUNG

America's most widely known Beauty Expert for fifteen years. Beauty Adviser to over a million women.

The most marvelous discovery has been made—a way to make eyelashes and eyebrows actually grow. Now if you want long, curling, silken lashes, you can have them—and beautiful, wonderful eyebrows.

I know that women will be wild to put my new discovery to test. I want them to—at my risk. Doubt all you want to. It does seem impossible, I know. Everything heretofore has failed. But my search of years has at last disclosed the secret.

So now I say to women that no matter how scant the eyelashes and eyebrows I will increase their length and thickness in 30 days—or not accept a single penny. There are no strings attached to my guarantee! No "ifs," "ands," or "maybes!" New growth or no pay. And you are the sole judge.

Proved Beyond the Shadow of a Doubt

Not just a few, but over ten thousand women have proved that my wonderful discovery works—proved it before this, my very first advertisement, appears. I have from these women some of the most startling voluntary testimonials ever written. I print a few of them on this page. And I have sworn to their genuineness before a notary public. Please note the first testimonial—an amazing statement that my discovery actually produced hair on the forehead, as well as growing eyelashes and eyebrows. Every one of the women who have tried my discovery did so on my guarantee. And not a single one has reported failure. On the contrary all have been wildly enthusiastic.

What My Discovery Means to Beauty

To fringe the eyes with long, curling, natural lashes—to make the eyebrows intense, strong, silken lines! Think of it. All the mysterious, alluring charm of veiled eyes, the witchery and beauty only one woman in a hundred now possesses in full. Merely darkening the eyelashes and eyebrows is a poor substitute. It helps. But what you really desire with all your heart, what every woman longs for is this marvelous beauty of naturally luxuriant eyelashes and eyebrows. Now you can have this beauty—impart to your loveliness this greatest of all single charms.

Now Eyelashes and Eyebrows can be made to grow. My new discovery MUST accomplish this, or its cost will be refunded in full. Over 10,000 women have made the test. I have the most marvelous testimonials. Read a few here. I have attested before a notary public, under oath, that they are genuine and voluntary.

Results Noticeable in a Week!

In one week—sometimes in a day or two—you notice the effect. You merely follow simple directions. The eyelashes become more beautiful—like a silken fringe. The darling little upward curl shows itself. The eyebrows become sleek and tractable—with a noticeable appearance of growth and thickness. You will have the thrill of a lifetime—know that all you have to do is carry out use of my discovery the allotted time. And there is instant beauty, too; for my discovery combines with its own marvelous virtue the advantage of darkeners. But it does so without messiness and artificiality. It gives the effect, but itself, cannot be detected.

An Entirely New, Scientific Principle

For years, I have sought my discovery—tried thousands upon thousands of ways. But they were the ways others have tried. I, like others, failed utterly. Then I made a discovery, found that the roots of the eyelashes and eyebrows were marvelously responsive to a certain rare ingredient—found that this ingredient must be applied in an entirely new way. There is a secret about my discovery—but no mystery. It accomplishes its remarkable results just as nature does for those women who possess beautiful eyelashes and eyebrows. I know that I have given to women the wish of their hearts—made the most astounding beauty discovery yet recorded. And I have waited until I was sure before offering it to the world at large. The more than ten thousand women who have tested my discovery have been my regular patrons.

You Can Have Proof At My Sole Risk

Remember...in 30 days I guarantee results that will not only delight, but amaze. If your eyelashes and eyebrows do not actually grow, if you are not wholly and entirely satisfied you will not be out one penny. The introductory price of my discovery is $1.95. Later the price will be regularly $5.00.

Dear Miss Young: I have just used your Eyelash and Eyebrow Beautifier and have received good results. Furthermore, while I was applying it to my eyes, I thought I'd put it on my forehead at the side, to make a dip. I continued to do so and was astonished one day when I saw that there actually was hair on my forehead. I will have a natural dip on my forehead.

The Editor's Opinion

¶ IN ONE ERA AND OUT THE OTHER

Captain Roscoe Fawcett, Editor

BEFORE very many more months silent pictures will be as extinct as the dodo. Ever since the recent announcement by William Fox that hereafter he would make nothing but talking pictures, the stampede has grown with the speed and force of a locomotive.

All the newly formed big combines — Fox-Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Warner Brothers, United Artists and RKO—are definitely committed to extensive talkie programs. And now the actors themselves are hastening to come out with formal announcements in favor of the talkies.

Mary Pickford is the latest convert. At the opening of her latest picture, Coquette, Mary bade farewell to the silent drama. Henceforth, she declared, she will make talkies only.

Mary a la Mode

INCIDENTALLY I believe that Mary will alter any ideas she may have had of leaving the screen, after the tremendous ovation given her upon her appearance in Coquette. This talkie version of the stage play is destined to be one of the hits of the year and it is certain to establish Mary in the forefront of the ranks of emotional actresses. She has done a very difficult thing, a thing which many people said she could never do. At one move she has stopped being a lovable little girl with golden curls and has become a mature and moving actress. Coquette is a bitter and a tragic play. Mary's role is one in which the public would never have accepted her a few years back. Times change and Mary is keeping pace with them, but she is still America's Sweetheart.

Mary and Doug, by the way, have started work on The Taming of the Shrew, which they will make together.

Playback Plays Funny Tricks

THE playback room of the talking pictures yields funny results sometimes. The playback room, you know, is the room in which the actors congregate following a scene or a series of scenes, to listen to the dialogue and sounds, though there is no picture visible.

Mary Duncan, that brilliant young actress, played a particularly tender and touching scene in Through Different Eyes. Everybody trouped into the playback room to hear it. Then at the very end of the scene came Mary's voice:

"Who the devil took my cigarette?"

Two Sisters and a Great Movie

IT IS a pretty well known fact to those on the inside that Broadway Melody is really founded on the lives of those two brilliant and intrepid young spirits, the Duncan sisters, Vivian and Rosetta. Rosetta, the fighter, is embodied in the person of Bessie Love, who gives a quite wonderful characterization to those who know Rosetta Duncan. And she is called "Hank," you remember, by those who know her well. The Duncans call each other Heinie and Jake. Then there is the fight in New York for recognition.

We never knew the Duncans, however, to infringe upon each other's love affairs. So that part of Broadway Melody is pure romance. Each seems to prefer an entirely different type of man from the other.

But there is the same loyalty, the same affection, the same sisterly devotion in the lives of the Duncans as shown in the picture.

By the way, here is a real secret: Never does the lovely Vivian's birthday come around that she does not receive from a certain royal person in Europe a gorgeous bunch of orchids!

That's the Idea!

IT IS encouraging to know that in spite of the mammoth combinations of capital now current in pictures, the young man with an idea still has a chance to make good. Russell Birdwell illustrated that recently. He is a newspaper reporter who had $500 and an idea. So he took the $500 and made a picture. It is called Street Corners, and is a cross-section of the current of life that passes daily on any busy Los Angeles street. Birdwell's method was simple. He merely set up his camera and ground away, using the passersby as extras-gratis. Several actors, including Henry B. Walthall of The Birth of a Nation fame, became so interested in the idea that they consented to act in the picture for nothing. Who says there are no more opportunities?

Every Lily Helps

FRANCE lost one of its fairest flowers when Lily Damita embarked for Hollywood, where she has become one of the most entrancing of recent foreign additions to the film colony. She made her debut on the American screen with Ronald Colman in M-G-M's The Rescue, and since has been much in demand at all studios. Lily has been enthusiastically adopted by the social world at Hollywood where she is the life of every party that is a party. She is to have an important part with Victor McLaglen in The Cock-Eyed World.

Moore Power to Her!

COLLEEN MOORE is going to make an Irish picture which fairly reeks of the Ould Sod. It will be called Smiling Irish Eyes, and it promises to open up a new field of characterization for her which should bring out her best talents as an actress. When it comes to bringing out the latent charm of the Emerald Isle, Colleen has a flying start on all of them. She has a little old Irish grandmother who speaks with a delicious brogue, and it was at her knee that Colleen learned those tales of the "little people" and the mystic lore of the Celts that holds such a strong grip on the Irish imagination even in a strange land.

Roscoe Fawcett

—Ruth Harriet Louise.

JOHN MACK BROWN stepped from the football field to the cinema in a most agile manner, scoring one triumph after another. His most recent one was with Mary Pickford in Coquette.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

CORINNE GRIFFITH, as beautiful as ever, made her first appearance in talking pictures in The Divine Lady. Two forthcoming pictures in which she will be starred are Saturday's Children and Prisoners.—First National.

—Fryer.

DAVID LEE scored a tremendous hit with Al Jolson in The Singing Fool. In Sonny Boy, his latest appearance, he bids fair to take the place of Jackie Coogan as the screen's baby star.—Warner Brothers.

—Freulich.

COLLEEN MOORE, pert and boyish in this nifty spring costume for sport wear, has been making intensive preparations for her first singing and talking picture, Smiling Irish Eyes.—First National.

Phyllis Haver

At the threshold of movie fame and fortune Phyllis Haver chooses love and turns her beautiful back on her film career.

By GORDON R. SILVER

Phyllis Haver as Shanghai Mabel in What Price Glory.

HARD times loom for her producers. Phyllis Haver is going to forsake them—she's leaving pictures flat, just like that. Fame, Hollywood, everything—she's giving it all up—all for just "My Man." Lucky Man!

Yes, Phyllis is really making her last little bow. Just one more picture—only one—and then she will bid farewell to her public.

"I will try to give the very best performance of my life," said Phyllis, "and I will leave before my fans have grown bored with me. The life of a screen actress is pitifully short, and why should I give up a life-long happiness with the man I love for a few brief years more of success?"

This decision to quit the screen at the very peak of her popularity is little short of remarkable. How few of our popular stars of today would even consider, much less take, such a step, especially just after signing a new and lucrative contract, with the possibility of being in the "big money" class!

Phyllis has never made a great deal of money. Mack Sennett did not pay his stars huge sums. His studio was rather a training school, where they went to make big names for themselves in the world of motion pictures. Swanson, Daniels, Compson, Chaplin, Normand and others who were destined to become famous the world over, received their earliest training in this same school.

Miss Haver stepped out of comedy into dramatic roles. Although she was conceded to be a good actress and decidedly nice to look at, there were lean years with jobs few and far between. Phyllis has said herself more than once if it hadn't been for the wisdom of her mother she would have been in actual want while waiting for the calls from the studios.

Then came What Price Glory, in which the erstwhile Sennett beauty played a small part—but she played it so well that she was fairly deluged with offers. This past year or two she has become known as the screen's dizziest blonde and most effective siren. Her personality and yellow curls and blue eyes have intrigued more than one hardened woman hater. Even Cecil De Mille said: "If only all the actresses of the screen had a little of Phyllis' sense of balance, we should have far more and better performances before the camera."

When De Mille went over to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Miss Haver signed a long-term contract with that company. Their plans for her would have made her undoubtedly one of the greatest actresses in motion pictures.

INSTEAD, with all these glorious opportunities staring her in the face, she is turning her back upon pictures to become the wife of William Seaman, a young business man of New York City. There is no compromise in her mind. She has definitely decided to give up her career as an actress. Her's is to be a married life without any competition from the greedy cameras. Who is there of us that can say whether she is right or wrong? Certainly it is her own life to do with as she pleases. Perhaps it is true that sometime a little later her public would tire of her and she would gradually fade from view. No one can say as to that. But leaving now, one can and does say she is indeed a young lady of courage. Her happiness, she believes, should have no chance of becoming side-tracked.

Phyllis Haver is a fluffy, delectable blonde who holds a unique place in the affections of countless fans.

Forsakes the Films

What about the young man? Does he realize and appreciate this sacrifice? Undoubtedly he does. He is Mayor James Walker's closest friend and pal, a New York business man who cannot give up his business and come West. For Phyllis to remain in pictures would mean separation, so it seems Miss Haver knows what she is doing.

It was in New York, at a party, that Phyllis and William Seaman first met.

"After our introduction, Billy gave me a grand rush," laughed Phyllis. "Yes, it was really grand—and you can take that both ways if you wish!

"One night after a certain show, Billy suddenly became awfully serious. I asked him what was the matter. 'Well,' he stammered, 'I've got a terribly serious question to ask you.'

" 'Yeah?' I exclaimed. 'Go ahead and shoot!' And with that, he blurted right out, 'Phil, dear, will you be my wife?' "

WELL, you could have knocked me over with a feather. If surprise was money, I'd have been a millionaire for a minute sure! After I had recovered somewhat from the shock, I asked him if he thought he was kidding me. He assured me that he was never more serious in his life.

" 'You must give me time to think, anyhow,' I said, all the time knowing that I didn't really need another minute!

" 'Nope,' said Billy, 'you must say yes or no now. A lot of time thinking about it won't help a bit.'

"So what could a poor gal do? This one said, 'Yes!' "

William Seaman, the lucky New Yorker for whom Phyllis is deserting the films.

"We hurried to the hotel and woke up my mother. I told her the glad news and Billy joined in the chorus. She thought at first we were fooling her and told us to stop it as she was sleepy. Finally, we convinced her that it was no joke but the real thing.

" 'Well, then, that's swell,' exclaimed my mother. 'If you two are happy, so am I!'

"Assuring her that we were plenty happy and intended to stay that way, we next called up Jimmy Walker. He, too, was sleepy and told us it was too late to be kidding people. Billy told him it was the whole truth and nothing else but. And that we were going to be married whether he believed it or not! With that, a long 'whoopee' came over the wire.

Phyllis Haver, as the gold-digger in Chicago, demonstrated her ability to portray a definite type perfectly.

"So over we went and told our little romance to the Mayor of New York. He seemed pleased and smiled. "I'll tell you what I'll do," he said, "when you get ready to be married, you come to me and I promise to leave everything and marry you myself! Is it a bargain?"

" 'It is!' we both promised—and we are going to keep that promise."

Amazing Dreams that

By
RUTH M. TILDESLEY

What strange psychic power warns us of impending disaster in our dreams? Some of the astonishing warnings that have come to the stars in their sleep are given in this story, proving that "such stuff as dreams are made on" can sometimes save your life.

Both Monte Blue and his mother had vivid dream of his falling off a cliff. The next day his director ordered him into the very situation his dream had predicted. Raquel Torres is shown here with him.

WHEN Monte Blue was in Tahiti making White Shadows of the South Seas, word came back to Hollywood that in a tense scene he had pitched over a cliff and narrowly escaped death. Bodil Rosing, his mother-in-law, immediately rushed to her daughter and was amazed to find her quite serene.

"Oh, no, there's nothing to worry about," said the lovely Mrs. Blue, "I knew all about it when it happened. I was sitting in the garden when the vision came. I saw the cliff and the sea beneath and Monte working right on the edge; suddenly he toppled over and I screamed. Then I saw that he was caught in a bush and was quite safe."

That is exactly what happened.

But the night before the accident, Monte himself dreamed that he had missed his footing and fallen into the sea, hundreds of feet below; halfway down he had vainly clutched at a bush on a jutting rock . . . .

"The crash into the sea woke me up," recounts the big star. "The next day when I realized that we were going to work on this ledge overhanging the sea, I felt a bit nervous but kept pushing the thought from my mind. It was a dramatic scene so as soon as we got into it, I forgot everything else.

"Then it happened. My foot slipped and over I went. In the first instant of going, I remembered the dream, so made a superhuman effort to grab at a rock as I crashed down. I missed the first but the second rock had a bushy sort of thing which gave me something to hold on to, and there I hung until rescued by one of the company."

DREAMS that bring warnings are not to be disregarded, according to Bebe Daniels, who will never forget the strangest thing that ever happened to her.

"I dreamed that I was driving along a road at great speed when my car overturned in a ditch," she relates, "aside from the shock, I seemed to be all right so I picked myself up and went across the road into a house. Here I saw Wallie Reid, Harold Lockwood, Clarine Seymour, Mary Thurman, Bobbie Harron and a group of others laughing and singing and dancing.

"At that time, Wallie was still alive but the others had all passed on. I was very indignant. 'Why, the idea,' I cried, 'here you all are enjoying yourselves and we've been giving you grand funerals and feeling sorry for you!' 'Come and play with us!' was all they'd say. So presently I joined them and the dream petered out as most of them do.

"A day or so later, I went on location for a racing car sequence of my picture. Teddy Von Eltz was with me and I was speeding along as per directions, my one annoyance being my coat collar which had a tendency to fly up and obscure my vision.

"I had just shouted to Teddy to hold the thing down when I realized that this was the road of my dream. There was the ditch and—at that moment Teddy jerked at my flying collar but unfortunately stuck his finger in my eye. The other eye promptly watered in sympathy, rendering me temporarily blind.

"In an instant, I saw the significance of my dream. If I lost control of the car, we would crash into the ditch and wake up in the house of the dead! Teddy told me afterwards we were almost in the ditch when I suddenly jerked the car back from the brink into the center of the road.

WARNED the Stars

Across the street was the house of my dreams—but it was empty."

DIMINUTIVE May McAvoy also owes her life to a premonition which came to her during a dream.

"We had just moved from New York to Hollywood and I was looking forward to the pleasure of driving my own car; I felt confident that I really knew how, although there had been little opportunity for practice in crowded New York," May relates.

"No doubt driving was on my mind, for one Saturday night, I was maneuvering a car all night in my sleep. I tried going up a hill, thinking that would be good practice, and almost at the peak, I got stuck. I couldn't change my gears quick enough and the brakes wouldn't work. The car started rolling down hill and I saw doom and destruction ahead of me when suddenly the thought came to turn sidewise into the curb. That saved me but I woke up trembling with the near-encounter with death.

"The next night, just before dinner, mother asked me if I'd go down the boulevard for something she'd forgotten. I decided to take the car and a young man guest said he'd go along. He didn't know how to drive so he wasn't any help. However, we made the boulevard safely and tended to mother's errand.

"Not knowing how to turn the car on a busy boulevard, I thought I'd be clever by driving up the next street and so on home. It happened to be Whitley Avenue, a long, steep street. The thought of climbing this hill scared me for a moment but I kept on going. When we got nearly to the top, I saw the car wasn't going to make it. I tried to shift gears but wasn't expert enough; frantically I applied the brakes but they refused to hold and we began slipping backwards. The young man with me yelled to me to jump and opened the car door prepared to leap out. Quick as a flash, my dream came to me and I steered sidewise to the curb. I feel sure if the dream hadn't been sent as a warning, we should both have been killed."

A dream showed May McAvoy how to escape with her life, from an experience in a car. Now she has a firm faith in the significance of dreams.

Bebe Daniels has learned to believe in the warnings of her dreams. A terrible auto crash was narrowly avoided because of one dream.

A WARNING came to Estelle Taylor the night before she made a certain sequence in the Fox picture Honor Bound. The next day when she saw the cameraman setting up for a shot inside the prison barracks, her dream recurred to her—with a start she recognized the scene. She ran to Al Green, the director, "I can't make it there!" she cried. "The set will fall!"

Pressed for an explanation of this strange conduct, Estelle, rather shamefacedly, recounted her dream. Mr. Green laughed and tried to prove to her that the set was perfectly safe by jumping into it and jostling heavily against the walls.

The whole mass missed him by an inch—falling right where Estelle would have stood in the scene.

IF GEORGE FAWCETT had consulted a dream book when he dreamed that his wife, Percy Haswell, was in trouble, he might have been astonished at its intrepretation. Instead, he wired the theatre in Maryland where she was playing and learned that Miss Haswell had been severely bruised the night before when the balcony collapsed while she, as Juliet, sighed to Romeo that "a rose by any other name would smell as sweet."

Renee Adoree had a similar experience. "I thought I was in a high place overlooking a meadow; below me I

Daring Death to

By HENRY MACMAHON

Al Wilson, stunt flier, who accepted Hughes' challenge and crashed the Gotha in a tragic nose dive.

WANTED—Pilot to stunt, spin and crash giant German Gotha bomber. Address Howard Hughes, Producer of "Hell's Angels," Caddo Field, Van Nuys, Calif.

HOWARD HUGHES, the young producer whose air picture has set the movie industry by the ears, dropped another bombshell into Hollywood when he published this want ad.

Stunt men, seasoned fliers accustomed to risking their necks for a living, flocked to see him.

"A man couldn't go it and live!" they cried. "It can be done," retorted Hughes. "It's the climax of Hell's Angels, the biggest shot in the picture."

For two years, Hughes has been working on this great epic of the World War's birdmen. Now he wanted to show a giant German bomber shot down in flames. It had to be the real thing.

An army pilot tried, and gave up when the wings gave signs of buckling. The plane was overhauled, more smoke pots put in, other attempts made. Discouraged by failures, Howard Hughes advertised for the flier who believed he could crash the bomber and escape with his life.

Then Dick Grace, one of the most spectacular stunt fliers in the movies, saw the ad. Dick is the dare-devil who pulled off the hardest stunt of all in Wings. Taking an army plane aloft, he set its nose toward the ground and deliberately crashed headlong. If he could live through that, he could survive the crash of the bomber.

"I'll take her up for $25," Grace said, "and I'll bet $10,000 I come out alive. If I lose, you collect the bet from my insurance."

It took iron-clad nerve for Dick Grace to make that proposition. Grace had his neck broken in one stunt, and knew what it was to face death. Alice White, his one time sweetheart, was kept in continual ferment over Dick's narrow squeaks.

Howard Hughes listened to Dick's proposal, and shook his head. It was not in his code to gamble with a man for his life.

"The flier who takes that ship up isn't going to think of dying," Hughes insisted. "He's got to feel sure he can make it. I've got to find such a man."

He found him in Al Wilson.

SINCE the death of Omar Locklear in 1921, Al Wilson has been recognized as the dean of stunt men. He was the first to change from one plane to another, making the transfer without a ladder or rope. He was nearly killed a year ago, when returning from location on Hell's Angels his prop broke and his chute carried him onto the roof of the home of Norma Talmadge and Joseph Schenck.

"I'll take on the bomber, and spin it if the wings fall off!" Al declared.

The bomber was trundled out, and the motors warmed up. The clouds were low, with patches of blue sky showing through—ideal for the shots they wanted. Wilson climbed into the cockpit and strapped on the safety belt. Howard Hughes as director was going aloft, and two camera ships prepared to take off.

Then a small chap, dressed as Wilson was with leather coat and parachute on his back, wormed his way into the fuselage of the bomber. Philip Jones, twenty-nine, had installed the smoke pots in the plane, and he planned to operate them when Wilson went into the spin.

"But I'd rather fly solo on this trick," Wilson protested. "Just pull the smoke pot rings before I go. They'll work all right."

Jones had seen other mechanics fail to make those smoke pots work right. He had seen other pilots come down smoke grimed and discouraged. It was his job, and he declared he was going.

Al opened the throttle; with a roar the great two-motored Gotha, with its skull and cross bones of death painted on the fuselage, took the air.

At 7,500 feet, over the San Fernando hills, the signal came that all was ready. The attacking ship swooped and fired.

Jones started the smoke pots going. The cameras ground out the story of a Gotha bomber shot down in flames.

Wilson zoomed upward, kicked his controls, and flung the lumbering plane into the deadly nose dive.

"Suddenly I had the feeling that I could never bring her out of that spin," Wilson declared afterward. "We were flopping down at high speed, every strut groaning. She'd never straighten out. I yelled to Jones that we must jump.

"I stuck with her for two thousand feet, wondering if Jones had got clear. I didn't see him in that dizzy fall. There was no more time to waste, for at any moment the plane might cease its crazy tumbling and fall like a plummet for the earth.

"Again I called to Phil Jones that I was jumping. Slipping the safety belt, I fell forward over the nose. The lower of the two propellors missed my body by a foot.

"My goggles had become encrusted with smoke grime until I could see nothing, and the gloves stuck to my fingers. I couldn't pull the rip cord of my chute until

So This Is

Lily Damita and Joan Crawford enjoy a lively discussion between scenes on the M-G-M lot, where Lily is working in The Bridge of San Luis Rey, and Joan in Our Modern Maidens.

A GANG of workmen were tearing down old sets at the M-G-M Studio and burning the debris. As the blaze shot up, some one saw it in the studio office and cried out:

"Look, quick. What is that?"

"Don't get nervous," advised Eddie Nugent. "That's down on the De Mille set. Cecil B. just asked for a match."

A Woman In Distress

HOW would you like to be an extra girl—
And take a test for a part—

And wake up the next morning to find you are going to Africa inside of five days?

Edwina Booth, chosen by W. S. Van Dyke to play the leading feminine role in Trader Horn had this unique experience. And what do you suppose was the first thing she said when signed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the part?

"But I really haven't a thing to wear!" was her only thought.

Where There's Lap There's Hope

HE'S just one of those Sonny Boy fellows," said Mary Doran, speaking of a boulevardier.

"How's that?" asked her friends at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer round table.

"Oh, he's got that climb-up-on-my-knee complex," she replied.

Peter Pan Growing Up

BETTY BRONSON, the Peter Pan girl, who has been trying to grow up ever since her first picture and convince people that she is really a woman, has taken an apartment all by herself at the new Chateau Elysee. Mother has stayed at home and doesn't even go over to chaperon her. And Betty adores it, she tells me.

Dick's Trip

THE Richard Barthelmess' had a glorious time in Mexico City. They were dined and feted by the Ambassador Morrows, met the future Mrs. Lindbergh and what have you. Why, Dick even went to a bull fight dressed in a matador's costume. What everyone wants to know now, is when he'll make a bull fight picture.

When they came back the town expected that Mrs. Barthelmess would come out of her place by the home fireside and, at least, allow her picture to be taken with her husband. But she fooled them. Not one snapshot can be secured of this woman for publicity purposes.

Tool Good To Be True

MERVYN LeROY is stealing the thunder of the efficiency expert. He suggests that carpenters on sound stages have paint brushes on the other end of their hammers, so that when the signal comes for a "take" they can reverse their tools and go on working.

Erin-Go-Brogue

COLLEEN MOORE and her leading man, James Hall, have "gone Irish" for their next picture together, Smiling Irish Eyes. "The top of the mornin' to you, Mister Hall," Colleen calls sweetly when he comes on the set and James always has a b-roguish answer on the tip of his tongue. Colleen is learning to imitate her grandmother, Mrs. Mary Moylan Kelly, who was born in old Erin; while James has cultivated an acquaintance of his who speaks with a true Irish brogue. The talkies are responsible for a great deal.

An All-Chokie

GEORGE K. ARTHUR is under the care of an osteopath as a result of the choking inflicted on him during some scenes in China Bound, with Karl Dane as the chokee. The story demanded that Arthur be choked about a dozen times by the Danish giant.

A punch can easily be faked and yet appear as a healthy punch to the camera—but just try faking a choking scene once and see where it will get you.

On With the Dance

IN PRIVATE life, William Haines never goes to dances and actually didn't know any of the steps until he began work in his latest picture in which he plays a festive gob. He had to do the "varsity drag" with Anita Page, and as a result he had a dancing maestro as his companion, night and day, until he got the hang of it.

Sally Goes Courting

THE poor little rich girl has a hard time of it in Hollywood. Now comes Sally Phipps into court in Los Angeles petitioning for a new guardian and charging that her step-father has squandered or taken from her all her earnings. Sally goes on record that she will always love and contribute to the support of her mother, however, All gold does not glitter in Hollywood. It often brings heartaches instead of happiness.

The Net Gain

TWO dozen perfectly good champagne glasses were smashed by pretty Anita Page in a temper fit which she was staging for the lens recently, before an ingenious property man devised a net similar to those used for catching butterflies, in which he snagged the glasses out of the air when they fell outside the range of the camera.

Those What-you-ma-call-its

THE machinery for the talkies is far in advance of new terms with which to designate it. One technician called to another recently on the Al Jolson set:

"Give me that thing-a-ma-bob to fit on the front of this thing-a-ma-jig."

And he wondered what the bystanders were tittering about.

Time Enough for Moore

COLLEEN MOORE can always be sure of the time of day and will need another excuse, if she is late to a set in the future. In her new home at Bel-Air are installed seventeen timepieces of various makes and designs. Wherever you go on the estate, you find one looking at you. There is even one hanging over the swimming pool.

Omitting Laura

AN AGILE press writer at Universal conceived a gag for Laura La Plante, and wrote up a nice little story about Laura's excitement when she made her first picture. The story ran that she took all the neighbors down to the preview to show off and when the picture was shown there wasn't a shot of her. The cutting had done away with Miss Laura.

When the press woman showed Laura the story in print, Laura gasped. "But it's true! I worked three weeks in Love and took twenty-four people to see the first showing. When there wasn't one scene with me in it, I just had to become a star to live down the fun they made of me. But how did you know it?"

Would that all press agents were so lucky!

We'll See

MARY PHILBIN was seen at the opera with a tall, good-looking non-professional man. In fact she's been seen with the same Hollywood outsider at several places. But she is still wearing the huge solitaire which Paul Kohner left her when he departed for Europe. Paul is expected back by the end of the summer, then we'll get the low-down on this engagement.

Ronald's Disguise

RONALD COLMAN always grows a mustache between pictures so he can take his vacations incognito. When he finishes Bull Dog Drummond he's sneaking away to the country and he claims he's going to stay long enough this time to grow two mustaches!

Her Guess

DOROTHY HERZOG, newspaper writer, was walking across the United Artists lot with Sam Goldwyn. Suddenly a cannon in the Colman lot thundered forth.

"My God!" said Dorothy, stopping short. "Someone is actually saying 'No' to you, Sam Goldwyn!"

And Sam laughed the loudest!

A Local Tribute

BESSIE LOVE has been made a pal of The Breakfast Club as a local reward for her work in The Broadway Melody. Claire Windsor and Billie Dove are already pals of this man's organization.

Too Busy

AFTER waiting for three years for her husband to take time enough off to accompany her, Mrs. C. B. De Mille gave up and departed for a three months tour of Europe with her sister, Rebecca Adams. But hubby has promised to make the Orient after he has made one more picture.

Speaking of Operations

KAY JOHNSON, the New York stage actress whom C. B. De Mille imported from New York to play the lead in Dynamite, is causing a three weeks' delay in the production. She suffered an attack of appendicitis on Sunday which developed rapidly and turned into peritonitis on Tuesday. But it's an ill wind, you know. She looked so pretty in bed with her long hair and pallor that they've taken dozens of publicity stills of her. They figure the publicity should almost pay for the delay in the picture.

In Demand

CONRAD NAGEL is playing simultaneously in four pictures—Redemption with John Gilbert; Dynamite with C. B. De Mille; M-G-M's big special review featuring every stage star and circus performer and movie actress they can get and a series of one-act sketches. If you have a voice there's no danger of being out of work under these talking conditions.

He'll Get By

EDDIE NUGENT wants to be sure he gets by in the talkies. He's taking tests playing on the flute, dancing, singing, dialoguing, clowning and slapsticking.

"I don't know where I'll land but some of these tests are sure to find me a corner," he tells us. Remember, he's the boy who slipped into an M-G-M contract from prop boy when he took a fall accidentally before the camera that made everyone laugh so hard that he repeated it on purpose and was even more funny.

A Problem Overhead

AEROPLANES are really causing concern among the directors and producers because they cannot take talkies when one circles above a studio. The government has been asked to assist and is trying to zone the studio area. One stopped the filming of Dynamite the other day and George Bickford piped up, "Well, there's one fellow even you can't direct, Mr. De Mille."

You don't know C. B., George. He's been made chairman of the committee to do away with the menace.

Colleen's Pet

COLLEEN MOORE has a new pet. It's a baby pig, named Alloyseus hired as one of the animals in Smiling Irish Eyes. Piggie took such an instantaneous liking to Colleen that she can't get away from it. Drop into the First National lot any day and you'll find it trailing devotedly along behind her—even into the lunch room where it settles at her feet and waits contentedly until she has finished.

How Buddy Feels About It

GOING to an opening with Buddy Rogers in the party is an experience. He was stopped seventy-two times to and from the entrance of Carthay Circle theatre at The Iron Mask to sign books, hats (ladies', gentlemen's and children's), shirt cuffs and what have you.

Two turtles straining at the leash just before the start of a thrilling race. Who wouldn't be determined to win with such fair backers as Raquel Torres and Leila Hyams?

Finally, we asked if he didn't get awfully tired of it all.

"Well, to be honest, I get perturbed if they do and perturbed if they don't. So what can you do about it?"

Comment from the Audience

RAYMOND HATTON is a season seat subscriber for the boxing bouts at the Hollywood Legion Stadium where the film colony foregathers every Friday night.

Ray has heard many wisecracks from the bleacherites during his long attendance there but he claims the darb of them all was on a recent Friday night.

The stadium was in utter darkness, the only light being, naturally, on the boxers in the ring.

They were a pair of ham and eggers and were doing a waltz to the disgust of the crowd. For three rounds not a blow had been struck.

As the fourth round opened and they were floundering around a shrill voice from the darkness came:

"For God's sake, turn on the lights—we want to read!"

Mistaken Identity

BILLY JOY, brother of Leatrice, far-famed for his wit and geniality, attended a reception recently. Now Billy knows them all and they all know him but sometimes he gets the names mixed.

He called his host over to meet a certain girl, saying in his most gracious manner, "I would like to have you know Miss Ethlyn Claire."

The girl looked surprised, then laughed. "Why shame on you, Billy. I am Sharon Lynn."

Gag Me If You Have Heard This

A "GAG MAN" is the bane of any assistant's life. They are always causing him a lot of grief by their gags which call for material not in the script or shooting schedule.

A certain gag man rushed up to the director. "I have it! It's a wow. Turn on the water—he thinks it's the dog. He kicks the dog—gee, ain't that a pip? That's new, too."

The director looked to his assistant for approval.

"Yeh," said that person, "that is new. If Mack Sennett had patented that gag twenty years ago he would have made a fortune."

Greta Garbo, gazing at her own reflection in the mirror of her dressing table, finds reason to pause.

A Star's Stripes

RUTH ROLAND was guest of honor at a reception in San Francisco. Some admirer not knowing just what to say to Ruth noticed the great number of bracelets she was wearing.

"My, what a lovely collection of bracelets, Miss Roland."

"Those aren't bracelets, they're service stripes—one for each year in pictures."

Ruth Elder looks on while Bobbie Trout swings the bottle against the side of the plane in a dedication ceremony marking the opening of a new airplane service between Los Angeles and San Diego.

His Verdict

BILL MIZNER, America's playboy, was dining after midnight in Henry's where film folk foregather.

It was a day or two prior to the late Jack Conway leaving Hollywood for New York City after a more or less heartbreaking experience in the writing end of the film industry.

At a table across from them was seated a girl with a severe boy bob, ultra-severe mannish clothes and decidedly male mannerisms.

Bill glanced at the girl many times and finally said to Jack:

"What would you call that, Jack? Man or woman, boy or girl?"

Jack took one look, picked up his coffee cup and briefly said:

"Non-sextarian, Bill."

A Queen Without A Title

ONE titled person visiting in Hollywood has dropped her title because of the many fake titles hereabouts. She is Baroness Fern Andra, American girl well known abroad as an English and German screen star. While in Hollywood she is known simply as Fern Andra. She acquired the title by marriage in Germany.

¶ Three Reasons Why the Sun Sets in the West

No, this is not a geography lesson, although it started out that way. Properly, it's 'rithmetic, and we'll begin with some figures. First there is Sally Eilers. Divided by Alice White, the third is Marion Byron, and they are drawing interest to First National's forthcoming Broadway Babies.

May Be His Own Father

BEN LYON thinks that if they don't hurry up and finish Hell's Angels in which he is co-starred with James Hall and Greta Nissen, he will soon be able to play his own father in the picture. The story of the air was started more than a year ago and up to date Howard Hughes, youthful president of the Caddo Company is well on his way to investing $3,000,000 in the air gigantic.

Introducing Playwright

IT IS embarrassing, to say the least, to meet a friend and suddenly forget his name. This happened to Mary Nolan at the entrance of the Cocoanut Grove at the Ambassador one night not long ago. Mary met and recognized Bayard Veiller, the author of The Trial of Mary Dugan. She was with a group of friends and wanted to introduce him but forgot his name.

"Folks, meet the father of Mary Dugan," she announced.

Invitation

AND then there is the story they tell in Hollywood of the youthful film star, of feminine persuasion, who learned that her co-worker, Florence Vidor, had arrived on the coast with her new husband.

The star was throwing a little party at her Beverly Hills home and some of her guests wanted to dance.

An idea, something new for her, entered her fluffy head; she raced to the telephone, called up the Vidor establishment, got the beautiful Florence on the phone, congratulated her on her marriage, invited her to "come over" and then pulled a classic.

"Bring your husband with you," she pleaded, "and have him bring his fiddle, we want to dance."

Jascha Heifitz, in case you do not know, is the name of the new Vidor husband.

His usual stipend for concerts is $3,500 per concert.

What About Alice?

ALICE WHITE wants to know if a three-year-old marriage license is any good. She has one. Can anyone answer this question for Alice?

Yet in the same breath she says she hasn't been out in six months, not since her new contract and declares, "If I can save enough money I will never marry!" Well, she bought her first bonds last week and now she's purchasing a big car done in blue and is hunting for a German chauffeur with a mustache.

What To Do

SPEAKING of Laura Hope Crewes, the New York stage actress who was brought to Hollywood to train Norma Talmadge and Gilbert Roland for the talkies—she bought a new Ford upon her arrival. But three weeks after its purchase the car stopped in the center of Hollywood boulevard. Nothing would encourage it to sputter. A car in the rear pushed her to the garage.

"This is a new car! I can't understand it. It just refused to go. What can I do about it?" she demanded.

After looking it over, the mechanic replied, "You might give it some gas, some oil and some water. It doesn't seem to have a drop of any of them at the present!"

No Yes Man

UPON Lily Damita's recent personal appearance tour, she chanced to be riding in a private automobile in New York City. The traffic officer motioned the car forward then ordered it to stop. Lily was indignant. She jumped to her feet and shouted:

"You bad mans! Why you say 'yes'—then 'no'? In Hollywood we do not do dees ting."

That's right, Lily, there's no place like Hollywood.

Her Opinion

IRVING CUMMINGS was making a picture which called for a speakeasy scene and a number of girls were engaged as atmosphere.

Sitting on the side lines waiting to be called two of them began to dish a little dirt about Hollywood in general.

Eventually one chanced to comment on a certain character player of uncertain age.

"They tell me," said the blondine, "that she is going to have her face lifted."

And the Titian-haired one replied:

"My Gawd! If I had a pan like hers I'd let it lay!"

Ja wohl, English ist so Getalket

CAMILLA is all excited about learning perfect English due to the talkies. She won't even allow her Berlin maid to speak German to her. She is teaching Helena English.

It was a cold day recently when the maid started out for her shopping.

"You must wear your brown cape, Helena! It's freezing," Camilla ordered.

"No, Miss Horn. I cannot. I selded it!"

"Can't you ever learn to talk good English, Helena? You don't say you selded it. You say you solded it. Please remember what I tell you in English!"

Buddy Gets Raise

CHARLES (BUDDY) ROGERS has at last been given a new contract by Famous Players Lasky. He made three starring pictures on the old salary of $300 a week with bit players receiving as high as a thousand in the same production. He has celebrated his good fortune by leaving his eighteen-dollar-a-week board and room place with friends and taking an elegant apartment in the Chateau Elysee, the new ninety-

Mr. Sherwood's views will be a monthly feature of SCREEN SECRETS henceforth.

Confession

HAVING been a motion picture critic since the days when Theda Bara started to shoot off the sparks that finally ignited Flaming Youth, I naturally ought to know a lot about the private lives of the cinema stars. But I don't.

The only interesting bit of information I ever picked up about any of them was that Pola Negri used to love a man who smoked a pipe. I never did find out, however, if he was the one that Pola actually married.

My attention has always been fixed on pictures rather than on those who make them. My education has been gathered in the theatres rather than in the studios.

Once, it is true, I did take a trip to Hollywood, in the hope that I might discover some of the alluring immorality which had been described so glowingly in the newspapers. I was disappointed. I looked everywhere, hopefully, but I couldn't find any traces of the widely-advertised vice.

So I returned to my own home town, New York, and have remained there ever since. I have learned that I don't have to go three thousand miles across the continent to discover immorality. I can find plenty of it, and much better, too, just around the corner.

A Warning

CONSEQUENTLY, I warn you not to expect any revelations of spicy scandal in this article, or any other article that I may write. There may be plenty of hot news from Hollywood—but I get it only second-hand, as you yourself do.

All I know is what I see on the screen. The only rumors I ever hear come out of loud speakers.

Which reminds me: in former times, when kind friends learned that I had been seeing five or six pictures a week for years and years, they would say to me, "I should think the strain would ruin your eyes."

Now their most frequent remark is, "How do your ears stand it?"

What Are They Coming To?

MANY people have observed that the talking pictures will revolutionize the style of entertainment on the screen, but few have guessed the extent to which that revolution will be carried.

Here is a startling evidence of originality from The Broadway Melody, the best (to date) of all the gabbies:

The hero (played by Charles King) learns that his girl friend (Anita Page) is about to succumb to one of those despicable villains who are known as "millionaire clubmen." The villain has bribed her with diamond bracelets, town cars and luxurious apartments, until she is ready to give in.

The hero dashes to the villain's home knowing that the girl is there; he is determined to rescue her from a fate worse than death. The noble fellow attacks the villain with both fists, but the millionaire clubman knocks him cold. Then, as an additional insult, the hero is picked up and thrown ignominiously out of the villain's residence, and lands outside in a highly undignified position.

The heroine runs after him and tries to restore him to consciousness.

"Darling," she sobs, "are you hurt?"

He blinks at her out of a rapidly swelling and blackening eye.

"What do you think?" he inquires, bitterly.

If the invention of the Movietone means that heroes are going to come out second best in their fights with villains, then the revolution will be a serious one.

The next thing you know, they'll be showing us a picture in which the United States Marines fail to arrive on time.

by ROBERT E. SHERWOOD

Lon May Sit on Your Lap!

ONE of the many effective episodes in The Broadway Melody is a reproduction of a scene from a musical show, with singers, dancers, chorus girls, etc. It is photographed in Technicolor—this being the first time, so far as I know, that talk and color have been combined on the screen.

Eventually, all pictures will be all-talking and all-color. Add to that stereopticon photography (which is now being perfected) and the screen will be completely realistic.

Stereopticon photography is perhaps the most sensational invention of them all. It will eliminate the flatness of the screen. It will give the effect that the characters in the picture are actually in the same room with the audience.

Imagine what a thrill it will be to see Lon Chaney advance toward you and then sit down in your lap!

D. W. and Lupe

YOU should make it a point to see David Wark Griffith's picture Lady of the Pavements. It is mostly in silent form, though equipped with a sound accompaniment, and it provides excellent entertainment of a soothingly romantic nature.

Here and there it bursts forth into conversation and song—and in these audible episodes Mr. Griffith proves that he knows a lot more about talking pictures than do most of the younger directors. In fact, the Movietone seems to have rejuvenated him; it has inspired him with new ideas.

The star of Lady of the Pavements is Lupe Velez—and if anyone heretofore has doubted the talents of this peppery little Mexican actress, let him see her now and apologize. She is not far short of marvelous.

America's Sweetheart

SPEAKING of alluring young ladies (as who isn't?), a vast number of Mary Pickford's aging admirers are due to receive a terrible shock when they see and hear her in Coquette.

Mary has abandoned more than her curls. She has cast overboard her traditionally pure juvenility. She is now stepping out as a rival of Clara Bow, Alice White and all the other lip-sticked but not kiss-proof flappers. I venture the guess that she will get away with is beautifully.

Mary's husband is also undergoing a change. In the last half of The Iron Mask Doug Fairbanks appears as a gray-haired D'Artagnan. He is comparatively dignified and deliberate in his actions. When he jumps from a high window, and lands on the cobble-stones below, he fails to bounce with the old resiliency.

Perhaps Doug realizes that the days of the strenuous romantic melodramas are over. Even if they are, Doug himself needn't worry. When he stops being an agile acrobat, he will still be a grand actor.

As you undoubtedly know, The Iron Mask is a sequel to The Three Musketeers, in which Doug appeared eight years ago. It was the first of his really big productions, and was followed by such memorable triumphs as Robin Hood, The Thief of Bagdad and The Black Pirate.

Aside from Doug himself, there are five veterans of The Three Musketeers who re-appear in their old roles in The Iron Mask. They are Marguerite de la Motte, Nigel de Brulier, Lon Poff, Charles Stevens and Leon Barry.

Among those of the original cast who subsequently became famous were Adolphe Menjou and Barbara La Marr. Both of them played small parts in The Three Musketeers.

Hearts in Dixie

IT ISN'T easy to predict whether or not Hearts in Dixie will have a wide appeal for movie audiences. It is a picture of plantation life in the old South, acted almost entirely by negroes. Some of it is hilariously funny, some of it is tuneful, but most of it is excruciatingly sad. It is as uncompromising in its dismalness as though it were concerned with Russians under the oppressive rule of the Czars.

Those who fail to see Hearts in Dixie will miss one of the most deliciously comic performances in the history of the screen. It is contributed by a thin, ultra-black young man named Stepin Fetchit. Mr. Fetchit appears as an appallingly lazy, good-for-nothing, no 'count coon, and it is what he doesn't do rather than what he does that makes him worth travelling miles to see.

Incidentally, Hearts in Dixie is all-dialogue, punctuated with numerous negro spirituals, dances and steamboat whistles.

Those Foreigners

A leading topic of discussion among film fans is, "Will the talkies ruin the foreign stars?" I hear that Emil Jannings has flatly refused to speak from the screen and is going home to Germany when his present contract expires next fall. Lupe Velez, of course, has already tried out her accent on the Movietone, and appears to be safe. The fate of Vilma Banky, Ramon Novarro, Dolores Del Rio, Renee Adoree and other imported products is still in doubt.

What about Greta Garbo (otherwise known as "The Clinging Fool")? It is terrible to think of her speaking out with a Swedish accent, "Ay bane yust a goot girl."

Of course, some of the so-called "foreign" stars (I could name several of them, but won't) will turn out to have rich Kansas accents.

Taking Her Time

Billie Dove tells of the demands of stardom, and explains how she manages to crowd her daily activities into twenty-four hours—a real feat.

By DOROTHY SPENSLEY

THE hours I spent with thee, dear heart . . ." Billie Dove might well sing to the tune of The Rosary, adoringly, and in her most lyric tones at the feet of her husband, Irvin Willat, "are as nothing compared to those I must spend in upholding the estate of stardom."

Now with you and me it's different. Life is just a routine of tumbling from bed, bathing, brushing our teeth and combing our hair. We eat our breakfasts blissfully undisturbed by ringing telephone and prosaically wend our ways to the office, the shop, the factory, the mill. We lunch, we work, we dine, we dance, we bed.

But a motion picture star—a motion picture actress—is life so easy for her? How much private life is she privileged to when doting millions want autographed photographs, interviews, radio talks, personal appearances and new films? How much free time has she after the schedule of endless duties is cut, pie shape, from the circle that makes twenty-four hours?

Billie Dove is going to tell us all about it. Look at Billie, here, smiling for you. Sitting on an apple green divan in the apple green luxury of her new dressing suit. Look at the crinkled brass of her bowl-shaped new lamp, with its chiffon-layered shade. Look at the little ash trays of rose-colored Venetian glass, hanging like delicatessen displays on the gilded stand. Look at the huge clump of rhododendron waxy and pink and flowering like a tropical plant, that Irvin Willat sent her.

Billie Dove must remember the clock even when snatching a moment's relaxation between her countless duties.

Look at Billie, herself, waiting for you, in a woolen suit that has plaits in the skirt and is the color of marrons. And don't you love them? With carnelians about her throat. Her throat—it's white and like a column. And with carnelians and silver about her small and supple

Fortunately, Billie admits, her husband who is a director, and heaven knows where he can find time to do everything, but some men are clever, tends carefully to her business matters. He sees that the apartment house in which they are joint owners has a good, capable, conscientious manager and that the tenants don't walk off with the cornice in memory of their fair and famous landlady. And then there are other matters of stocks and bonds and things of which you and I must plead ignorance. And don't you dare ask Billie if she buys on margin.

That leaves a span of twenty-four hours into which Billie must crowd dress fittings of frocks for personal and studio wear, tests of hair and voice and costume, story conferences, interviews, personal appearances, lunches, teas, dinners, dances. In each swiftly moving day she must pose for photographs, answer fan mail, devote some time to painting, reading, swimming; study French lessons, endorse guaranteed products, have her portrait painted or sketched, appear at benefits, interview servants, visit well friends and ill as well as the children's ward at the Hollywood Hospital. Recently she has beeen furnishing her new three-room dressing suite.

"I try to run our home, too . . . shopping for meats and vegetables and arranging the table.

"When I am working in a picture I usually arise at about six forty-five. I like to leave the house for the studio about eight or sometimes before. That gives me an hour and a quarter to bathe, breakfast, put on my make-up and hastily take another look at my lines.

"Talkies have taken up much of the little leisure we had. Before I have always found odd moments that I could convert into pleasures, or apply to things that I really wanted to do, but not any more. I spend all mv spare time memorizing lines. I find myself repeating them eternally; so much, in fact, that I took to doing needlepoint on the set, just to ease my mind and still the circle of lines it was performing. I finished one footstool cover for my mother during the making of Careers and immediately started on one for Mr. Willat's mother, a dear old person of seventy-six who lives in Florida.

Billie Dove with James Montgomery Flagg and a sketch of her drawn by this famous artist—if only all her time could be spent as pleasantly!

"The best time to learn lines, I have found, is just before you retire. I usually lie in bed and read them over. No matter if I am horribly tired from a hard day's work and fall into bed immediately after dinner, I read my lines and they seem to sink into the subconscious, with the result that in the morning they are mine for good, and need but a bit of polishing.

"I leave the house just before eight, reach the studio about eight-thirty and finish my make-up, after which I undress and get into my picture costume. Then I give a fleeting look to my lines again. I am on the set from nine until twelve or one o'clock, depending entirely upon the progress of the work. Our lunch hour is not an hour, but usually about forty-five minutes. I have just time to grab a bite of food, because if I haven't a dress fitting, there is an interview or photographs to be made, or some pictures autographed."

That day Billie had given three interviews. In the good old days, B. C. (Before Chin-ema) is was easy for the press to sit idly on the set and pick up snatches of conversation with the victim between scenes. Because of the utter silence and the certain secrecy surrounding the making of talking pictures, those days are gone forever.

"Shooting," continued Billie, and aren't you glad, now, that you came? "is finished about six or six-thirty and then we troop to the projection room to see hasty copies of film shot that day. Sometimes I crowd a dress fitting in after the rushes. If we are not to work

50 of $1.00	-	-	$50.00
110 Prizes	—		$1,500.00

Follow These Simple Rules:

1. SCREEN SECRETS will award $1,500 in cash prizes, as listed, for the correct assembly of the four puzzle pictures of the contest, appearing in the April, May, June and July issues of SCREEN SECRETS; for the neatest presentation of the puzzles; and for the best brief biography, told in one hundred words or less, on one star in each of the four groups.

2. Contest began with the publication of puzzle No. 1 in the April issue of SCREEN SECRETS, and continues through the May, June and July issues of the magazine.

3. Contestants must keep all puzzles until publication of final set in July SCREEN SECRETS. Contest closes July 15, 1929. Anyone may compete except Fawcett Publications employees and their families.

4. There are no entry fees, and contestants need not purchase SCREEN SECRETS to compete. Copies may be inspected at public libraries, and it is permissible to trace the puzzles on plain paper.

5. All entries must be sent first-class mail, prepaid. None will be returned.

6. The verdict of the judges will be final.

7. Duplicate prizes will be given tying contestants.

8. Send your entry to Cut Puzzle Editor, SCREEN SECRETS Magazine, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Nils Asther's Dream Girl

Nils Asther would eagerly wed his ideal girl—if he could find her; in this article he tells exactly what sort of woman could bring him marital bliss.

By BOB MOAK

Nils Asther's handsome features are combined with a thoughtful intelligence that has analyzed matrimony and women.

SOMEWHERE along America's great Main street lives Nils Asther's dream girl. Someday, if her whereabouts are revealed to him, she may become Nils' bride.

Nils has seen her and talked with her often—in his dreams. He has read her soul. He knows her innermost thoughts.

But he does not know her name, or where to find her! Perhaps you can help this famous screen Romeo to locate his ideal!

Nils is able to aid you with many clues to her identity:

She is not an actress, he says.

She is not necessarily beautiful.

She is a good cook, and enjoys preparing meals of plain, wholesome food.

She is not socially ambitious.

She is interested in music, good books, and enjoys motor trips and mountain hikes.

She has an eye for color harmonies and interior decoration, but does not go in for fads.

Her temper is not of the violent type, but, on the other hand, she is not passively submissive to his every whim.

She has an individuality of her own, but respects Nils' right to his likes and dislikes.

She is not of a jealous nature.

She does not suffer from an inferiority complex because of Nils' career.

So there you have the dream girl, as pictured by Nils himself. Perhaps she is your sister! Possibly she is the girl next door! But wherever she lives, you know her. Why not send Nils her name and address!

I HAD dined with Nils in his home high up in the hills overlooking Hollywood. We had discussed Shakespeare and Kipling, America and Sweden, the stage and the cinema. We were sipping our coffee before the open fire in the living room when I asked Nils why he did not marry.

"Experience has taught me that marriage is something that one must not rush into," he replied. "I am waiting for the girl to come along. She is the ideal wife. I call her my dream girl."

"And by experience, you mean . . . ?" Nils sensed the question that was coming. He did not permit me to finish.

"When I was sixteen years old, and had attained my first success on the stage in Sweden, I fell in love with an actress. We were married. But our romance was short-lived.

"It was a mistake," Nils went on. "Our home was a theatre; our love dramatized. All day long she wanted me to tell her how much I loved her. I couldn't. It sounded so cheap and theatrical. It brought a swift end to what might have been our happiness."

It was hard to believe that there lived a girl who could not be happy with this big-hearted, handsome Swede who has won for himself a place as one of the great lovers of the silversheet, but perhaps Nils' story of this wrecked hope will throw a different light on Nils among his fellow members of the cinema colony where he is looked upon as something of a mystery.

Nils Asther is aloof, preferring solitude to Hollywood's social whirl — but he favors marriage.

The MURDER of

By
HARRY CARR

¶ Five people were sent to prison for killing Tom Kerrick, film cowboy.

¶ Yet no one, to this day, knows who murdered him!

¶ Here are the facts. Can you deduce the motive and the name of the murderer?

Three cards that spelled tragedy for Tom Kerrick when fate cut the deck. Joe Hunt, Tom's cowboy buddy, wanted to throw a party, to celebrate his arrival in Hollywood. Sarah Kerrick, Tom's wife, was held on suspicion, along with Anita Davis, pretty film actress, when the wild party ended with the shots that snuffed out Tom's life.

THIS never would have happened if Mr. Joe Hunt had not drawn a full house from a pair of deuces.

It led to one of the most singular situations ever produced by an American court. Five people sent to prison for killing Tom Kerrick; and not one of them knowing who killed Kerrick. The police still as much in the dark as the night they found Kerrick dead on the kitchen floor with a bullet in his heart.

The story begins a long way back.

Tom Kerrick and Joe Hunt were cowpunchers. They were the kind of cow men who had a lofty scorn for rodeo riders and fancy rope twisters. They called themselves stock men; and they had chased the lowing kine over the hills and through the chaparral on every big range in the southwest. They shot from the hip and fanned the hammer.

After some years palling together on the ranges, something astonishing happened. Tom fell in love. And like the colored lady who mourned when she mourned, when Tom loved he loved.

The lady of his unaccustomed affections was a young lady named Sarah. She was a ranch girl herself. She could sit straddle of any horse that ever bucked and keep on sitting. Also she could cut up considerable foolishness in the way of loops that one jumped through when she had a lasso in her hands.

Joe gave up Tom as a lost soul. He never would have thought it of him. But he conceded, with cold dignity, that the next thing that happened when you fell in love with a gal, why you married her.

That sounded reasonable to Tom. Wherefore he married Sarah.

Marriage, it seems, is a very complicated business. When you get married you can't go sleeping around in bunk houses—or curled up in a pancho out on the lonely prairie. You got a wife; and now what are you going to do with her?

Sarah, being a girl of aggressive ideas, settled that problem very promptly. She and Tom would go to Hollywood and be motion picture cow people.

After all the gun fights Tom had been in down on the border, with fractious Mexicans and saloon champions, it seems ironical that he was to die with his boots on in a Hollywood bungalow. But that's the way it worked out.

He and Sarah set out for the film city and soon were riding horses that Tom secretly scorned as tame cows in front of the camera; and shooting blank cartridges at motion picture villains. They got along fine and had a swell time—as Tom occasionally confided in Joe—when he managed to scribble out a short and painful letter to him.

Whether Joe secretly envied them and got kind of hankering for Hollywood himself I don't know.

But anyhow, that night down in Arizona, the cards came his way. He struck one of those spells where he couldn't lose. He filled from a pair of deuces; and that settled it. His opponents stalked solemnly and sadly out into the night and Joe tried to find pockets enough to hold the swag. As far as he could see, he had won enough to pay off the French national debt, but he had no intention of doing so. He was going to Hollywood.

Joe got himself all fixed up in some new store clothes and mounted a bus. Other passengers were amused or alarmed, according to their experience, at the way Joe amused himself on the long tedious journey across the desert. He sat on a front seat and popped everything he saw with his 45 Colts. He cracked all the pop bottles between Tucson and Hollywood and the jack rabbits still probably speak of it as "the night of tears."

For two cents, Joe would have turned and sneaked out of town after his first morning in Hollywood. There were so many autos tearing up and down the streets that they scared him to death. He stopped several people and asked them where Tom Kerrick lived; but nobody seemed to know. Seemed gol darn unneighborly to Joe.

Somehow or other he got on the track of Tom. It was well on into the evening when he finally stumped up on Tom's front porch and hammered on the door. Sarah opened the door herself.

After the first greetings were over, Joe said bashfully that he would like to give a party; and wanted to know if Sarah couldn't kinda steer the thing for him.

Sarah, having by this time learned the ropes pretty well, said promptly she would go over to the bootlegger's and get a quart.

"Quart," gasped Joe—genuinely shocked—"what'd we do with a quart? Here, take this and git a gallon to start with and tell the feller we'll be over after more." And he handed Sarah a roll with which she could have bought a distillery.

Sarah came back with a gallon—and something that intoxicated Joe much more than would have a barrel. A young lady. A motion picture young lady. She looked like the beautiful cigarette pictures that Joe had hoarded. She had the beautifulest red lips and wavy hair. Joe was simply stricken dumb. He had to fall back on the gallon.

IT WAS midnight when Sarah decided that what they needed was re-enforcements to make it a regular party.

She went to the telephone and rang up Henry Isabel. He was a cowboy who had ridden the range with Tom and Joe.

Henry was a little dubious about starting to a party at half an hour past midnight. He said he had to go to work at the studio at six a. m. with a company that was starting on location.

He finally yielded, however, and said he would come and bring Anita Davis.

They blew in some time in the early hour of the morning—a little disheveled but enthusiastic.

If Joe was dismayed by the loveliness of Iris Burns, one sight of Anita Davis knocked him for a loop. She was a blond.

Sarah started to pour a glass of hard liquor for them in one of her little whiskey glasses; but Joe interfered. He had been against those funny-looking glass thimbles from the first. A blond like this Sheba deserved the honor of a real drink. He swept Sarah aside and poured a golden stream into some jelly glasses that he found.

"We bin drinking quite some," he explained. "You'd oughta catch up."

The events at Joe's party from that time became very hazy.

The only clear and outstanding event is that just before sunrise a call came to the Hollywood police station that a dead man was over at Tom Kerrick's. And the "fast wagon" went whirling down the quiet streets to the bungalow.

What they found was this:

Tom Kerrick was lying on the kitchen floor. Near him lay Joe Hunt. The police didn't know which was the dead one. It was impossible to rouse either one. A little trickling stream of blood on the floor under Tom showed them. Joe was only drunk.

Tom Kerrick was a cowpuncher who "went Hollywood." With Hoot Gibson, he rode hell-bent through many a thrilling horse opera of the films, and in the end he died with his boots on, killed with a six-gun. But police don't yet know who pulled the trigger.

Mrs. Kerrick was weeping wildly. Iris was enjoying a session of hysterics. Henry Isabel was sitting in an automobile on the curb, very drunk and very dignified. Anita was quite composed.

On the kitchen floor, near the body of Kerrick, was a big cowboy revolver. The police smelled the muzzle; opened the cylinder. One shot had been fired.

The preliminary inquiries were unsatisfactory; so the police hustled them into the wagon and took them all to jail.

For the next week, they were given the third degree. It was a very hard process for Joe to endure. He did not know that any white man was expected to hear himself called such things without somebody shooting.

They got nothing out of Joe. He said with the utmost candor that all he remembered was getting drunk; getting drunk and going to sleep with blissful dreams of blonds and ladies with scarlet lips.

Crooning a love song in Hearts in Dixie, Stepin Fetchit proved a sensation. His shuffling walk brought laughs in Show Boat. Now he's a star in Negro comedies.

A Shining Star from Dixie

Hollywood is going Dixie—the latest Colored recruit to fame is Stepin Fetchit, a natural born comedian who stands out "like a black shoe in a snowdrift" in the new Negro films.

NO WONDER this happy-go-lucky colored boy is stepping to the front in Hollywood's sudden flair for Negro pictures—Stepin Fetchit was named after a race horse!

Stepin is riding joyfully on the crest of a rising tide of color now flooding the talkies, and his funny walk, lazy manner of easing his tired feet, and other simple mannerisms have caused more laudatory comment from the fans than any number of complicated humor stunts.

By contract, Stepin has a luxuriously appointed dressing room on the Fox lot, the respect of movie moguls, and lots of money. It's just one of Hollywood's magic twists that brought Stepin from the everglades of Florida to fame and fortune.

Asked how he came by his name, Stepin explained with some pride.

"I once knew a thoroughbred race horse called 'Step and Fetch It'" he said. "I curried and fed and washed that horse for his owner, and that horse sure did have an influence on me.

"Ever see a proud-steppin' racer, slicked up like a flash of sunlight, stamping at the post? Maybe you can understand why I admired 'Step and Fetch It.'"

Stepin eased back and rested his feet with a sigh. "I decided that a man couldn't have a better example than that horse. He was a fighter, and a winner. So I got to figuring, and decided to use his name. Of course, I already had a perfectly good name. Abraham Lincoln Perry, it was. But somehow, that horse meant more to me than Abe Lincoln, 'cause he was so close to me."

Jes' restin' is "Step's" favorite sport. But he got his name from a fast race horse.

So the quaint name of Stepin Fetchit came to grace the casts of In Old Kentucky, Show Boat, The Ghost Talks, Hearts in Dixie, and other popular Negro films.

IN APPEARANCE, "Step," as he is called about the lot, is no different from the orthodox Dixie variet . When he is not on the set working, he usually is to be found sprawled beneath the scorching rays of a California sun, sleeping the sleep of the seven sleepers of old. Nor does he suffer any evil effects therefrom.

Mr. Fetchit's locomotion is native and heavy; his enunciation a cross between a mumble and whine. The customary mysticism of his race is offset by an unusually agile mind. These very qualities urged

Letters of a Movie Extra

Hollywood, Calif.

Dear Dolly:

Believe me, cherub, if kicking really did any good, my legs would sure raise a protest against the ruthless wrecking of regular rules for working wenches.

Talk about rising in the film industry. Why, Bebee, I've been steppin' high, wide and handsome, first with one foot and then the other, for weeks and weeks out at the "U" on Broadway. I've heard "One, two, three, kick!" until that is exactly what I would like to do. All the studios are making Broadway specialties of some sort and all the extras that are working are kicking and those that are not working are kicking because they have no kicking to do. I haven't had both feet on the ground at the same time for so long that I feel like an ostrich, or a World War veteran.

However, Glenn Tryon stands in front of us and chirps all the time and there just isn't a thing we wouldn't do for him. Dolly, that is one man mirth-provoker to whom you can't say, "You aren't funny. It's only your face," because he really is handsome and he really is funny. Funny about that, isn't it?

As I said before, every studio is making a Broadway picture. Between Broadway Melody at M-G-M; Broadway Bound at the Met; Broadway Babies at First National and just plain Broadway at the "U," one might say they were making pictures out here in rather a broad way.

Of all the sets I have registered kicks on recently, I think I've enjoyed Broadway Babies most. Here the head hoofer is Alice White. She is supported (I suppose I should say competed) by Sally Eilers and little Peanuts Byron. Now little Alice just never was a chorus girl and learning dialogue, songs and steps all at once has her so confused that she has her back to the camera half of the time.

Well, dear, we love that! The longer she lingers on the line-up the longer Le Roy lets us live on the lot. You know Mervyn Le Roy, the boy scout director is calling out the commands—squads right, squads left and all that—. The only complaint he has registered so far is "My God, girls, we're paying that orchestra ten dollars an hour!" No reference made to the dough they're dealing to the donkeys—I mean ponies.

You see, Dolly, it's like this. They have the best dance instructors in the U. S. on these sets showing us how everyone from Gilda Gray to Isadora Duncan became famous.

So far, we have had no voice in the matter. It is only our heels that click but some of the more advanced extras have actually talked into the mike. They foolishly fancied that if they were permitted to have a voice in the making of movies they would be rewarded by larger checks. Imagine their embarrassment when they cut instead of raised.

Another thing that is worrying me is this colored invasion. They have made several all-colored productions—when I say all-colored I don't mean techni-color either. I don't know how we are going to get by on that—we can't all pull Jolsons, not and get by with it.

I went to a preview this week and who should be there but Joseph Schenck. Honest, Dolly, he stood close enough to me so that I could easily have reached out and touched him. I wish that I had done so—you see, I have always had a wild desire to know what a producer felt like.

I saw Nils Asther the other day and he actually spoke to me. He must have thought I was someone else but if you tell that to the kids at home just pretend that he knew it was little me.

Their Exchequered

First-of-the-month bills hold no alarms for Dolores Del Rio, who draws $8,500 a week.

Did you know that Colleen Moore, First National star, receives every two months as much as the President of the United States gets in a year? Here are some astonishing figures on the Hollywood pay-roll.

By JACK WOOLDRIDGE

If you envy Corinne Griffith, think what a tax she'll have to pay on a salary of a million and a half for three years.

THE President of the United States is paid a salary of $75,000 a year and is given $25,000 for traveling expenses. Colleen Moore earns that much and more in sixty days.

The Vice President of the United States is paid a salary of $15,000 a year. Jack Gilbert, Corinne Griffith, Al Jolson and probably John Barrymore, are paid that much every week-and-a-half.

United States Senators and members of the House of Representatives are paid salaries of $10,000 a year. Scores of movie actors and actresses earn triple and even quadruple that sum.

According to the biennial report of the Department of Commerce given out a short time ago, the motion picture producers paid out $56,298,560 to 7,598 salaried officers and employes during the year 1927, and $18,637,005 to wage earners.

HOW THE WEEKLY PAY CHECKS READ!

Al Jolson	$15,000
Colleen Moore	12,500
John Gilbert	10,000
Corinne Griffith	10,000
Richard Barthelmess	9,000
Dolores Del Rio	8,500
Lillian Gish	8,000
Lon Chaney (about)	5,000
Ramon Novarro	5,000
Ronald Colman	5,000
Greta Garbo	4,000
Vilma Banky	4,000
Rod La Rocque (De Mille contract)	4,000
Reginald Denny	3,250
Clara Bow (plus bonus)	2,500
Monte Blue	2,500
Joan Crawford	2,500
Laura La Plante	2,500
Dolores Costello	2,500
Lily Damita	2,000
Jetta Goudal (De Mille contract)	1,750
Alan Hale	1,750
Charles "Buddy" Rogers (estimated)	1,500
William Boyd	1,500
Mary Philbin	1,500
Lupe Velez	1,500

Norma Talmadge, Gloria Swanson, Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and Harold Lloyd, make their own productions and take the revenue therefrom. With the exception of Gloria, all are reputed to be worth millions. Tom Mix, too, for years shared in the earnings of his productions and amassed a million or two of his own.

Dolores Del Rio is under a partnership contract to Edwin Carewe and Joseph M. Schenck, but is a full-fledged United Artists star. The Mexican beauty is to make seven pictures for the company for which she will be paid $100,000 each. About two will be produced each year, during the making of which she will receive salary checks for $8,500 per week until each $100,000 is paid. Ramona was the first production under this contract. Evangeline, the second, is now under way.

The most desirable contract in the movies from the standpoint of straight salary, is held by Colleen Moore. First National pays her $12,500 a week, provides a manager, two secretaries to handle fan mail, a studio maid, an assistant director, a publicity man and permits her to keep any gowns which she wears in pictures. The reason for this amazing contract is, of course, the name of Colleen Moore. In the city, the small town, the village, Colleen packs them in and her pictures earn the money which warrants a salary of this size. When the little Irish star walked off the lot in the spring of 1927, and it appeared that an irreparable break had occurred, the gloom about the studio was as thick as a London fog and the outlook as dark as the sky of Pittsburgh. But when the differences were ironed out, she returned amid a flood of sunshine and figuratively, with the bands all playing.

At the same studio is Corinne Griffith who has just signed a new contract calling for a salary of approximately

Careers

$10,000 a week or a gross of $1,500,000 in three years. For this sum she will make six specials, all "talkies," and the contract provides that she is to appear in no program pictures.

SIMILAR in many ways is the new contract of John Gilbert with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Jack is to be paid $250,000 a picture and make two each year, his salary to be forthcoming at the rate of $10,000 per week. On this $500,000 a year he will have to some way or other try to get along. He will get no further aid from his employers.

At the same studio is Ramon Novarro who holds one of the most unusual contracts of any player in Hollywood. Ramon is to appear in two productions each year, have six months off in which he may engage in concert or any other work except making movies and is to draw $5,000 per week. Novarro has long wished to join musical concierges in Berlin and Paris and his contract signed last October affords the opportunity.

Richard Barthelmess, under his recent agreement with First National will get $9,000 a week for forty weeks of each year. Ronald Colman is getting $5,000 a week from Samuel Goldwyn, Vilma Banky, $4,000, and Lily Damita, the sensational little French star who has just come to America, will worry along for a while on $2,000.

Lon Chaney is another who has a sweet-coated contract, envied by countless stars. Chaney is paid around $5,000 a week. But he quits work not later than 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon. If for any reason it becomes necessary for him to work at night, he need not return to the studio next day. If he does not like the character role assigned him, he may veto it, and his word is final. Under no circumstances are his photographs to be given out by the studio unless he is in character costume. However, Chaney is one of the most reasonable and consistent of all screen actors, is a delight to directors, supporting casts, cameramen, electricians and the like. But when he says "no!" it sounds as though a bear trap had snapped. "No!" doesn't mean "maybe" with him.

First National pays the highest salary of all for a girl star. Colleen Moore receives $12,500 a week.

AL JOLSON'S earnings cannot now be estimated. His contract with Warner Brothers was negotiated in New York and is locked in a vault. It is said, unofficially, that he gets a weekly salary of $15,000 while making a picture and thereafter is paid ten per cent of its gross earnings. I do not know that this is true. He helps prepare the stories, lends his own songs and his net income likely will measure up to, if not exceed, that of any player in films. Jolson was paid $5,000 for a radio broadcast in New York and $20,000 for a week's personal appearance in San Francisco. The latter was a by-product of his picture career.

Lillian Gish signed a contract with Metro in 1925 calling for a total payment in two years of $800,000 at the rate of $7,692 a week. This was the last contract she entered into for extended services. She does not work in individual pictures for less than $8,000 per week.

Probably the most astonishing contract of all is held by Clara Bow. The "It" girl whose blazing flapper (Turn to page 96)

Domestic happiness is not hard to keep for Rod La Rocque and Vilma Banky, whose combined income is $8,000 weekly.

Mary Steps Out

Mary Pickford's choice of Coquette marks a milestone in her career, but it's no mere gesture of freedom—she's always been her own boss.

By DOROTHY SPENSLEY

HOLLYWOOD has its pet supposition. Hollywood would or it wouldn't be Hollywood. If Hollywood didn't have that, it would have a rumor. Or a surmise.

This time it's a mere supposition.

This time it has to do with Mary Pickford.

Last time it was Conrad Nagel and the amazing discovery that, abetted by dulcet vocal tones and the talkies, he has considerable of that appeal known as sex.

Pretty soon Hollywood will discover, upon reading the scientists' reports, that mosquitoes, as well as gentlemen, prefer blondes. And there will be ample conversation for a week.

And then Manuel Sotres, whom it thought was a prince—a Spanish prince—and was only an Andalusian capitalist's son and handsome, will come in for his share.

At the moment Hollywood is buzzing with the idea that Mary Pickford—"at last," are its words—is having her own way. That Douglas has relented, though heaven knows why; and that Mrs. Pickford's passing, a subject that is still hurtful to Mary, has freed her from maternal fetters.

They interpret that from her social activities. The teas that she attends. The fact that Pickfair, the hilltop estate of Mary and Douglas, heretofore rarely profaned by other than visiting noblemen and their ladies, and by the sacred cabal of the little group that forms Hollywood's social pinnacle—Doug and Mary and Charlie; is now being thrown open for dinner and evening parties, with now and then a tea.

They talked, too, about her haircut, which went from a long bob with soft waves into the smartest shingle.

Mary Pickford in the arms of John Mack Brown in Coquette, a play characterized by Doug as grim and ugly.

Mary bought out the entire lower floor of the Figueroa Playhouse, recently, and gave a theatre party to the members of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, in which she is an active participant, and to her friends of the press. Hollywood immediately interpreted that as a gesture of freedom. Mary had not done a thing like that before. Always Mary's public appearances had to do with a tree planting, the unveiling of a statue, the dedication of a civic building. Was this a grand gesture, Hollywood wanted to know, or was it so grand? Was it not a rather sweet—a sweet, generous, impulsive, even timorous motion to become a part of this Hollywood of which she, as First Lady of Cinemaland, had heard so much about and not mingled with?

She frequents Montmartre, occasionally, and attends showers for ladies who intend to become brides. And she and Marion Davies made plans for a little surprise luncheon, at the studio, for Bebe Daniels.

All this Hollywood noted and commented on.

It became gossip, this question of "Is Mary having her own way?" when she selected Coquette, of the New York stage, as her own. It could have been bought for any other actress in the colony and not caused a murmur. Unwed cinema mothers and nameless cinema offspring are legion among film offerings. Even Way Down East was voted a film classic, and in it Lillian Gish did her marathon through the snowflakes with her babe.

But Mary, America's Sweetheart—Mary of the curls and the childlike face—had never rubbed cinematically, against

How Al Santell

Al Santell, director of such stars as Vilma Banky, Corinne Griffith, Dick Barthelmess, Clara Bow, Dorothy Mackaill, Alice White, and many others.

Cracking the whip over Alice White, drawing out the drama instinct in Clara Bow, giving Dick Barthelmess the sympathy that makes him work, or battling with Jack Mulhall—that's how Al Santell, noted director, brings forth the best that's in his players. In this heart-to-heart story he gives you a candid picture of the stars, as only their director could know them.

As told to RUTH BIERY

I'M GOING to tell the absolute untarnished truth. I hope I'll be forgiven! Naturally, we directors have each our own method of handling actors and we each have a distinct and separate method for every star we handle. It would be impossible to get work from Vilma Banky as I get it from Alice White, for example. Since I have just completed a Vilma Banky picture, suppose I begin with her.

Vilma is essentially mental. You analyze the picture for her and then leave her alone. She is as diligent as an extra girl even though she is a star. And she has that rare faculty of looking at herself impartially—as though she were someone on the screen other than Vilma Banky!

Pola Negri was accustomed to watch herself in the projection room, I am told and say, "Oh, you are won-der-ful, Pola! You are beau-ti-ful; you are cute; you are gorgeous!" Vilma Banky sits in the projection room with her director, her cameramen and a few others and says, "Vilma, I do not like you there. You do not do so well." Or, "That scene is all right, Vilma. You did like I wanted."—A critic reviewing her own picture.

Perhaps the cameraman does not like the way she looks in a scene. He may feel he has not done her justice. "But I look like a girl who sat up until three o'clock in the morning. And that's how I'm supposed to look. I am satisfied with it," is her answer. How many would analyze that situation and want to look like a girl who had been up until three in the morning to the detriment of her beauty in a close-up?

Alice White is entirely different. Where a director handles Vilma through intelligence, he handles Alice with a whip.

I do not dislike Alice, but I had to assume an attitude which made her feel I had an antipathy for her. She objected to the angles from which she was being photographed; to the manner in which she was being lighted. One simple scene in the picture required her to adjust her stocking and give her dress a little hitch. The scene was taken twenty-two times. Alice could not adjust the stockings right—perhaps because she never wears them. But she is accustomed to opposition. She began as a script clerk and has fought against one thing and another all the way up the ladder. I found it necessary to make her fight even her director if she were to get good scenes for the picture. She is like a xylophone in an orchestra—you play it with hammers.

TO HANDLE Clara is an entirely different proposition. I did one of her first pictures, Empty Hearts. She has become more sophisticated since then. She had a lot of soul and still has although it has been somewhat isolated by her producers. She had much heart, and still has. Her mind has never been calculative. At that time, and I presume it is still true, all one had to do was to touch Clara's soul. Not being mental, we did not reduce a scene to a mental process. She plays entirely from the inside! You tell her the story of what a girl is supposed to be and she believes the story. Tell her that the girl has suffered and Clara suffers. It is instinctive with her. You never tell her what to do. What the girl does in the story, Clara will do. Remember, she was new to pictures at this time. Yet, she did as clever a piece of technical work in one scene, in just the way she walked, as I have ever seen. Knowing her antecedents I was anxious to know why she did it. I asked her. "I don't know. If I walked in this room and that man offered me jewelry when I was in love with someone else, I'd appreciate his offer but I just couldn't take it and I'd walk away from him in that manner!"

Dick Barthelmess is to me—well, I can't find superlatives enough for him. He has a marvelous faculty for being able to encase himself within a role. When he has a part he loves, he lives it. He has a failing of sometimes selecting a story mainly because of a great characterization in it for him. This is not intentional; he knows stories but he knows acting and characterization better.

Dorothy Mackaill always had something important to do at five o'clock—until Al dragged her back to the studio one day.

Makes the Stars Shine

Dick must be handled through sympathy. Most actors have to be prompted through a scene; Barthelmess cannot work if he is being prompted. He must know that you have the feel of the thing he is trying to do.

I directed him in The Patent Leather Kid, Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come, and Wheel of Chance. The latter is one great specific example of how Dick handled me! This was a case of where I believed in the story and Dick believed in me. He knew I'd had a wonderful mother and this was a story of a boy with a wonderful mother. He decided to take me as his example. We were in my place preparing to go down town and choose his clothes for the picture. "Ready to go?" I inquired.

"Do you mind if I go upstairs in your wardrobe?" he parried.

He picked out his every suit for the picture from my things. "Now, I'll play it. You tell me what you would have done and what your mother would have said—I'll play you and your mother."

In the courtroom scene I sat close by and quietly described the people he would be seeing. "There's the man with the little eyes smiling out at you; there's the one—" Not telling him what to do but carrying to his imagination the exact situation of the story.

He is like a violin, a Stradivarius. Four strings finely strung, great tonal quality. An instrument which takes two hands to play with deft fingers and smooth bowing but marked by no keyboard upon which to find the notes. An instrument for a solo or one which fits into any orchestra. But one which may screech if not handled sympathetically.

THERE are two types of women who are successful on the screen. One is the type whom men look at and want to protect. They resent anyone attempting to hurt them and are willing to rise out of their seats in a theatre and punch the "heavy" in the nose. The other is the woman men want to possess. For her, a man will willingly substitute himself for either the leading man or the "heavy."

Until Classified, Corinne Griffith was the orchid of the screen whom no one should touch lest the petal turn black. With Classified the orchid was put in a glass case and she became a beautiful carnation with rough edges—one which any man would willingly wear in his lapel.

The handling of Corinne is extremely difficult to analyze. She can never be kidded into doing something which is foolish. She must believe in it—have faith instilled in her.

She would be worthless if forced to do something she did not like. She chooses her stories, her leading men, her directors. Upon her own shoulders lies a great part of the blame for her failures and a large portion of the credit for her successes.

She is not temperamental unless you count in the fact that she will not come onto the set until ten o'clock in the morning and leaves promptly at six. But she is always there on the moment. She doesn't like to sit around in her dressing room when she is called but likes to have things ready for her sequences.

Jack Mulhall likes to act. I have had my greatest fights with Jack

Alice White is a fighter; she learned to battle alone. She found a worthy foe in Al, and so did Jack Mulhall. But they're good friends just the same, when the day's work is done. Clara Bow isn't "mental" but she has an instinct for drama that few directors realize so well as Al.

Cash—or Splash?

The talkies taught Hollywood a lesson. With the future uncertain, many stars have begun to save, and even the newcomers are getting the habit of thrift.

By HARMONY HAYNES

Alice White is sitting pretty, with a tidy sum laid by for a rainy day.

GLITTERING extravagances are passing into limbo out here. You never can tell what may happen next, for if your voice squeaks, where are you? The stars are tacking up some neat little signs over their doors: "Teach Your Dollars to Have More Sense," and "A Penny Saved Is a Scotch Joke."

Only it isn't a joke. And Helen Twelvetrees, one of the new crop, is taking it as seriously as the veterans. But let me tell you something more about Helen before I start moralizing again.

Helen Twelvetrees, former Broadway star, now in the talkies, isn't afraid of a wolf at the door.

Helen used to pack 'em in on dear old Broadway. Night after night she drew crowds in to see The American Tragedy, Elmer Gantry and others. First nights meant only hard work to Helen. There were no jewels, no limousines, no orchids for her. Back in her dressing room she used to sigh and say, "If I were rich—"

She came west. She attended one of the cinema city's famous openings. Modestly gowned, shy and wide-eyed she watched all the usual display, the glamour, the glitter—the splash of Hollywood. Again she shook her wise little head and sighed, "If I was rich—" Then she met the usual fate of a stage star coming to Hollywood—they grabbed her for the talkies.

Her first week's salary she received with a sweet "Thank you." Then she hurried—not to a shop to convert it into a new gown—but back to her hotel room. She sat at her desk and looked at that first check a long time. It wasn't so large, but oh, what she could do with it and the ones that were to follow! She got out a pencil and paper and started to figure. After hours of adding, subtracting and dividing she found a way. One-half for the Future—one-half for the Present.

"But it is kinda hard on you, poor little Present," she told one-half of that check, "you have to do so much for Helen. You have to pay my rent, buy some furniture, a car and pay for all my clothes. I won't be too hard on you, though, I shall be very careful. And as for you, Mr. Future," she told the other half of the check, "all you have to do is to lie in a nice savings account and grow fat and when I am an old, old lady I'll make you take care of me."

NOR is Helen Twelvetrees alone in this movie-ment. There's Eddie Quillan, and all the other Quillans—nine of them, living happily in one house. It is a large house, to be sure. Nine people take up a lot of room.

Eddie Quillan, William Deitz, Barbara Hunter and Jeanette Loff used a plane to enable Eddie and Jeanette to appear at the wedding of William and Barbara—and then get back to the studio for the day's work.

Society in Cinemaland

By RUTH M. TILDESLEY

THE premiere of a Fairbanks' picture is always the occasion for gala social events in Cinemaland. The opening of The Iron Mask, at the Carthay Circle Theatre was no exception. Among those who entertained at dinners before the show and at suppers afterwards were Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Willat (Billie Dove), Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Hawks (Mary Astor), Miss Mona Rica, Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Lowe (Lilyan Tashman), Luther Reed, Robert Fraser and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kenyon (Jane Winton).

Hundreds of fans and sightseers crowded behind the ropes in the long promenade leading to the theatre entrance and packed the streets in the immediate neighborhood. As each celebrity alighted from his equipage and was announced at the microphone, the crowds cheered and applauded vigorously. They took an immense interest in Doug and Mary and their four guests—lovely Lillian Gish, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Geraghty and Mrs. Frank Case. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Joan Crawford, as loverlike as ever, arrived a bit later.

Rod La Rocque and Vilma Banky were the subjects of much applause. Young Arthur Lake brought a burst of laughter with his amusing speech at the "mike," winding up with: "If this fellow Douglas Fairbanks keeps on making pictures, he'll make a name for himself!"

Lupe Velez was in the East, so Gary Cooper came with Anderson Lawler, a recent recruit from the stage to the screen, who is to play in Paramount's Magnolia but who is also coaching Gary for the title role of The Virginian; Mr. Lawler is a Virginian and is teaching his native drawl to the tall Montanan, and declares him an apt pupil. Gary spent the intermission signing programs for the eager fair, but directly after the last fadeout on the screen, he rushed from the theatre and broke all speed records getting home in case there'd be a long distance from Lupe.

Putting SCIENCE

—Paramount.

"Brunettes experience emotions far more keenly than blondes or red-heads," says Dr. Marston. Doris Hill is the subject.

¶ Are you in love? Then read this article! Here are the startling facts about the reactions of men and women to sex appeal; how red heads, blondes, and brunettes have different amounts of attraction. Dr. Marston is showing Universal directors the way to increase the kick in movie kisses.

By HENRY MacMAHON

TESTING the amount of emotion in a film, and and measuring sex appeal of the screen sirens is the latest Hollywood idea. And Dr. Marston, famous inventor of the "lie detector" used by police, is trying it out at Universal City with startling results.

He can tell exactly how an audience will react to a passionate love scene. Do chests heave, grips tighten, blood pressure rise? Then the picture will be a success! A complicated apparatus measures the whole set of reactions scientifically.

Dr. Marston was buried under huge stacks of stories when I came to interview him for SCREEN SECRETS.

He explained that he was "eliminating those parts of a picture which will have no emotional meaning on the screen. I can also put in a lot of emotional meaning that showmen don't know of or recognize. How to convey passion without vulgar body display, for instance."

Interesting! I asked him what he thought of vamping as done on the the shadow stage by our beautiful Hollywood damsels.

"Some of it is crude," he said flatly. "Girls must not be limited to any particular style of vamping to be effective—they must understand the whole game, the idea back of it all.

"A beautiful body and face don't attract with nearly the strength of a beautiful face and charming manner. That is a concrete illustration of the great factor in women's inducement appeal, which is her feeling of giving happiness and of blending with the emotions of those who are watching her. On the other hand, woman's subjection to overmastering power is erotic in effect, and where such subjection is intermingled with cruelty, we have sadism."

THE next minute he fairly shook me out of masculine conceit when he said: "Man's idea of love is not love at all, but passion—which is appetite! Woman's love is a combination of active inducement and passive submission. The average male tends to be far too dominant, and fails to understand the true nature of love, which is more of a giving than a receiving.

"There is very much more love in the world today," he mused, "than there ever was in the Victorian age. Women are the biological source of all love; they are getting much more control of social standards, and they will make love freer. And if the men only knew it," added the professor shrewdly, "the men will get more excitement if women control the situation; it's man's dominance that comes in and cuts love out of it!"

Evidently a tricky affair, love—and all too easy to make a misstep. The doctor holds to the theory that women are the huntresses and captivators, and men the hunted. "The love story is a female proposition in which the men are the pawns, and it's the queens you have to watch!" Dominance enters in, too, and compliance, which is yielding without love. But in normal emotion it's really the man, not the woman who surrenders to the captivation of love.

"What is the nature of your tests?" he was asked

Dr. Marston bending over the dials to see how an audience reacts to a love scene. If bosoms heave and grips tighten, the instrument makes its corresponding report.

into SEX APPEAL

How will you react when you see Billie Dove and Rod La Rocque emoting in The Man and the Moment?

"We can test the girl herself by registering the amount and duration of her bodily changes wrought by her emotion, and then we can test the audience reaction by getting a lot of boys together and observing the effect of her love-making. The two sexes show certain marked differences, the man's blood pressure rising but the woman's blood pressure dropping, in love passion; the breathing, muscle contraction, heart beats and sweat activity change different ways in the feeling of different emotions."

"What about blondes, brunettes and auburns?"

"Did you ever see a blonde playing the role of a vamp?" the doctor counter-questioned. "Of course you have. And did you notice how she played it? A blonde has two possibilities. She can be a cave woman or she can exhibit herself.

"I have seen a very wonderful blonde screen actress get her man by landing on him with a flying football tackle, tipping him over backward on the floor, and landing on top of him! The audiences liked it. The picture was a big success. That blonde draws a tremendous salary every week, and she earns it. When a man is love-captured by a cavewoman he gets the thrill of his life out of it, and so does the audience. The blonde, in this case, expresses her dominance.

"Now take the other blonde procedure — exhibiting her physical charms freely. That method works sometimes. Men in the audience like it, of course. But are they really captivated by a blonde who dons a handful of silk or a tight bathing suit, for no reason at all, for appearance in the midst of a drawing room scene?"

The love professor gave an emphatic "no!" to his own query, having tested it on a score of fellows who refused to get excited, declared the shot "pretty crude stuff" and that "more than be seen on the bathing beach any day."

"A blonde exhibiting her charms is not subtle enough," he concluded, "it is too business-like, too obviously for an ulterior purpose. The psychologist must advise against casting a blonde for a seductive role unless she is past-mistress of the cavewoman technique, or unless the role calls for an out-and-out sex-for-money gold-digger sort."

—M-G-M.

"A blonde doesn't register on your pulse unless she's dominating—a cave woman," Dr. Marston asserts. Here is Mary Doran.

HAVING shattered our fond belief in blondes, the professor next attacked auburns:

"Consider the red-head, how she seduces! She tackles not, and neither does she swim. And yet psychology tells you that Solomon, in all his glory, never resisted one of these! Red-haired women are born to burn men up —and if you don't believe it I'll refer you to the ghost of Marc Antony. Just ask him how Cleopatra did it, and how red her hair used to get when Antony's glance strayed to one of her slave girls!

"Our tests last year at Columbia University showed that red-headed women have more inducement emotions than all

KING FOR A DAY!

How'd you like to rule Hollywood—even just for a day? That's the thrill Billy Bakewell experienced when Doug made him the King in The Iron Mask, and bowed before a boy!

By HELEN STARR

A MOVIE fan, like you or me—watching and admiring the famous stars. That was Billy Bakewell. Then, like a hero in a romance, young Billy suddenly found himself a king, with the greatest of all Hollywood bending a knee before his throne.

It was a gorgeous dream for this youngster, but a real one. He had played a few extra bits, with a specially good part in West Point, but the thrill of a lifetime came when Doug Fairbanks chose him to play the part of Louis XV in The Iron Mask.

Billy told me all about it, with eyes sparkling joyously.

"When Doug decided to make me the king, there were no half-way measures about it at all," Billy declared. "Doug was already living the part of D'Artagnan, who had vowed to protect the King of France. You know how Doug tackles a job! Well, I had to learn horseback riding first.

"Then, from nine to ten each morning, I had a fencing lesson, and Doug took me with him to the gym. There we'd play that game he invented, called Doug, where he uses feather darts in a sort of tennis match. That was real fun. After our game, we'd have a shower and a huge lunch."

Doug doesn't stop at half-way measures. Billy had to learn how to write as Louis XV did, copying the King's signature from old manuscripts.

"But the biggest thrill was this—" and Billy pointed to the iron mask in his room. "Mr. Fairbanks gave me one of the three iron masks made for the picture," he said. "He kept one, and the other was broken. And look at this!"

Billy's eyes danced as he showed me a huge picture of Doug, with: "To my kind friend, with affectionate regards, Douglas Fairbanks," inscribed across the bottom.

Billy Bakewell is the Hollywood boy who became King—with Doug Fairbanks as his loyal subject. Billy is a native son, graduating from Harvard Military School in Los Angeles, where Doug Fairbanks, Jr., studied.

CAN you wonder that Billy's blue eyes grew big and full of intense feeling as he tells you about this, his first big dramatic role?

Billy is not a tailor-made man. He's in too much of a hurry to be a mirror worshiper. Refreshingly, he lacks personal vanity.

He plays tennis with Johnny Mack Brown and Arthur Lake or goes off on desert camping trips with these same friends. He belongs to the Masquers Club and goes to their revels each month.

You will hear that in Hollywood one must be very blasé to create a weighty impression, but in Billy's case, the evidence all seems to point to the desirability of being anxious—enthusiastic—eager!

"I liked doing the bad twin of the King best," Billy said. Here he is with Doug, who gave him fencing lessons and trained him for the part.

Gets You

Hollywood, the paradoxical city: nowhere is there such opportunity, nowhere so many pitiful failures.

By

Margaret Livingston

I RAN away from home in Salt Lake City. My wedding date had been set, my trousseau made. But, somehow, I just couldn't go through with it. I was sixteen and red-headed. Hollywood was beckoning.

"Wealth," I thought. "Fame. Glamour of the studios. A panorama from an odd corner of life. Tinsel. Artists. Comradeship. Kindly souls ready to help. A gorgeous, beautiful new world where everyone laughs in doing his bit of make-believe."

So I packed my suitcase and crept away in the night. It took $35 from my $75 savings to pay my fare on the Los Angeles Limited. But it would take me to my dream city. I felt no regret.

Oh, those wonderful hours of reverie! I loved them. I found my Hollywood. No, not my Hollywood. But a Hollywood; a Hollywood of beauty and tinsel, of opportunity and wealth, yet a Hollywood of bitterness and tears. Nowhere in the world is there a land of such opportunity. Nowhere are there such pitiful failures.

HOLLYWOOD gets you. I love it. Because long ago I learned to laugh at its bitter disappointments. Sometimes there was a bit of hysteria in the laughs. But the world never knew. The world doesn't care about hearing griefs. But it shouts when it sees one beginning to fight. This is no place for the weakling or one who is devoid of grit. I've seen beautiful girls come and go—thousands of them—discouraged and beaten. Because they didn't know Hollywood. Because they couldn't take its wallops and keep on keeping on. Remember Robert W. Service's Law of the Yukon?

> This is the law of the Yukon, and ever she makes it plain:
> "Send not your foolish and feeble; send me your strong and your sane—
> Strong for the red rage of battle; sane for I harry them sore;
> Send me men girt for the combat, men who are grit to the core."
> * * * * *
> Them will I gild with my treasure, them will I glut with my meat;
> But the others—the misfits, the failures—I trample under my feet.

Apply that to Hollywood. The "red rage of battle" is unending. I was called to Universal studios not long ago for a screen test—a talkie. They were assigning parts for Broadway. There were thirty of us waiting in one little room. A famous English actor was there who had just played the leading role in The Silver Cord on the stage; a waitress who once had good roles in pictures; a

Our Modern

Gil put his arm around Billie and drew her close.

Carefree, ultra-modern Billie Brown considered the world her football but in the iron-willed Glenn Abbott she sensed danger—what would be the outcome of her reckless decision to match wits with him for the sake of her fiance? It's not too late to begin the fascinating story of Our Modern Maidens, Joan Crawford's forthcoming picture.

What has gone before:

BILLIE BROWN, carefree, sophisticated daughter of the fabulously wealthy B. Bickering Brown, motor magnate, lightly accepts the proposal of Gil Johns, attractive young idler of wealthy family, but wishes to keep the engagement secret until he gains some post of importance in the diplomatic service.

On the train returning home from school with her gay set of friends, Billie meets Glenn Abbott, much older than the boys in her crowd, and a polished worldling of experience and immense political power. She is attracted to him, and decides to cultivate him with a view to enlisting his aid in getting Gil a position in the diplomatic corps. Meanwhile, Kentucky, a youngster of the crowd who envies her more sophisticated playmates and is deeply in love with Gil, succeeds in attracting his attention and in spending some time with him.

Billie has invited Abbott to her birthday party; although he refused at first, he decides to attend, and in the bizarre revelry of that night Billie succeeds in exciting his desire for her. And while she carries on this flirtation which has stirred the first real passion she has ever known, Kentucky's overwhelming love for Gil leads her to draw him away from the rest of the crowd, into a secluded spot hidden by pampas grass. Gil is unable to resist her, and yields to her caresses in a burst of passion.

Now go on with the story:

PART III

THE aftermath of a whoopee party is that eleven o'clock hangover. By noon most of the guests had staggered down to the terrace and thrown themselves groggily into chairs and hammocks. One of the merriest girls the night before now lay on the floor beside the fountain, dabbling her handkerchief in the pool to lay against gritty eyes. Reg and Blondie, supporting each other, stumbled down in lounging pajamas and flopped into a swing.

In her luxurious modernistic boudoir, Billie was making a leisurely toilet. Before her knelt a maid to adjust her belt. The attitude was significant—all the world knelt to Billie Brown.

Now she yawned so prodigiously again that her head seemed about to burst. Momentarily in her pain she forgot her father seated beside the dressing table, spreading out the morning paper before him.

"Here it is," he gloated, "'the smartest dance of the summer was given by B. Bickering Brown, motor magnate, honoring the birthday of his beautiful and charming young daughter, Miss Billie Brown, at their palatial home . . . .'"

"Swell, Dad!" interrupted Billie, sliding to his knee where she perched precariously, dabbing heady perfume on her smartly plucked eyebrows and the rouged tips of her ears. "It's a great life—if you don't waken. Flying high, wide and handsome! Who can down us? None, say I!"

"The paper headlines it as a brilliant social event! It mentions my millions and comments on your beauty."

"We know how to make whoopee, eh, Pop?" she exulted. "And now I'm up to something that will be sure-fire front-page stuff for the motor magnate's baby!"

"Yeh?" he asked eagerly.

"Positively! But—" she added with a tantalizing little grin, "it's my secret for a while!"

KENTUCKY had awakened to a feeling that all life was changed mysteriously and wonderfully. She loved Gil with all her heart. She was his!

Sitting up in bed, her knees clasped in her arms, her eyes dreamy, she relived their glorious moments together.

Now a knock at the door recalled her suddenly to reality—a frightened, apprehensive reality.

"Kentucky?" called Billie softly. Kentucky, strangely shy and unable just yet to face her dearest friend, did not answer. She was relieved when Billie, thinking her still asleep, tiptoed away to join the others on the terrace.

Kentucky slid from the bed and crossed to the mirror. The childlike, wistful blue eyes that looked back at her from a ruffle of soft blonde curls were the same eyes of yesterday.

She was still searching her smooth young face for some sign of change when she heard a knock at Billie's door. Kentucky looked into their joint sitting room and discovered Gil nervously pacing back and forth.

"Billie's gone downstairs," she said, smiling up at him, happy to be near him again.

Gil sat down on the table, his back almost turned on Kentucky, every line of his body betraying his wretchedness. Reading his remorse, the girl slipped onto the bench beside him and knelt so that her eyes were almost on a level with his—loving, eager, young eyes that caused him to drop his head to his breast. Kentucky's cool little fingers caressed his miserable eyes gently.

Billie's misery melted before the sweetness of the child. "I was afraid our crowd would rob you of your ideals, but they couldn't," Billie said. Silently they watched the flames, each lost in secret thoughts of her own.

"Don't be unhappy, Gil," she whispered, turning his head toward her. "I'm not sorry for—anything. I love you. I'll always love you, Gil."

He turned away abruptly with a despairing gesture. "Don't be so kind, Kentucky! I'm a dog!" His head dropped to his hands, his fingers nervously tore his hair.

Silently she tried to put her arms about him as a mother might console a hurt child; but he drew away from her, loathing himself.

"I'm engaged to Billie, and yet—!" he began wretchedly. "You didn't know, did you? . . . Why, we've been keen about each other ever since our mud-pie days."

He tried to smile, unwilling to betray a sign of sentiment; but real emotion upset training and habit. Now she must realize what a cur he was. He had betrayed Billie, Kentucky—and himself.

For a moment Kentucky was silent, trying to reconcile herself to the situation. Simply, without hysterics, she replied, "I sometimes wondered, Gil. But nothing mattered—last night—except my love for you. Don't reproach yourself—it mustn't make you unhappy. And if we don't let it hurt Billie—I can't be sorry, dear—I can't."

Gil swallowed desperately. "Gosh, 'Tuck, you're—you're a brave little sport!" he cried, pressing her fingers warmly. Her lips smiled; but there were tears in her eyes as she turned back to her room.

BILLIE, on the terrace, was striving with poor success to do her duty as the bright and charming hostess.

Now into this jaded crowd of moderns strode the tall, athletic figure of Glenn Abbott, fresh, alert, vital, his two Great Danes gamboling about his legs.

With an effort Billie pulled herself together. As he came over to her and surreptitiously squeezed her fingers, she managed to present to him a picture of radiance and enthusiasm in appreciable contrast to the listless crowd sprawled wanly about.

Blondie, now watched Billie with catty curiosity.

"Wonder what Billie's trying to work Abbott for?" she whispered to Reg, who turned his back sleepily and held a splitting head. "She's always working men for something! Oh, Billie," she called out exasperatingly, "where's Gil? You look only half of yourself without him!"

Abbott glanced up sharply, remembering the boy's antagonism of the night before. Aware of his sudden tenseness, and wishing heartily that she could wring Blondie's neck, Billie covered her confusion with a quick, light laugh.

"Oh, not being the Siamese twins, we do sleep separately!" she retorted, while the crowd tittered their approval of her having bested Blondie. "Here, Glenn, do have some of my brioche."

Abbott was reassured. Surely a girl could not love a man and speak so ribaldly about him. But Glenn Abbott did not know our modern maidens!

Billie, realizing that danger had narrowly been averted, sighed with relief; but a moment later her panic returned, for Abbott rose, whistled to his dogs, and announced his intended departure.

Unwilling to let him go soon, she ignored his outstretched hand. But as he insisted that he must go, she graciously offered, "Then let me drive you home."

"Another slaughter!" muttered Blondie, watching Billie with envious eyes.

BILLIE picked up the phone concealed in a pillar and called the garage. In less than five minutes they were on the open road headed for the hills, each silent—Abbott lost in thoughts of Billie, so baffling and beautiful; Billie planning how to make him come to heel as she had boasted she would do.

The girl brought her powerful roadster to an abrupt stop before the mountain cabin picturesquely sequestered among great leafy oaks.

"You'll come in and see my shack?" he suggested eagerly. Billie nodded, and followed him unwillingly into a great, crudely finished room scattered with rugs, serapes, knives, a bull whip, and above the mantelpiece one large rough crayon drawing of the Andes rising majestically above the clouds in solitary, awe-inspiring

Harry Carr's

Harry Carr

Harry Carr, whose long and intimate association with the motion picture industry dates back to early days with D. W. Griffith at the old Mamaroneck Studio in New York, is in a singularly excellent position to speak with wisdom and authority concerning picture personalities and developments. In addition to writing titles and scenarios for some of the outstanding masterpieces of the screen, he is the most famous daily newspaper columnist on the Pacific Coast. His column of comment appears exclusively in SCREEN SECRETS among the movie magazines.

IT LOOKS to me as though the star of the colored population were rising. Just as a few years ago all the handsome young men changed their names to Juan Jose and pretended to be Spanish, it would be profitable now to assume the name of George Washington Jones and learn to speak to the crap dice.

The dark actors hold the center of the stage.

Dark Cloud

CHRISTIE'S comedy studio looks like Dixie before the Civil War. King Vidor is still making his all-colored picture at M-G-M, and a colored bootblack has made the most thundering hit of the year in the Fox picture, Hearts in Dixie.

A Colored Genius

NO FOOLING, this colored bootblack is the finest actor I have seen in Hollywood for many a year. He takes the part of a lazy coon who is trying to find a wife who will chop the wood. He has personality, perfect method, technique and humor. He is so natural and has such reality that you forget he is an actor.

The only name by which he is known at the Fox Studio where he performed on the boots of the actors is Stepin Fetchit. He has chosen to rise to immortality under the same moniker.

Natural Actor

THERE is no question but that the talkies have opened up a vast new field for colored actors. Acting is as natural to them as breathing.

Acting is partly a sense of time; an ability to let your emotions and imaginations go. Every colored boy is born that way.

Kissing

ONE development of the talkies will be a boon to the afflicted. There will not be so much of the kissing clinch at the end.

Being naturally of a notably affectionate disposition, I can stand considerable screen love making; but these latter-day kissing close-ups are not so nice as they are hot.

Every one who has seen the talkies must have been impressed by the fact that the far-famed close-up is rapidly going into sweet oblivion. There isn't much kick to talk when you are apparently talking out at the audience.

Dick's Grief

THIS fuss in Mexico didn't improve the disposition of Dick Barthelmess. It broke off a long-cherished plan of his.

Dick and his bride went on a belated honeymoon to the

Private Line

City of Mexico and there met one of the greatest bull-fighters in the world. It inspired Richard with a burning ambition to make a bull-fight picture. He was making his plans to leave for Mexico to film the picture when the bombs began going off.

As a result, Mr. Barthelmess has to content himself with a tame drama about a young man whose wife had too many hungry relatives.

No Money—No Career

I HAD dinner with Dick the other night, and we talked of Napoleon and of Dick's opinion of the philosophy of retiring from the screen.

Every star in Hollywood is now talking of quitting and allowing the public to mourn. I don't know why; it is just one of the things that Hollywood talks about.

Dick says he will stay on the job just as long as the money is big. When the Wall street magnates begin shaving down the pay checks he is going to jump the job and travel. He has no ravenous hunger for art.

Anna May Wong, lovely Oriental flapper, nearly starved in Hollywood, but since going to England, she has found fame and fortune on the screen.

David Lee, a hit in The Singing Fool, and now featured in Sonny Boy

Imitation Marys

LILA LEE, like Bessie Love, has reason to be grateful for the talkies. It has brought both back into the land of the movie living.

Lila not only made a hit in The Queen of the Night Clubs; but she has been cast for the feminine lead in Rainbow, which is to be one of the biggest pictures ever turned out of the Warner Brothers' Studio.

It is old stuff for her—using her voice. As a child actress she was famous in vaudeville—"Cuddles" Edwards was then her name.

Another Infant

I HAVE an awful feeling, by the way, that we are about to have another infant prodigy among us. Warners have decided to star little Davey Lee who made such a hit with Al Jolson.

There is something curious about these screen infants. Little girls never get to first base. The public will just have none of them—a fact which cost the producers of the Baby Peggy pictures a lot of money to find out.

It looks as though this child might be another Jackie Coogan.

Jackie Coogan

IT REQUIRES brains to put over a child on the screen. Even the Jackie Coogan pictures were not all successful. Some of the latter ones, in fact, were pretty sad. The difficulty is in finding good stories. Human drama does not naturally revolve around a child. Gosh, you can't go on forever having estranged parents re-united by the tender little tears of the cherub child dying of croup or something.

A Hollywood Tragedy

THE case of Alma Rubens, who has been adjudged a dope addict by the courts, is one of the bitterest tragedies I have ever known in Hollywood.

She was not a great actress; but she was a pretty good one. Almost any kind of future might have been hers. The doctors now think that she might recover her health and conquer the habit.

This will not help her any in the fight to get back to

TWO MEN WITH

When Harold Lloyd and Mal St. Clair got started on "the good old days" of their movie experience, well—just listen in on their tales!

By SPEED KENDALL

SAY, Mal, do you remember when we—"

Harold Lloyd was standing with one foot on a bench, his elbow on his knee and his chin in his hand shaking his head in that "gee, them were the happy days" manner.

Mal St. Clair, his elongated director, towered over him, a smile on his face.

It was on the set at the Metropolitan Studio, where Harold Lloyd is filming his next big comedy. They were over in a far corner of the set—a replica of one of the rooms of San Francisco's police station—all by themselves having a great time and nobody could understand what it was all about.

So I sneaked over to learn the cause of all of the hilarity, thinking, of course, that Harold and Mal were talking over the next situation for the picture.

But I received the surprise of my life. They weren't even thinking or talking about the picture. Something had happened on the set which recalled the old days when the photoplay was in its infancy and stars were paid five dollars per day.

The day that Mal St. Clair stepped on the set to direct Harold Lloyd was a grand reunion for them. They both had worked together as extras 'way back in 1915 at the old Mack Sennett lot in Edendale during the days of the famous Keystone Kops, and it had always been Mal's one big hope to some day handle the megaphone on a Lloyd picture.

Mal and Harold were going at it like nobody's business. In fact Harold's remark, "Say, Mal, do you remember the day when we—" almost ruined work for the day. The assistant director stood on one foot and then the other. Minutes passed and time was being lost but Mal and Harold kept at it.

"Why, sure, I remember that day," I heard Mal say. They didn't seem to mind, so I jotted down a few of the things they were talking about.

Here's Mal St. Clair's version of how Slim Summerville eliminated competition on the Keystone set.

THAT was the day," Mal continued, "you made me up for that big part in The Game All Night. You remember, the Robin Hood costume I donned. A scream, eh?

"But that wasn't all that happened that day. We left the studio to go to Griffith Park to film some scenes in a forest. I was supposed to be a guard but I was a sight for sore eyes. I can still remember leading that horse. It was an epic day.

"Well, the picture called for some bandits to attack me. Among the bandits was one Slim Summerville. You remember him? Lean and tall like myself. My part happened to be a pretty good one. Slim thought he should have gotten it.

"So when the bandits attacked me it was a real attack. Slim was the third to romp on me. Sock, a black eye.

A PAST!

Harold Lloyd and Mal St. Clair have some hectic moments to remember. Above, a scene from an early Lloyd comedy with Bebe Daniels.

Mal St. Clair, as the Crown Prince, in Yankee Doodle in Berlin, during his early days in the movies.

" 'We don't want any more skinny boys in Keystone,' yelled Summerville in my ear. 'There's only going to be one skinny guy' he said 'and that's going to be me.'

"I took him at his word and went to proping."

THOSE were the days, Mal, when a fellow thought he was a big shot if he only had a few silk shirts to sport. I had the silk shirts, all right, but all the silk was in front. The backs and sleeves were cotton.

"That was just before one of my several tilts with Hal Roach, which were always amicably settled. But this one looked pretty serious. We had produced a picture called Just Nuts in which Roy Stewart, who was a well known western player in those days, was leading man, Jane Novak leading woman, and I appeared as comedian. The picture was pretty well gagged, and Pathe, to which Roach sent it, liked it so well they offered Hal a contract if he could place the three leading players under contract. He mapped out a schedule calling for a two-reel drama one week, and a one-reel comedy the next. I was to provide the laughs in the comedy and in the two reelers Stewart was to get the leading role while I looked after the second business—and the third frequently, as I sometimes had to handle three different parts.

"Things went along great until one day I discovered Stewart was getting ten dollars a day while Roach was paying me five dollars. That led up to an argument which resulted in my bidding Hal goodbye.

"Roach was paying Stewart the ten dollar check because he wouldn't work for less so I decided I wouldn't, either. Which brought me up to my engagement at Sennett's.

"They were long on promises in those days at Sennett's. For three weeks they promised me everything except the sun and the moon, although they did throw in a few stars, but that's all I got. No one ever got anywhere on promises, so I was on the verge of quitting when they decided to give me a chance. I was to play the part of an Italian fruit cart vender."

"I recall that very well, Harold. As I remember, you were quite a makeup artist in those days. I often wondered where you became so expert at it."

A Fine Night for a Murder

¶ Commending Alibi, a talkie with kisses, kicks and killings.

IF YOU can take in a good show while taking in a good murder, so much the better for your evening's entertainment. After all, underworld killings were getting so dull on the screen that something had to be done to jolly them up.

This is precisely what has been done in Alibi, all tricked out from the stage play Nightstick. By way of relief from all the skulduggery which has become a part of our lower education there's a lively musical comedy running at a theatre just a few taxi jumps down the street, and the generous cutter of the picture makes it his business to see that you get in on a free ticket. You see, the theatre is used as an alibi by the killer, but this doesn't in the least interfere with your enjoyment of the show.

For good entertainment measure there is also a cabaret, with Irma Harrison knocking off work for the night when the noble young cop of her heart is bumped off. The heroine is hopelessly unsympathetic. Regis Toomey has a beautiful time dying. Too much of Harry Stubbs as the crooked cabaret owner and Mae Busch as his naughty lady, makes the picture drag a bit towards the end. But generally, Alibi is so good that it swings into first rank of the talkies and may be counted on to give The Broadway Melody a run for its money. Best shot: Fleeing gangster leaping from one high building to another, then falling between the two.—United Artists.

Welcome back, Mae Busch! With Harry Stubbs, she's going through a bad moment in Alibi.

Java See the Beat of It?

¶ Greta Garbo loses her man! It happens in Wild Orchids.

ONE possible effect of Wild Orchids may be an eagerness on the part of young American wives of middle-aged business men to say, when discussing vacations, "Oh, let's go to Java!"

As the wife in the case, Greta Garbo meets on the boat a Javanese prince who is so warm she can't for the life of her remain cool and collected. He kisses her the first chance he gets, then nonchalantly remarks that the heat in his country strips women of their pretense.

But Greta shouldn't really mind that last crack, for in most of her dresses she is bare down to the place where the license plate would be if she were an automobile. But we must say she is clothed in beautiful scenery.

It's all so gorgeous that the story doesn't really matter. On the prince's tea plantation you notice first one thing, then another, until finally you are left to conclude the wife has had a wild cup of tea, not to mention an orchid or two of the unruly variety. If you should happen to take the children with you, don't try to explain the plot to them, just show them the pretty lady on the elephant. (Yes, Greta doing a Barnum.)

Greta really has a very nice time, except for a bad quarter of an hour when the husband exposes the prince to a tiger, only to relent. Then she starts back home with her twin-bed husband.

As this husband Lewis Stone acts like a gentleman. Although Nils Asther is hardly the living image of a Javanese, he will doubtless increase travel where tea for two would seem to be the proper caper. Meanwhile don't miss going to this alluring picture. Best shot: Natives' swift onslaught on rich banquet served on floor.—M-G-M.

Greta Garbo being tempted by Nils Asther—he's a Javanese prince, and her husband is slow. Guess the rest!

Screen Reviews

Special to SCREEN SECRETS Magazine

Doug Fairbanks and Marguerite de la Motte, who played the same part with Doug many moons ago.

"And in This Corner, Ladees—!"

Battling Kid Haines, in The Duke Steps Out.

NOW that Gene Tunny has got refined and educated and everything, perhaps Williams Haines felt there just wasn't anything else left for he himself to do. So he is behaving like a perfect little gentleman in The Duke Steps Out, which is the nearest thing to an Americanized version of Cashel Byron's Profession that Bernard Shaw is ever likely to see.

If Bill goes on like this we may expect to see him coming from Thursday night prayer meeting with Marion Davies. Not that Bill loves Marion in this picture. No, he is daffy about Joan Crawford, so daffy that he is willing to go through college for her, taking insults as he goes. He can't haul off and sock a fresh sap in the eye. A professional is always too noble—yes, really he is—to do anything like that, and anyway he must keep the secret of his double life from the girl who is so pure that she knows no more of this wicked world than what she has learned in a lousy road house.

You'd really never believe it, but Joan hasn't the faintest idea Bill is a ring-fighter until she hears over the radio that he is having a championship go in San Francisco with a bruiser who has never had the benefit of education. But the worst of it is she has been the means of cutting his head when he tried to get fresh with her, and this cut almost makes him lose the fight. But everything is lovely when Bill returns to her home in the morning and has breakfast in the kitchen. Bill is likable, and Joan's pretty nice herself. Good for young people. Best shot: Bill and Joan enjoying steak-and-onions kiss.—M-G-M.

Ho-La!

List to Doug calling you to see The Iron Mask.

LOVERS of The Three Musketeers, not to mention that gallant actor Douglas Fairbanks, will find in The Iron Mask a finely-wrought though not sensational picture. It has fewer of the incomparable Fairbanksian monkeyshines to which we have thrilled in the past, and there are long stretches when Doug's absence from the screen seems almost more than we can bear in silence.

But patience is rewarded in seeing D'Artagnan played again as only Fairbanks can play him. After all, here is a performance by one of the screen's few really great artists. It is because he is so good that it seems too bad there is not more of him.

A deal of time is taken up, perhaps necessarily, by the story of the good twin and the bad twin in a rivalry for the throne which inflicts the torture of wearing an iron mask on the good boy. But of course Doug makes that all right when he takes a hand in the game. However, it is impossible to scare up any thumping heart interest after Constance is killed off early in the casualties. One lingers fondly on that second-story kiss in which Doug hangs from her lips, as neat a thing in the kissing line as any true lover could wish to see.

There is genuine spirit, too, in the occasional verbal gestures of Doug, particularly the introductory one in which his voice rings out with the good old, "All for one and one for all!" It should be added that the magnificent beauty of the production is impressive. Yet shadows lie rather heavily over the picture, even in many of its day scenes. More sunlight should have been let into the series of adventures.

But The Iron Mask is a picture for everyone to see and to admire. It gains its chief interest and significance in proving that though Douglas Fairbanks is well along in his forties he still remains the most romantic figure in the world. Best shot: The four musketeers trooping off to fresh adventures in the world beyond.—United Artists.

William Haines is a prizefighter with one weakness —women. Gwen Lee is getting his number here.

Beauty in Distress

¶ Billie Dove in Elinor Glyn's Man and the Moment.

ELINOR GLYN'S favorite plot, we have decided, is the one where a beautiful girl secretly marries her lover, is torn from his side on the eve of their honeymoon, and suffers excrutiatingly until some dire calamity brings them together again. You see, it's so convenient to have them already married. Then you don't have to end up with a waltz to the altar. And the censors can't say anything, cause there was a wedding license hanging over the door all the time!

That, in brief, is The Man and the Moment, starring Billie Dove. But fortunately, Billie is such a beauty that a plot doesn't matter much. We see Billie in scanties, nighties, negligee, ball room gowns, frills. And we get our money's worth.

In this film, Billie is an aviation enthusiast, which allows the producer to ring in some speedy flying sequences and add that modern touch. She secretly marries Rod La Rocque, but escapes from him through a porthole. Gwen Lee schemes to marry Rod herself, and manages to be the fly in the ointment for several reels. After a wild flight over the ocean, Rod and Billie take a nose dive together. Everything comes out all right in the wash—or rather, the sea—when this desperate situation drives them into each other's arms.

But first, Rod claims the privileges of a husband, in some tensely dramatic scenes. Billie Dove emerges from this rather trying sequence with the laurels due a capable actress, and the director handles matters with a deft touch. Don't try to explain all this to the kiddies.

If you're not blind to feminine beauty—and who is? you'll want to see The Man and the Moment.—First National.

Billie Dove sees the world through a port hole in her latest. It is some sight, if you take our word for it.

Bill Boyd and Dione Ellis. Bill and his buddies make movie history with this Marine thriller.

Three Modern Musketeers

¶ Do themselves proud in Leathernecks, a movie of the Marines.

YOU can tell it to the marines, or anyone else, that Pathe has a first rate picture in The Leathernecks. This is the story of three buddies in the Marine Corps who get into beaucoup trouble while the scenes are shifting from France to Russia to China. Boyd, as one of the leathernecks, marries a Russian girl who is later abducted.

His friends set out to find the villain, and when Boyd follows them he finds one dying and the other insane. The big spot of the film is Boyd's trial for desertion, and here there is plenty of opportunity for some effective dialogue, and some equally effective "flashbacks."

The story has plenty of audience interest, it's cleverly told, and Boyd, Alan Hale and Robert Armstrong do some great work as the three leathernecks.—Pathe.

Comments in Brief:

ATTRACTIONS now being released, and which are highly recommended, are The Trial of Mary Dugan and Coquette, which will be reviewed later at length. Mary Pickford in Coquette is a new Mary, with a golden voice and golden hair bobbed short for a flapper role. The other talkie which is drawing praise from the previewers brings the voice of Norma Shearer to the screen as Mary Dugan. It's not only good drama, but it's fine mechanically in the talking sequences. The story is taken from the Broadway success, and lays bare the heart of a girl forced by circumstances to be a gold digger, whose affair with a financier ends in tragedy.

Another deadly triangle—Ralph Graves, Anita Page and Ramon Novarro. The boys fly to glory for the Navy.

Hot Tamale!

¶ Lupe Velez is a warm senorita in Wolf Song.

LUPE VELEZ isn't quite herself and she is dressed in a way to make her look as though the Spanish fandango had gone to her head, but there are flashes of fire in Wolf Song.

Things are just about as bad for Gary Cooper, for though he is a trapper, he certainly doesn't look like a girl-trapper. This is all the more surprising since Lupe loves Gary and Gary loves Lupe, according to red-hot bulletins sent out by Lupe to the press these days and not denied by Gary. Fans for this pair will simply revel in the love scenes, which are numerous.

It's all too-matter-of-fact, even when Gary, as a visiting trapper, opens the snoozing senorita's window at midnight and she hops out of bed wrapped chastely in a quilt—an old Spanish custom. This happens too suddenly to be effective, but once the elopement is negotiated events settle down into that dull routine called "married life." The most enlivening thing is a fight between Gary and Louis Wolheim.

Lupe sings industriously. She sings in the house, in the backyard, in the moonlight, in the forest—in short, she sings in everything but her sleep. But she takes her chief exercise in getting emotion off her chest. It is as a bosom actress she really attracts attention in this singing picture. Olga Nethersole used to be pretty good at this sort of thing, but Lupe goes her a heave better. Indeed, if Lupe could do as much during a storm at sea, that storm would have a lot of competition. Best shot: Lupe getting out of bed.—Paramount.

A Nifty from the Navy

¶ The Flying Fleet rivals Wings for thrills.

RAMON NOVARRO has a strong supporting cast—the whole U. S. Navy, for this picture. If that isn't enough, they've given him Anita Page and Ralph Graves for good measure. Ralph, by the way, shows his stuff in Flying Fleet as ably as in Submarine, and rates a good word.

Briefly, the plot concerns the rivalry between Ramon and Ralph for Anita Page, who smiles impartially on each. Then comes the flight to Hawaii, which Navy pilots so eagerly coveted. Ramon loses the honor to Ralph, who is forced down in a storm at sea.

His plane floats long enough for Ramon to fly to his rescue in some of the most effective aerial photography since Wings. All this is worth waiting for, after considerable preliminary newsreely sequences showing Annapolis, San Diego, airplane carriers, parades, stunts, and physical exams.

The climax proves that air pictures can have something beside a fight on a wing to provide drama. No blows are struck, yet conflict is there in great gobs (pun). Ramon sights the long lost plane floating on the sea, just as his gas runs out. He can't return to the base ship to bring help. If he lands in the sea they're all stuck. So he sets his ship afire, and falls from the heavens, leaving a black smoke trail pointing like a grimy finger to the spot. He jumps in time to escape death, and his parachute lands near the stranded aviators.

The gobs on the plane carrier ship see the sign in the sky and arrive in as thrilling a rescue as you could hope to see.

The humor is spontaneous—a characteristic of Ramon's pictures. Suspense brings the fan to the edge of the seat and keeps him there, once the plot shakes off the shackles of a slow start. High spot: Ramon dodging steeples, spires, and watertanks in his airplane.—M-G-M.

If you doubt that Lupe can scrap, watch her tackle Louis Wolheim, who's acting rough with Gary Cooper.

The MAN Behind the MASK

Lon Chaney, Hollywood's great star whose life is a mystery closed to publicity, tells why and reveals the artist under the make-up.

By RUTH BIERY

The real Lon Chaney, who feels his obligation to his public to preserve the tremendous illusion he has built up.

LON CHANEY stopped at the desk of a Detroit hotel to register. He signed his own name—Lon Chaney. The clerk looked at the signature, excused himself, and carried the word of the celebrity-visitor to the manager, who presently returned with him, hand jovially extended.

"Well, well, Mr. Chaney, this is an honor. We want you to have a great time while you're in the city. We want you to meet Henry Ford. We'll take you out to see him."

Mr. Chaney smiled a bit, asked for his room and remarked that he wasn't interested in meeting Detroit's most prominent citizen.

"Why should I? What would we have to say to one another? They bring folks out to see me at the studio. What have I to say to them? What have they to say to me? Why should Henry Ford have to shake hands unless he has some business with me?"

Lon Chaney came back to Hollywood a few weeks later. His only knowledge of Ford was that which he had gained from his reading. Soon after his return he decided to buy a second Lincoln. Somehow, the local agency did not give him the service which Mr. Ford guarantees with Lincolns. After several attempts to get the service, Lon sat down and wrote Henry a letter. Five days later the entire agency was down to render him service!

"When I had business with Henry Ford I went to him. When I didn't have business to transact, what in thunder was the use of going to see him!"

And this one sentence, given to me one morning on the set of Where East is East, his latest production, explains the psychology which motivates the actions of this mystery man of the movies.

"My mystery is a matter of good business," he continued. "Why let the public know what I look like? It kills the illusion. People want what they can't get and they can't get to Lon Chaney!"

I looked at him in amazement. Lon Chaney was supposed to be the most difficult man to interview in the picture business. Yet here he was laying his cards on the table, speaking straight from the shoulder, getting right down to business.

"Is it true, Mr. Chaney, that you never answer fan mail, never send out a fan picture, never have a photograph taken without make-up, never make personal appearances, don't go in for social activities, and that you fight constantly with your publicity department?"

He smiled—a weird smile through the three pounds of scar make-up he was wearing. "I have it in my contract about the fan mail, the fan pictures, the photographs and the personal appearances. Also, that I never work on Sunday, I quit at five-thirty and go to work at nine in the morning. As to the rows with the publicity department—" he hesitated a moment and then added, "if I had my way, I'd never have an interview in a magazine or newspaper."

"Not even this one?"

"No, ma'am, not even this one!"

I laughed. We laughed together.

"Don't misunderstand me!" He interrupted the laughter with staccato words which sounded a bit of a warning. "I'm not indifferent to my public. And I don't want the public to think me indifferent. I appreciate every admission paid to the box office. Really appreciate it. It is because I am so loyal to the ones who continue year after year to pay them, that I do not want to spoil their illusions about me. I believe it is a terrible mistake to make personal appearances and hand yourself over to the public. There is nothing left for their imaginations."

THERE was a pause—and during that pause I did some reminiscing. Ten years ago Lon Chaney was making The Miracle Man. The picture which transplanted him from no lights to bright lights in one of the professional handsprings so common to the movies. The picture which also boosted to renown Thomas Meighan, Betty Compson, Frankie Lee, everyone connected with it. Even the cameraman, Phil Rossen, became a director after the release of that picture.

Where were they now? Tommy Meighan, well, he had staged a semi-comeback in The Racket; Betty Compson—undoubtedly, one of the most popular stars of the day, due to the talkies. But she, too, had tasted her bit of professional oblivion. Frankie Lee—change in age might explain his extinction. But Lon Chaney! Through all the years there had been no change in his box-office attraction—he had consistently topped the records; his fan mail, despite the fact that he dumped it each morning in a waste container a few feet from his combined dressing room and office, still ranks with Clara Bow's, Billie Dove's and Charles "Buddy" Rogers'; the demands for his pictures number thousands weekly although the world must know by this time that he never mails any. Perhaps, after all—

As though he had read my thoughts, he interrupted. "Back in The Miracle Man days, yes, even before them, I sat down and figured out this business. 'I will create a mystery of myself on the screen. Curiosity is what killed the cow and started the fire in Chicago. If the public can't see me, they'll take a gambler's chance and continue to go to my pictures in the hopes of really seeing me,' I figured.

"I began to study make-up and deformations. I made it my business to know every trick of the make-up business. A leading man, you know how short his life is, generally speaking. A heavy—that is a little better. But a mystery man—his life on the screen would have no limits. Perhaps I should give some other reason. But the truth is, the simple truth—and I am a simple man and speak the truth when I speak at all—that even then it was merely a matter of good business."

Another pause. A simple man, yes—and a quiet one, too—this mysterious Lon Chaney. Even while being interviewed he spoke comparatively little but his words had a staccato note of sincerity in them.

TOO many good actresses and actors have been killed by publicity. The best advertising is the mouth to mouth proposition. There's no doubt about it. In the first place, it's unsolicited. Such things as 'Don't step on it, it might be Lon Chaney!'—'They ran out of animals so Lon Chaney played the part'—'The man of a thousand faces'—'Rockefeller has as many dollars as Lon Chaney has faces', and the three songs written about me with such titles as Lon Chaney'll Get You If You Don't Watch

Lon Chaney, as "Singapore Joe," in The Road to Mandalay, giving an effect at the risk of his eyesight.

As the clown in Laugh, Clown, Laugh, Lon was seen in a less gruesome but quite as effective make-up.

Lon Chaney in his never-to-be-forgotten role in The Hunchback of Notre Dame, as blood-curdling as they come.

Hobnobbing with

Introducing to our readers a new department of inside gossip from the cinema capital, written by Grace Kingsley, famous columnist and feature writer, and long an intimate of screen players, producers and celebrities in general.

THEY are again flirting with the idea, are Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, of making a picture together.

And between you and me, I think they will do it. But they will always look upon it as a crowning achievement, and therefore it may be that they will do it soon. When they do, I shouldn't be a bit surprised if they appeared in a Shakespeare drama or comedy together.

Mary and I were talking about it one day, and she spoke of their making Romeo and Juliet. But Mary is a shrewd little person, as everybody knows.

"The trouble with playing in one of those tragedies," Mary explained, "is that there is no suspense. Everybody knows just what is going to happen. Therefore, everybody parks his emotions and concentrates on his critical faculties. So a thing of that sort may be an artistic triumph, if well done, but that is about all. Of course that is enough for a real artist—or should be. But in the meantime, doesn't the least vain of us love to see them packing our shows?"

Now the talk is of The Taming of the Shrew for Doug and Mary. This is more likely to be done than any of the tragedies, since a laugh is always a laugh, and while the classic is always a classic, there is always a wider latitude allowed for changes in comedy interpretations than in tragedies.

Besides, look what a chance it gives Doug to leap in at windows and onto the backs of steeds; while as for Mary, having established herself in Coquette, as a talking picture actress, we are quite willing she should do what she will with the character of the lively Katherine.

"And then there is," said Doug the other day, "a delicious prologue to the play seldom done on the stage. What a chance in a picture!"

Poor George O'Brien!

POOR dear George O'Brien is laid up again with a broken foot. He is so active usually that this is very tough for him. He lives at the Hollywood Athletic Club, but has to content himself with watching others playing squash, handball and tennis, while he sits by.

Of course his fiancee, Olive Borden, and he are together a good deal. She is studying voice culture for the talking pictures, and a good way to exercise her knowledge is to read aloud. So she and George are getting a wonderful line on a lot of Barrie, Dickens, Shakespeare, and Mark Twain.

"Oh, yes, and I'm learning a new swimming stroke out of a book!" laughed George.

She Was Such a Little Thing!

WE WERE standing around on the set where Paul Sloane was directing a troupe of colored folks in Hearts in Dixie.

There was a little man playing a big bull fiddle — such a little man, indeed, thin and short, that it was all he could do to manage the big instrument.

"Are you married?" queried Stepan Fetchit, the star.

"Yeah," answered the little man, keeping on with his fiddling.

"I suppose your wife is big and fat, too?" drawled Fetchit.

"Yeah, she am," replied the fiddler. "She was a little thing when I married her—didn't weigh more'n a hundred and sixty. But she got fat—went right up to two hundred and ten on me!"

Speaking of the Colored Players

THERE are more different callings represented in that Hearts in Dixie company than in perhaps any bunch of players ever gathered together before.

Lilyan Tashman and Edmund Lowe—Lilyan supplied many of the clever lines in the production, In Old Arizona.

"That man over there," declared the director, "is a doctor; there are four or five college graduates in the crowd, and one aviator. Then there are bell boys and a couple of porters. They're all democratic, too — no high-hatting, though you'd expect it. And how easily they all reverted to type! Once they put on their professional rags for the picture, they became a joyous crowd of colored folk.

"No trouble about long hours either. While a white troupe of that size would have unquestionably shown two or three laggards, these colored folks would keep going without a word of complaint. Indeed, you'd think they were going to drop dead—the rest of us were worn out after nine hours or so—when all of a sudden, somebody would sit up and begin to chirp a song, and in a few minutes the whole gang would be at it, singing and dancing."

No More Pound Dogs For Sue

SUE CAROL has the kindest heart in the world, but all the same she's off getting dogs out of the pound.

I was having tea with her the other day, and she was telling me that she wanted a companion for her wire-haired fox terrier.

"Why not get a dog out of the pound?" I asked.

"Well, I did get one out," she answered. "But poor little thing, he was sick or something, and I put him in the cat and dog hospital. He was in there five weeks, and then he died."

"Find out what was the matter with him?" I inquired.

"Yes," answered Sue, ruefully, "they said he was mentally unbalanced!"

Sue Carol's kind heart got her into a dog tragedy — she's through with getting them out of the pound.

Whoopee Gang—No Foolin'

YOU can't take any member of your family to it, because that would cramp your style, and you can take only one guest. I mean the Whoopee Club of the Joy Street Gang.

The Joy Street Gang is the gang, naturally, which is playing in Joy Street, and the picture is one long series of whoopee parties. The players liked it so much that they have organized into a regular Whoopee Club, which meets every Saturday night somewhere in Hollywood—any cafe or any home of a member, provided that member lives alone, is liable to a visitation. Because a visitation is what it is.

The club has two rules, one being that you may bring no member of your family to a Whoopee proceedings, as stated above; the other that no matter what anybody does to you, you've got to take it good-naturedly.

Lois Moran is the Chief Exalted Whoopee; Nick Stuart is Noble Keeper of the Royal Archives; Ray Cannon, the picture director, is the Honarary Exalted Whoopee, Rex

Johnny Goes Marching On

The spirit of a legendary hero goes marching on in the person of John Brown, whose middle name is Mack. Fame first came on the gridiron.

Johnny Mack Brown galloped from the football field at the University of Alabama to make a stirring touchdown across the goal of Hollywood.

By CHARLES GRAY

DEEP, deep down in the South, in Dothan, Alabama, there used to be one moving picture show particularly favored by the younger set—even as in your little old home town, or mine.

One of the boys, called "the Dothan antelope," came somewhat oftener than the rest. His curious nickname had been secured on the gridiron of the local high school, where his speed in a football suit marked Johnny Mack Brown as one of the most promising players ever to be developed down where football is something of a sacred rite. The Dothan boys thought a good deal of Johnny Brown, athlete. He was, in short, the high school hero.

But the eldest son of the Browns of Dothan considered hero stuff just that much hoopla. His real heroes were the figures who flashed upon the screen of the local show house.

HOW I admired them!" he confided. "I used to watch them spell-bound, thinking how mysterious and romantic they were, thrilled by the idea of audiences all over the world watching you do your stuff. I had had enough early success to get a taste of what fame was like. I guess I envied them pretty thoroughly, without laying any plans more definite than day dreams, about entering their game. I was just a little Southern boy, in a little old Southern town. They—and Hollywood—seemed as far away as the moon."

He paused momentarily, as if but suddenly appreciating what debt he owed to those early idols. "One thing they did for me, however," he said slowly, "was to make me want to go on—and up. To get somewhere, to be somebody, and not just to spend my life in obscurity. Football seemed the best at hand to approach my ambition. I played harder than ever . . . . and you know the rest."

MAURICE MAKES

¶ Clara dodges the publicity boys.
¶ More headliners desert the stage.
¶ Harry Langdon on the vaudeville stage.

By ERNEST HAYNES, SCREEN SECRETS' New York Correspondent

WHEN I heard Maurice Chevalier sing Valentine and several other ballads at the big welcome given him at the Ritz here in New York, I decided that here was France's Al Jolson, the man who could put New York on its blasé ear if given half a chance. He's been given it. After the completion of his film, Innocents of Paris, Maurice came back to this city, came, saw, and conquered. He played at the Ziegfeld Roof, in the famous Frolic. There's one frog who does anything but croak. He's the berries—and I don't mean razzberries. Rather, jazzberries. He knows by now that when we Americans say, "No speeding allowed" we mean only a certain unsanitary salivary vulgarity. He himself declared that we want things "fast, queek, hurry-up." And so we do. So he limited himself to this type of song and favored the Frolic audience with such things as a burlesque of "Yes, we have no bananas."

Walter Winchell, now known as Little Boy Peep, tells an amusing tale about Maurice. With his heavy pay envelope, his manager presented Maurice with a check for six dollars worth of food.

"Wot is dees?" asked Maurice.

"A bill for food."

"Thees ees an insult," roared the Frenchman, "Take it to Mr. Lasky of Famous Players!"

Winchell adds that Mr. Lasky not only paid the check but enclosed a tip for the waiter.

In that man Maurice's life there's no such phrase as "Came the Dun."

Cagey Clara

WITH Clara Bow's departure from New York for Hollywood, the masculine population of Manhattan is wrapped in gloom. Clara stopped at the Park Central Hotel under the name of Stella Ames, the title role of one of her earlier shows. That lassie sure went high hat on Manhattan, refused to pose for photos or give a single interview. Clara was vacationing and publicity was poison!

Novella Tromm, whose striking beauty of face and figure contributes to the popularity of The New Moon, at the Imperial Theatre.

Clara's one of the many little Brooklyn girls who have learned the difference between right and rung on the ladder of success. Her name has become synonymous with a certain two letter word that is applied to babies before daddy calls them Henry or Mabel, and while it isn't so long ago since she won the beauty contest that touched off her rocket, it's a far cry from her pa's Coney Island hot dog stand to Hollywood. As far as the youth of America is concerned, Cupid's famous bow is now spelled with a capital "B."

Broadway Mourns

IF WORD goes around that black flags are floating from the Woolworth tower and New York's city hall, the explanation will be that Manhattan is losing or lending some of its favorite legit performers. Ann Pennington, knees and all, is kissing the Scandals bye-bye in favor of Warner Brothers. Hal Skelly, the loved and lovable star in last season's hit, Burlesque, has left for Hollywood to play the lead in Paramount's talking version of the same play for the movies. Then there's Betty Compton, who's been holding everyone in Hold Everything for some time now. She's signed for a ten-week job with Paramount. Osgood Perkins who wowed 'em in Spread Eagle and The Front Page studied the violin for nine years and is going to squeak for himself in a talkie. And Haymond Hitchcock, familiarly dubbed "Hitchy," has completed a short talking picture titled, An Evening At Home With Hitchy under Bryan Foy's direction. (Bryan is the son of Eddie, friends.)

What's more, M-G-M has signed the Happiness Boys for movietone work and Jeanne Eagels is already at work on her second all-talking picture after The Letter which just opened in New York with considerable success. It's Jealousy, the New York stage hit, which is being

Funster Langdon Returns

NEXT spring, something big's going to happen. Harry Langdon will return to the screen. He'll once more thrill the fans who consider him a second Chaplin, a superior Buster Keaton, the original man who makes you laugh. I saw him at the Albee Theatre, Brooklyn, where he was playing in vaudeville. Harry looks like someone giving an imitation of someone giving an imitation of someone giving an imitation of Harry Langdon. With his glasses on it's almost impossible to recognize him. He looks like any Tom, Dick or Harry. But it's Harry.

Massa Langdon won't divulge the name of the company who's exploiting him, but inside info has it that he's to put out two-reel comedies (talking) for M-G-M. Harry had a lot of bad breaks. In Strong Man and Tramp, Tramp, Tramp, he convinced his fans that he was all set to corner the comedy market. Even though at certain times Harry was a bear, it turned out to be a bull market. His attempt to run his own production unit for First National was a frost. But now he's back. This time he's going to worry about being funny.

What's more, Harry admits that he's to be married. But not to an actress. Oh, no. This is a girl who's a real old-fashioned home girl with no ambitions for a career but a warm love of the fireside and a yen for a Harry, Junior. Harry, who stopped at the Paramount Hotel in Papa Knickerbocker's burg, is only booking two weeks ahead on his $3,500 a week salary in vodvil. He wants to get back to the Kalifs of Kalifornia where a guy gets up with the dawn and goes to bed at dusk instead of vice versa—with emphasis on the vice.

Tex and Her Show

THERE'VE been plenty of parties around these parts. On board the ship, the Ile de France, Warner Brothers gave a blow-out in honor of the opening of their big super special spectacle—Noah's Ark. A great shindig with snappy music and Texas Guinan and Gilda Gray on deck—and I mean deck. Tex gave her rip-roaring show and if anyone wanted to give a little girl a hand spring, it should have been to the particular dark lassie who stood out in contrast to the light babies like Josephine Baker on a snow bank. Gilda Gray's speed started when the audience gave her terrific applause. She took the hint and got a wiggle on. And as far as such good times are concerned in New York—Tex Guinan marks the spot.

Mildred Stevens and her tricky golf outfit are an important part of the attractions on view in the smash hit, Follow Thru. She would be a hazard on any fairway.

Press Agents' Frolic

YOU should have been at the A. M. P. A. ball at the Astor the other night. It lasted till after dawn and was certainly a snappy exhibition of New York's hot stuff. The A. M. P. A. is a gang of press agents who let you in on the inside of movie doings. Among the evening's entertainments was a talking news reel produced especially for the occasion. It was the scream of New York sassiety! There were several acts from the Broadway hit, Fioretta, with chorus girls looking, oh, so au naturel, and a Cinderella contest in which the gal who could wear a number 1-C shoe won the prize. Believe it or not, one lassie did. If fame comes to her, her favorite ditty will be Shoe made me what I am today . . . Heh, heh. What's more, they say that Tex Guinan went on with her show around six o'clock, but after all, there is a certain time in the a. m. when a P. A. ceases to be a reporter and becomes a sleepy head.

But Fanny Brice, Lionel Atwill, Leon Errol and Gilda Gray acted as judges for the costume prizes. Then there was a fine supper at which the ladies on diet who swear by the slogan, "Never say dine" were out of luck. A great feed. You should ought to of been there.

Senorita Cyclone

Enter Gary Cooper into the life of Lupe Velez in this conclusion to her amazingly frank life story, told in her own vivid words to Ruth Biery by

Lupe Velez

My life up till this installment:

MY LIFE, it has been very different. As a child I am riding with my father in the Mexican army; I see mens killed, and see many mens try to kill my father. But from the early days, when I am very young, I have always dance and flirt—the things I like best in life. I have my first sweetheart when I am seven, and then when I am thirteen I fall very much in love—my mother is afraid so she send me to a convent in the United States.

Later, at home the money is all gone and my mother send for me; we go to Mexico City, where I do my dances and songs for the boss of the Principal Theatre. Very soon he give me a big part, and I become quick a hit on the stage. This make my sweetheart angry—he do not like for me to dance and sing and show myself to all the peoples. He say for me to choose between him and the theatre. He is no longer poor, like when I first meet him, and knows he can support me with every luxury. I love Mil-a-tone, but the audience to applaud Lupe—this I love more, so I stay on the stage and get to be the biggest star in Mexico. Then I have a chance to come to Hollywood, and I do—but I arrive with only one dollar. Finally I go to a hotel and they call up Richard Bennett at the theatre and he say to take care of me, so I think everything is going to be easy.

I AM four days too late for The Dove. It has already opened with Dorothy Mackay. The man who bring me from Mexico to play with Mr. Bennett come up with a paper and say if I do not sign it I cannot stay in this country. I sign it. I do not know that I promise to pay one-fourth of all the moneys that I make for five years in America to this mans. I do not put his name down because I will not give him the publicity of having his name in any story written by Lupe. I pay him ten thousand dollars because I am so young and know no English. And sign that silly paper.

He get me a job with Fanchon and Marco and then the Music Box Theatre boss, he want me. I am to play with Fannie Brice. What a good woman she is. She is just like a mother to Lupe in this country. I do not know what I would do without Fannie Brice to take care of me.

I begin on Valentine's Day, 1927. I am a valentine brought from Mexico City to Miss Brice. I kick open the heart, a big red heart made of paper, and jump out on the stage to sing and to dance for them.

I am singing a sentimental song when my little skirt start to go off me. I grab it and keep pulling it up all the time I am supposed to be sentimental. They laugh and they yell; I stop the show for them. The American people go crazy just like the Mexican peoples. They keep calling me and I do more and more; I imitate a policemans; I sing Charlie, My Boy; I dance and shimmy and the hula; I do everything until there is nothing more I knows to do for them. Fannie takes me out and says, "Speak a few words, Lupe."

I am not skeered. Lupe has never been skeered of any peoples. So I say, "Meesees and Sirs"—

In Spanish, that is correct. But Fannie stop me and say, "No, no, Lupe. It is "Ladies and Gentlemen."

I stop and look at her and say, "Naughty, naughty, Fannie, eet is no goot to say "Ladies and Gentlemen!"

We stand there on the stage and she says, "Say Ladies and Gentlemen, Lupe." And I will not say it. I will not say it because to me it is bad. I tell her I see it in bad places; I see it on doors which peoples do not talk about in public.

They laugh till they nearly split. Then I say, "Me love; much love; me many kisses; goodbye." I have learn all these words working for Mr. Fanchon and Marco.

Fannie says for twenty-two days I stop the show. Harry Rapf sees us and ask me to take a test. I do not want to take a test; I do not want to go in the movies; I want to stay in the theatre. But he make me take it and Hal Roach see it and get to me first and I sign for him. Fannie Brice, she write to Mr. Ziegfeld and he send me a contract to play in Rio Rita for five hundred dollars a week, but by this time I see my test and I think I am some good and I want to stay in the movies. I go with Hal Roach and then Douglas Fairbanks see me and put me in The Gaucho. Then everybody know the rest of my movie story.

The first day on the set I have a terrible fight. They want me to go barefoot. I have ugly feet; I can never go barefoot. I can show the rest of my body but I can never show my feet in any picture. I yell and I scream and finally they give me some shoes to wear. They are awful shoes but they are better than the bare feet of Lupe.

There is much I do not understand in this country. I do not know what word means something bad and what word means something good. When I first go on the set in the movies everybody teaches me things I must say. The prop boys, the electricians, the extras—oh, everybody. I do not know I swear. They think it is a little fun to hear me swear. It makes people feel what you are saying. I swear so much that Mr. Schenck send for me. He say, "Lupe, you know why Mary Pickford is America's sweetheart?"

"No, Mr. Schenck."

"It is because she is so sweet, such a lady. Did you ever hear Miss Pickford swear, Lupe?"

"No, Mr. Schenck."

"Did you ever hear Miss Talmadge swear on the set?"

"No, Mr. Schenck."

When Lupe left for New York, Gary said good-bye. Did Lupe whisper "Mi querido"? Sure—cause they're in love!

How Al Santell Makes Stars Shine

and yet, today, he is probably my greatest booster. No one had ever taken that Irish quirk of his and said, "Don't act. Walk through the picture. Be yourself."

A director's great problem with Jack is to keep him from acting. In Subway Sadie he is supposed to be looking at the moon. He was all for getting sentimental when he says, "Sadie, will you marry me?" He wanted to take her hand, to do something, not just sit there. I told him he'd have to sit there! He hemmed and hawed and stormed all over the place. He knew he'd be rotten. He was really belligerent. Then he saw one shot in the rushes and came dashing over, "You're a sweet —!" with his arm around me.

It was one of the prettiest things he ever did and he didn't do a thing. "If you're a real actor you should be able to tell love through your eyes," I told him. And he told it. Yes, the problem is to keep Jack Mulhall from acting.

DOROTHY MACKAILL has a practical mind. I believe she gave her first really American characterization in Subway Sadie. I had directed her before in A Dancer of Paris. She always has something else to do at five o'clock, something which is terribly important. I remember one time in New York. She was waiting around for a closeup. She asked how soon and I told her when I was finished. Finally, I saw her slip away. I sent a boy after her and told her not to take off her make-up. He returned and reported that she had smeared it all over her face when he told her. I went down those stairs four at a time. She was just stepping into her car and ordering her chauffeur to hurry!

I jumped on the running board. "Get back up there!" I ordered. "Listen, baby, when I tell you what you're supposed to do, you do it!"

Which is the way to handle Mackaill —make her do it!

I directed Colleen Moore in Orchids and Ermine. She is the greatest pantomimist on the screen among the women and second only to Chaplin among the men. And she is the best advised star in pictures. She is a supreme artist but a tutored artist. When in doubt she confers with her husband, John McCormick. She is really two people. You don't only work with her, you work through him. Though you may never see him or talk to him, yet you feel his influence. I cannot give concrete, specific examples but I can say this. You ask her to do something in a scene which she is dubious about and she's not quite as prone to dicuss it with you as with John. If he says it's O. K., it goes. She's a smart little girl and undoubtedly one of our greatest artists and shrewdest screen women.

"One thing my daughter must be told"

Says a mother of today about this phase of feminine hygiene

No longer need women fear offending. Deodorization* is a new feature of this sanitary pad, which excels in comfort and ease of disposability.

HOWEVER carefully she may guard and advise, no mother can protect her daughter from self-consciousness at certain times.

If she constantly is aware that she may be offending others, good times are impossible for her; light-heartedness flees.

That is why mothers and daughters both learn with relief that each Kotex sanitary pad is now treated to end all odor. The fears that were once inevitable now disappear.

Shaped to fit, too

Because corners of the pad are rounded and tapered, it may be worn without evidence under the most clinging gown. There is none of that conspicuous bulkiness so often associated with old-fashioned methods.

You can adjust the filler to suit your own special needs. Cellucotton absorbent wadding, with which Kotex is filled, is amazingly absorbent—5 times more than cotton itself. It is easily disposed of (see simple directions in each package). No laundering is necessary. A new process makes it softer than ever before.

Buy a box today . . . comes in two sizes—the Regular and Kotex Super. 45c for a box of twelve (regular) at any drug, dry goods or department store; also obtainable through vending cabinets in rest-rooms by West Disinfecting Co.

* Kotex is the only sanitary pad that deodorizes by patented process. (Patent No. 1,670,587.)

SUPER-SIZE KOTEX

Formerly 90c—Now 65c

Some women find Super-size Kotex a special comfort. Exactly the same as the Regular size Kotex, but with added layers of Cellucotton absorbent wadding.

Who's Who in Filmdom

Charles Farrell

Charles Farrell

CHARLES FARRELL was born in Cape Cod, Massachusetts, on August 9, 1905. He received his entire education in his native state, finishing at Boston University. Yielding to the desire to go on the stage, he spent a year in vaudeville. Between then and his first efforts to get into pictures as an extra, he made a living at "everything." After many small bits and parts, he was signed for the lead in Old Ironsides, which immediately established him as a film favorite. Rough Riders followed. Then came the big chance of his career as Chico in Seventh Heaven. It was this picture that also brought Janet Gaynor into prominence. Fazil, The Red Dancer, and Street Angel followed. More recently Charlie has made another picture with petite Janet, as yet untitled. Charlie is six feet two inches tall, weighs one hundred and seventy-five pounds, has brown hair and brown eyes, and speaks with a New England drawl.

Vilma Banky

Vilma Banky

VILMA BANKY, one of the most beautiful blondes on the screen today, was born at Hagydorg, Hungary on January 9, 1902, the daughter of John and Katalin Konzies. After completing her education, she decided on a motion picture career, and became a UFA star for three or four years. In 1925, she arrived in Hollywood to make pictures for Samuel Goldwyn, whom she met when he was touring Europe. Her first picture, The Dark Angel, opposite Ronald Colman, instantly proclaimed her a real find. Rudolph Valentino next asked for her as his leading lady in The Eagle and The Son of a Sheik. The Winning of Barbara Worth established the Banky-Colman team which brought to the screen The Night of Love, The Magic Flame, and Two Lovers. Since then she has made two starring productions, The Awakening, and This Is Heaven. Vilma Banky was married to Rod La Rocque on June 26, 1927.

Victor McLaglen

Victor McLaglen

PERHAPS the most traveled man in pictures is Victor McLaglen, who has lived in twenty-three countries throughout the world. He was born in England on December 11, 1886, and was educated in South Africa, where his father was a clergyman. As numerous as his homes were his occupations. He has been a boxer, prospector, miner, wrestler, soldier, and vaudeville entertainer. In 1920, he entered pictures in The Call of the Road. What Price Glory was his first outstanding success. Mother Machree, Carmen, A Girl in Every Port, The River Pirate, Captain Lash, and Strong Boy followed.

Victor is six feet three inches tall, weighs two hundred and twelve pounds, has black hair, and hazel eyes. He is married to Enid Lamonte, and has two children to whom he is devoted—Andrew and little Sheila. Riding, fishing, traveling, gardening, and driving are among his many interests.

June Collyer

June Collyer

ALTHOUGH June Collyer comes of a substantial theatrical family, she led a strictly non-professional life until less than two years ago. As Dorothea Heermance, she was an acknowledged member of the Four Hundred of New York, the city in which she first saw the light of day on August 19, 1907. When Fox decided to make East Side, West Side, in New York, they searched among the genuine West Siders for a girl who could play the society sweetheart. June Collyer, hearing of this plan, agreed to take a screen test with dozens of other society buds. To her surprise, she won the role. Pictures did not interest her very much, for she had never thought of earning a living; but when a Fox contract was drawn up, she signed it. Four Sons, Woman Wise, and Hangman's House followed. In 1928, she was chosen as a Wampas Baby Star.

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

YOUNG DOUG was born in New York City on December 9, 1909, the son of Douglas Fairbanks and his former wife, Beth Sully. After receiving his education in private schools in New York, Los Angeles, Pasadena, Paris, and London, young Doug fulfilled his childhood ambition of following in the footsteps of his famous father and went on the screen. Stephen Steps Out, a Famous Players production filmed in 1923, was his first real screen role, though he did a bit in American Aristocracy 'way back in 1916. The Air Mail, Stella Dallas, Padlocked, and Man Bait followed. Young Doug proved a successful legitimate actor in The Ambush, The Light, The Jest, Saturday's Children, and Young Woodley. Motion picture companies clamored for his services. The Barker definitely established young Doug as an actor of real power, and A Woman of Affairs emphasized his success.

Anita Page

A FIFTEEN year old school-girl decided to become an actress. To rid her of her stage-struck notions, her parents obtained a "bit" for her at a Long Island studio near her home. But instead of curing her, the initial venture made her all the more ambitiously inclined toward a film career. The pretty young student was Anita Pomares, known on the screen today as Anita Page.

After keeping a promise to finish high school, Anita joined a newly organized film company, whose pictures proved flops. In the Spring of 1928, little Miss Page came West, and went to M-G-M to look for work. A screen test was finally made, and Anita was signed to play the lead in Telling the World, opposite William Haines. Our Dancing Daughters, The Flying Fleet, and The Broadway Melody quickly established her as one of the most decorative and talented newcomers on the screen.

John M. Stahl to give the boy a chance —a bit in In Old Kentucky. Now "Step" is the "greatest colored comedian" to Stahl and each of his subsequent directors.

A serious interview with the actor is well nigh impossible because of an innate jocular sense. To the question "Pastime?" he answers "eatin' and sleepin.'" He enumerates his children as "two hot feet from Dixie." Preference for literature is "corporally none, spiritually the Bible." Which is a reminder that Stepin Fetchit is a devout Catholic and a seminary graduate.

The actor's ambition is to become "dark applause hit of the screen." He is "married" to "The Dancing Fool"—his animal pets are "fleas and chinches" and so on ad infinitum. Truly "Step" is as difficult to probe as the w. k. John Barrymore.

He does not like to appear in all-colored casts. This he reasoned with logic: "If you throw a black shoe into a heap of other black shoes, it wouldn't be noticeable, would it?" he asks. "On the other hand a black shoe, tossed in a snowdrift, would catch all the attention."

Daring Death to Thrill the Fans

I got them off. For about three thousand feet I shot downward. At last I got a glove off, found the ring, and pulled the cord.

"The chute opened in a stiff breeze, and as I neared the ground I realized my danger. Trees loomed up ahead. Just in time I managed to pull the shroud lines and tilt the chute, emptying some of the wind out. That saved me from the trees, but landed me so quickly I broke my right foot."

As they watched, another smoke pot belched forth from the fuselage of the Gotha. Phil Jones was still there—firing the smoke pots! He was doomed.

No one ever learned why the game mechanic stuck with the ship until it crashed in the orange groves, a splintered mass of wreckage.

The great climax of Hell's Angels had turned out a tragedy.

His Question

W. S. VAN DYKE, surrounded by friends and baggage, was standing at a Los Angeles railroad station, starting off for Africa to film Trader Horn.

An old red cap shuffled over to a Pullman porter and wagged his head.

"Every time I see that fellow he's either goin' or comin' somewhere," he said. "Is he just on his way or already here?"

I Turned To Ice When I Tried To Talk

—But Now I Can Sway An Audience of Thousands!

I HAD always been painfully bashful. When trying to carry on even the most commonplace conversation my voice would sound unnatural and my hands and knees would tremble. Often I would listen to an argument among a group and become so keenly interested that I would want to voice my own opinion—yet timidity would keep me silent. I never had the courage to stand up for what I knew to be my rights—I was always afraid of "what people will say," of ridicule. Since my childhood I had had a secret desire to appear in public—to be active in politics — but my shyness was so great that I turned to ice when I tried to talk—in even the smallest gathering!

My inability to talk was also affecting my business success. I dreaded going in and asking for a raise—I was afraid of any situation that meant using my voice—having to express myself. I didn't know how to present the ideas which I was sure the firm could use. I was just a plodder—a truck horse, capable of doing a lot of heavy work but of no use where brilliant performance was required. Often I would see men who were not half so thorough nor so hard working as I, promoted to positions where they made a brilliant showing—not through hard work, but through their ability to talk cleverly and convincingly—to give the appearance of being efficient and skillful.

What 20 Minutes a Day Will Show You

How to talk before your club or lodge
How to propose and respond to toasts
How to address board meetings
How to tell entertaining stories
How to make a political speech
How to make after-dinner speeches
How to converse interestingly
How to write letters
How to sell more goods
How to train your memory
How to enlarge your vocabulary
How to develop self-confidence
How to acquire a winning personality
How to strengthen your will-power and ambition
How to become a clear, accurate thinker
How to develop your power of concentration
How to become master of any situation

In Twenty Minutes a Day

And then suddenly I discovered a new easy method which made me a forceful speaker almost overnight. I learned how to dominate one man or an audience of thousands—how to say just the right words at the right time, how to win and hold the attention of those around me, how to express my thoughts simply and clearly, yet in a pleasing, interesting and amusing way. In just a few months I was able to make campaign speeches for a local candidate—I who a short time before had turned to ice when I tried to carry on an ordinary conversation!

Soon I had won salary increases, promotion, popularity, power. Today I always have a ready flow of speech at my command. I am able to rise to any occasion, to meet any emergency with just the right words, to approach all types of people with ease and fearlessness. And I accomplished all this by developing the natural power of speech possessed by everyone, but cultivated by so few—by simply spending 20 minutes a day in my own home on this most fascinating subject.

Laura La Plante gives a lot of personal attention to her fan mail in spite of the many busy hours she spends at Universal Studios. Her fan club is one of the most loyal.

Fan Club Department

The columns of this department are devoted to the latest fan club news. Information about the clubs may be obtained by writing to Grace Simpson, conductor of this department, in care of SCREEN SECRETS.

Club for Al Jolson

AT LAST a fan club for our old friend Al Jolson has been formed. Dues are $1.00 a year, which entitles members to club news, photo, etc. Glenn F. De Poe is the founder of the club and would like to hear from everyone. Those wishing to join his "Mammy" Club please form at the right —and don't crowd! Plenty of room in this club for all of you.

The Joan Crawford Club

A CLUB for Joan Crawford has been started by Mildred Sidor. Dues are fifty cents per year. Anna Janush is the Secretary and would like to get in touch with all of Joan's admirers.

Photos of Billie and Buddy Given

A NEW club has just been formed which calls itself simply "The Fan Club." Dues are twenty-five cents per year. Honorary members so far include Joan Crawford, Billie Dove, Ronald Colman, Anita Page, Charles "Buddy" Rogers, Richard Arlen, Colleen Moore, Richard Dix, Barry Norton and Doris Kenyon. Charles Komassa is the Secretary of this club and he states that every girl member will receive a photo of Buddy Rogers and every boy member will receive one of Billie Dove.

Club for Estelle

THE Estelle Taylor club, of which Marjorie Ferguson is President, now has one hundred and fifty members in its own town—which is Gonic, New Hampshire—and two hundred and forty mail members from all parts of the country. One must be eighteen or older to join this club and dues are ten cents a week. That's more than the usual fan club dues amount to, but the club makes up for it by having all sorts of good times, including local dances and parties. The willing helpers type a paper once a month and a copy is sent to the mail members.

Irene Rich Club Edits Paper

DUES to the Irene Rich club have been raised to twenty-five cents a year and the club is now editing a little paper called The Scribbler. Miss Florence Hart, President of this club, has also started a fan club for Alice Day. Dues to this are ten cents a year and each member will receive a nice photo of Alice.

The CBBR Club

HERE'S a joint club for Buddy Rogers and Clara Bow. It is known as the CBBR Fan Club and already has twenty-five members. The head office is at Edinburg, Texas, and anyone wanting to join can write Miss Erin Sam Turner, in care of this department, and receive full particulars. Dues, by the way, are thirty cents yearly.

Valentino Memorial Club Formed

ANNIE E. OKERMAN, of Slayton, Minnesota, announces that the Valentino Memorial Club dues are seventy-five cents yearly, to be paid in three payments—twenty-five cents when joining; twenty-five cents on Rudy's birthday and twenty-five cents on his memorial day. The club intends to send all the money it takes in directly to George Ullman, who was Rudy's friend and manager, you know, to go toward a permanent Valentino memorial.

A "Different" Club

HERE'S a new kind of a club for movie fans and fans who are interested in aviation. It is called the Aviation Correspondence Fan Club and Helen E. Donovan is the Secretary. Club headquarters are in Ontario, Canada. The club is composed of movie and aviation enthusiasts who correspond with one another and edit the club monthly publication, The Beacon Light, which consists of aviation stories mostly and some poems and articles submitted by the members. Dues to this club are sixty cents a year or if you wish, five cents may be paid each month. The Beacon Light is sent free to all members of the club.

Rudy's Recollections

THE Natacha Rambova Ramblers have started a new membership campaign, lasting for the next six months. Every member who gets five new members will receive, as a prize, a copy of Natacha's new book about her experiences with Rudy—Rudolph Valentino Recollections by His Wife. This is written partly by Natacha and partly by Mrs. Winifred Hudnut, her mother, and tells many little details about the true Rudy and Natacha, and probably all of their fans will want to try to win a copy.

Amazing Dreams

could see my sister running back and forth in great distress. I kept trying to call to her and no sound would come. When I woke up my throat was dry. All day I worried about her and finally I wired to Mexico City to ask if she needed me. No answer came and I was just on the point of dashing down there when a friend wired me from Mexico that my sister was critically ill and calling for me."

It was not a relative but a friend who profited by Marie Prevost's subconscious reveries. She dreamed that her chum had fallen down a well while she herself hung over the side desperately trying to reach the victim. The girl was actually several hundred miles away at the time but Marie was so wrought up over the vision that she telegraphed for news the next morning, only to discover that her friend had been taken to the hospital for an operation and was absolutely without funds.

THE warning that came in Richard Barthelmess' dream was successfully disregarded although only a miracle saved his life. Richard had been making a picture in Virginia and on its completion an aviator friend offered to transport the star to New York in his plane.

This was before aviation had become a popular sport and Richard had never been in the air. However, he eagerly accepted the invitation. The night before the flight Dick dreamed the same thing over and over. That he got into the plane, flew up to the clouds, and there the pilot fell overboard, leaving him alone and panic-stricken in the far sky lane. He knew nothing about controls.

Morning came; the star and his pilot boarded the plane and took off. The flight was made easily until they began to circle over the landing field; then Dick noticed that they seemed to be taking a haphazard course. They landed with a terrific jolt, but the engine kept on running.

"What do we do now?" asked Dick, rising.

His pilot made no reply, nor did he shut off the engine. Dick touched him and his head rolled to one side. When Dick had summoned aid it was discovered that the pilot had died in midair and Dick had been brought to earth with a dead hand at the joystick.

The Postal Pouch editor will answer your questions on this page. For a personal answer enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

T. G. S.: John Gilbert is plain American, so far as I know, but his real name is Pringle. No relation to Aileen. He is five feet, ten inches tall and weighs one hundred and sixty.

LUCILLE IVY: Your questions have been answered elsewhere in this column.

THE ORCHID: A hot-house plant, eh? And expensive. Ruth Roland is not very much interested in pictures any more—she is too busy making a few million in real estate. Yes, dollars, Orchy, not bricks. If she never works in another picture it will be a hundred years too soon, so far as her pocket book is concerned. Priscilla Dean still makes "quickies," though she has been concentrating more on vaudeville lately, with pleasing success. You'll see Mary Pickford next in Coquette, from a well-known stage production. Yes, I think Ruth Elder is going to try the Hollywood racket right along now—on the Universal lot. Gone are the good old days? Tut, tut, Daisy! Better days are coming—noisier ones, anyhow, with the talkies. Mon ami? Don't call me a soap—I prefer cleansing cream.

MARY H.: No. Clara Bow never married Victor Fleming. It is said the engagement was announced by the IT girl because Gilbert Roland snubbed her. Maybe yes, maybe no. Anyhow, she has never been married, but has announced that she longs for a little gray home in the West and babies. Oh, yes! Charlie Chaplin ever married to Vilma Banky? Aw, say, Mary, what sort of magazines are you reading, anyhow? Better subscribe to SCREEN SECRETS for five years—though one month will fill your head full of a few dollars' worth of information for only 25c. No, to that question—no, no, no! Claire Windsor and Bert Lytell are divorced. Mary Astor is twenty-three years old; Jackie Coogan, fourteen; Mary Pickford, thirty-five. Write to her at United Artists, Hollywood. Yes, she was married to Owen Moore many years ago.

VERONA S.: Bless your heart, you're not a bit too soon! Come every month if you like. Here are the weights and heights you wanted: Molly O'Day, five feet, two and one-half inches, one hundred and eight pounds; Audrey Ferris, five feet, two inches, one hundred and five; Camilla Horn, five feet, four inches, one hundred and ten; Eva von Berne, five feet, three inches, one hundred and twenty; Mary Duncan, five feet, five and one-half, one hundred and fifteen; Phyllis Haver, five feet six inches, one hundred and twenty-six; Aileen Pringle, five feet four inches, one hundred and nineteen; Betty Compson, five feet, two inches one hundred and ten; Doris Dawson, five feet, one inch, one hundred and six. Nancy Carroll is Mrs. Jack Kirkland in private life.

Who Will Be Next?

Each month some star will send a personal reply to one of the letters of inquiry received by Postal Pouch. Clara Bow answered one of the letters this month and sent a charming, large-sized autographed photograph of herself to Kitty Hovan of Masontown, Pa. Kitty's letter and Clara's reply appear below.

Dear Postal Pouch Editor:

I am writing you a few lines to ask you a couple of questions about my favorite star, Clara Bow. I simply adore her, and if I had the last penny, I'd save up to see her plays, as they are simply marvelous. I hope I see my questions answered in SCREEN SECRETS. I get it every month and never miss one word. Sometimes I read it a couple of times. I'm always especially happy to read about Clara Bow, because I just love her.

What picture is Clara going to play in next? Is she engaged to anyone? Whoever wins her will sure get a beauty. Has Clara any sisters or brothers? Where was she born?

I'll be watching eagerly for the answer to my questions. Many thanks to SCREEN SECRETS, that magazine of personality!

Your friend,
KITTY HOVAN,
Masontown, Pennsylvania.

Dear Miss Hovan:

I was very much pleased with your lovely letter and appreciated deeply the nice things you said.

Recently I finished my first talking picture, The Wild Party. You can't imagine how thrilling it is to hear one's own voice on the screen. I hope I can play in many talking pictures, because they are so new and interesting, and I hope you will like The Wild Party just half as much as I enjoyed working in it.

I was born in Brooklyn, New York. While I have no brothers or sisters, I have always been fortunate in having many friends. I am not engaged to be married.

Sincerely,
CLARA BOW.

MARTHA H.: You must be starting a photograph gallery—yes, what? Write to Fay Wray and Gary Cooper at Paramount; Nancy Carroll, the same; Dolores del Rio at Tec-Art, Hollywood; Ben Lyon, Alice White, Colleen Moore, Rod La Rocque, and Corinne Griffith at First National, Burbank; Douglas Fairbanks at United Artists, Hollywood; Sue Carol at Fox, Hollywood; Tom Mix at F. B. O., Hollywood; and Patsy Ruth Miller at Universal, Universal City. And the Postal Pouch Man, SCREEN SECRETS Magazine, Robbinsdale, Minnesota. (P. S. This is not an ad.)

ROBERT McW.: Florence Lawrence was the first motion picture star to become popular. She dates back even before Mary Pickford's time—back in the old Biograph days when Griffith was lord of the movies. She has been working in bits around Hollywood since her return to the screen after a serious accident.

MRS. N. C. W.: Sam Wood, the M-G-M director, was born and reared in Philadelphia. He came to Los Angeles as an investment broker before he got sidetracked into motion pictures. That's his own name, too. Apparently you're confusing him with somebody else.

DON.: See "Ruby F." and "Betty H." above for data on Clara and Buddy. Billie Dove is twenty-five years old and has been married to Irvin Willat for several years. The best actor on the screen . . . ? Well, my favorite is Felix—no foolin'!

Dorothy Revier, star in the screen version of Owen Davis' famous Broadway hit, The Donovan Affair, Columbia's first all talkie.

Cash or Splash?

But nine people make eighteen hands and eighteen hands can do a lot of work when willing. So the Quillans bought an old home near Griffith Park.

Well, it didn't look like so much, this new-old home, but Mamma Quillan, Papa Quillan and all the little Quillans got busy. They practically rebuilt that house, made a lot of new furniture, raked the yard, cleaned up the garden, pruned the fruit trees and now the place is referred to as The Quillan Estate.

Eddie drives a little old Ford roadster back and forth to work, to the beach on Sundays and out to the golf course.

Another member of the Thrift Club is Barbara Kent. Now Barbara feels this way about it:

"If I begin my picture career by being conservative I will end it the same way; but if I spend all I make now I will always do it and will eventually end up by looking for charity."

Barbara lives with her mother and father and brother in a comfortable home on Laurel Drive. They have no servants, only one car and they do not indulge in spectacular entertaining. Barbara feels just as ritzy in a dress she has designed and made with her own hands as she would in an imported one. "You'd be surprised how little they really cost," she said, "and how much pleasure you get out of making them. Particularly designing them. I start out with a few straight lines and keep adding fluffs here and something else there until finally it begins to look like a possibility. Then I begin figuring how much material it will take and how much it will cost."

THEN there's Gary Cooper. In spite of the fact that Gary is permitted to drive the family Packard he is far from a spendthrift. Gary lives with his father and mother in a large rambling old home, as near like an old ranch house as was possible to obtain in our modernistic Hollywood. He has no secretary, valet or chauffeur. The only thing about him that resembles splash is a wrist watch, a very expensive one. But Gary grins when you mention that and says, "It's a gift."

Gary is putting some of his money into a ranch in Montana. The rest he is carefully investing, guarding against the rainy day when he will be referred to as having been an actor.

Even Alice White, who isn't supposed to do anything so sensible as think of the future, is feathering her nest while the feathering is good. She lives alone in a Hollywood apartment. A quiet, moderate-priced little place it is but Alice has made the otherwise chilly atmosphere cozy and livable with an array of fantastic dolls, a miniature piano, and a few pretty lamps. Most of these are gifts from fans. The bills for clothes are very little, yet Alice is as well dressed as any other girl in pictures.

"I look just as well in a twenty-five dollar dress as I do in a two hundred fifty dollar one, so why guild the lily? The studio pays for my costumes so I am not cheating the public out of the price they pay for scenery."

AND so on down the list of players. Conservatism holds sway. The old Spanish saying that "There is no Tomorrow" has nothing to do with the new Hollywood idea that "A Dollar saved is a Dollar Earned." And the most surprising of it all is that it's the kids, the youngsters, the new-comers who are doing most of the saving.

unless you remove cold cream this way...

1 Blackheads, acne, skin troubles are likely to begin, because you are rubbing cold cream further into the pores instead of rubbing it off.

2 High laundry bills and ruined towels will result. Cold cream—oils—shorten the life of a towel disastrously. The finer the towel the worse the damage.

HERE'S a new way to remove cold cream that absorbs the cream, rubs it off, and with it the dirt, oil, make-up that can ruin the finest skin if left in the pores. Kleenex Cleansing Tissues are made to do what harsh towels and grimy old cloths can't do. You use three sheets at a time, then discard them, hygienically, like paper. And they cost so little that high laundry bills and ruined towels are extravagant in comparison. You'd better try Kleenex today if you haven't already. Just see what a difference there is in your complexion, after even a week's trial.

Marshall Neilan, as the square-jawed hero in the days before he became a director, in a lively scene with Jack and Mary Pickford.

Backtrailing Movie History

Movie personalities and developments of a decade or so ago.

HAROLD LLOYD made his screen debut in the Spring of 1913, as an extra in an old Edison production. Made up as a three-fourths naked Yaqui Indian, he served a tray of food to the white man's party in one fleeting scene for the magnificent sum of three dollars. That money looked as large to him then as his reputed millions today.

After two years of "heavy drammer," Raymond Griffith was graduating into Mack Sennett comedies in 1918. Wearying somewhat of acting, he tried scenario writing and directing. It was about this time that John Gilbert tried his hand at wielding the megaphone, with poor success.

Neil Hamilton, unsuccessful in his attempt to get a job acting in New Haven, went to New York in 1917, and got extra work at Paramount and Vitagraph. His first formal introduction to his public came when he was given the lead in D. W. Griffith's production, The White Rose. America and Isn't Life Wonderful helped establish him as a fan favorite.

In 1914, Marshall Neilan had discarded grease paint for the megaphone, and was directing Lloyd Hamilton's first comedy.

Johnny Walker, who launched his motion picture career in the old Biograph Studios, and later played under the Edison banner opposite many of the biggest stars of that time—particularly Viola Dana—was just returning from war ten years ago.

In 1916 a thirteen-year-old youngster was playing leads for Christie, Sennett and Gayety comedies. She was Vera Reynolds, whose first impressive role was in that good old Universal throbber, Hearts of Oak.

Ten years ago Rubye de Remer, an ex-Follies girl, was achieving film popularity following her initial role in the Rex Beach picture, The Auction Block.

In 1915, Pauline Frederick began her screen career as a Famous Players star, and scored heavily as an emotional actress.

While The Miracle Man was making stars of Betty Compson and Tommy Meighan, Male and Female was doing the same thing for Gloria Swanson, Lila Lee and Theodore Roberts. Meighan owed his success to both pictures.

The first miniature set was being made by Sid Chaplin about ten years ago. It was an artificial glass tank to be used in The Submarine Pirate to imitate the bottom of the sea. It caused a sensation in the industry and opened a new vista for producers.

The twelfth floor of the Hollywood Athletic club was called the movie floor. Charlie Chaplin occupied one corner, Mack Sennett another and the late W. H. Clune, theatre magnate, a third. Each had a single room which cost them about ninety dollars a month. "Kono," Charlie's famous Jap servant, today reported to be the only one who clips the coupons for his master, was busy trying to keep job hunters and "old friends" away from Chaplin. The Jap became famous at this time as a bodyguard and doorman for the comedian.

Dick Jones, now directing Ronald Colman, arrived in Hollywood from St. Louis. He was walking along the street from the station where he had left the rods without a penny in his pocket. He stopped a policeman. "Tell me, is Los Angeles always so quiet? Doesn't anybody live here?"

"The streets are empty. It's Christmas," the policeman replied. Dick was so broke that days meant nothing to him.

Julia Faye, who was later to be signed by Paramount to play opposite Wallace Reid, ran away from Illinois University to demand an interview with D. W. Griffith. A small part in Intolerance resulted and this in turn led to a year's contract as leading lady. A fling as a Mack Sennett Bathing Beauty preceded her contract to play with the idolized "Wally."

Jack Mulhall made his first screen appearance in The House of Discord, produced by the old Biograph Company in 1913. He was one of the first actors to personify sincere and virile young manhood.

Mae Murray was married to Bob Leonard and Gertrude Olmstead, the present Mrs. Leonard, was not old enough to be a high school freshman ten years ago.

So This is Hollywood

apartment house built by Mrs. Thomas Ince on the old Ince homestead. It must set him back at least $300 a month. And he's brought his mother out to spend several months with him. If his pictures permit they will dash to Honolulu for a couple of weeks' vacation.

Impressive John

JOHN BARRYMORE has been seen several nights, recently, walking up and down Hollywood boulevard looking blank and talking to nobody. It's an old trick formed years ago but given up until recently. Which makes Hollywood ponder. Perhaps it's just because John did so much walking in King of the Mountains but gossip seems to remember that he was recently married.

Eddie Inquires

YES," said Tod Browning as Jim-the-barber lathered his face in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer tonsorial shop. "After I turned in Yokohama that station in New Zealand came in like a ton of bricks. Calcutta was a little weak but I managed to cut in Rio de Janeiro fine . . ."

"What were you trying to do?" sputtered Eddie Nugent, through the folds of a hot towel. "Find a station that wasn't playing The Wedding of the Painted Doll?"

Because Nils lives alone, with his sheep dog, Clumsey, as his only companion . . . because he shuns social functions . . . because days off from work find him motoring or hiking alone . . . because he has many acquaintances, but few close friends, Hollywood puts Nils down as an anomaly.

ON THE screen, Nils has made love to many of the outstanding feminine stars. Mary Nolan, Vivian Duncan, Marion Davies, Pola Negri, Joan Crawford, Aileen Pringle and Greta Garbo are on the list. All became and still are his friends, but only in one instance did he slip in his determination never again to marry an actress.

Vivian Duncan was the girl.

"I loved her from the first," Nils told me. "She likes the things that I like. She is one of the finest, most companionable young women I have ever met. We worked together in Topsy and Eva. We played together when we were away from the studio. I proposed to her and we became engaged.

"But our romance was brief. It crashed on the rock of Vivian's career. Had she been willing to give up the stage and pictures, we would have been married and we would have found bliss."

Nils filled his pipe, and settled back in the big chair.

I STEERED Nils back to the subject of this dream girl.

"Tell me more about her," I urged.

"Oh, I'm willing to confess that I know little about women, despite the fact that I have been married once and engaged nineteen times. Women get to know men, but, for some reason, men never seem to fathom the mystery of women. Perhaps it is because women spend more time studying men, while men, instead of profiting by experience, keep on doing the same thing over and over again, groping blindly along the paths of romance.

"The girl I would marry need not be beautiful. In fact, I would prefer her to be interesting mentally. Not that I have any objections to beautiful women, but I think they are more likely to put physical attractiveness ahead of mentality in meeting the world.

"I could be very happy with a homely girl as a wife if she were the home-making kind. She should be content to stay home rather than be socially ambitious. Whether she be blonde or brunette would make no difference. She need not be young. She must not be an actress, either stage or screen. They have careers that cannot be happily reconciled with my ideas of home life. I would like to have children, so my wife should be a good mother.

"The girl I would marry," continued Nils, "must be my best friend as well as my sweetheart. She should be a companion as well as a wife. I do not care for many friends. I would rather be to myself. My wife should be a chum, not merely a helpmate.

"She need be neither tall nor short; fat nor slim. Nationality or creed does not matter. I should like her to know books; to be interested in music, if not a musician. If she sings, so much the better. I should like her to be fond of the outdoors; to be good company on a mountain hike, motor trip or on the bridle path. She should be able to cook good wholesome foods rather than confining her interest in the kitchen to hiring help.

"My home must be a happier place for having her in it. She should have an eye to color harmonies and interior decoration. She must not be a faddist who will turn the house topsy-turvy with every change of style. My home must be individual. It should not look like a motion picture set, as many homes do today. It should look as though someone lived in it—not merely a gorgeous showplace in which no one can feel comfortable.

"If I am moody, my wife should know these moods. She should not have a violent temper, but, on the other hand, she should not be passively submissive to my every whim. She should have an individuality all her own, but, at the same time, should respect my own right to my likes and dislikes. She should not fill my house with her friends, any more than I should, at any time, invite all the people I know in to dinner."

NILS believes their friends should be friends in common.

"There should be no jealousies," he continued, "for no love can endure suspicion. I should not be envious of any of my wife's accomplishments. And my career should not cause her any feeling of inferiority. My work should be dropped from my shoulders and my mind when I walk in the door."

Nils again emphasized the fact that he is seeking happiness.

"Maybe, this girl of my dreams is only an ideal. She seems to me to be more of a composite picture of many women, rather than one. In every woman I have ever known or to whom I have been attracted, I have found one or more of the qualifications I have outlined. I have never met a girl who possessed them all, unless it was a girl I loved as a boy and never married. I have no idea where she is today, and perhaps it is best. A meeting might disappoint both of us, for how radically we change as we mature."

"But, Nils," I interrupted. "Does this mean that you will not marry?"

He thought a moment, then—

"In a minute, if I could find this girl of my dreams. The whole American army could not keep me from the altar."

Your Skin is whiter, softer and smoother when HAIR is REMOVED this easy, quick way

"I've always thought a person should be most careful about what they put on their skin. I've never used creams, soaps or beauty lotions that didn't look clean and pure. For that reason I've always been especially partial to Del-a-tone Cream. It's so snowy-white and safe-looking—and it is safe, too. Del-a-tone leaves my skin so wonderfully soft, white and velvety smooth."

Del-a-tone Cream was the first white cream hair-remover offered to American women. Consequently, it enjoys a tremendous popularity with those fastidious women who demand that their toilet requisites not only be safe and dainty, but that they have the modern quality of being swiftly active and easy to use.

Del-a-tone Cream, snowy-white, faintly fragrant, does not encourage heavier growth.

Somebody else remembered that one of the men had been making love to one of the girls on the davenport and he thought some dispute had arisen.

Iris said that she didn't know anything about it. She said the atmosphere was getting a trifle too heated for even a Hollywood drinking party; so she had started home when she heard a shot. She went to the kitchen and there she saw Tom Kerrick slumping onto the floor.

Henry Isabel said he was sitting outside the house in his automobile waiting for somebody or something he wasn't just so very clear what it was. But anyhow he was sure that he didn't know anything about any shooting.

Sarah Kerrick, the widow, was genuinely heart broken. She was in the hands of the doctors most of the time from the killing until the trial. She said that she did not know just what had happened.

Tom had been getting pretty foolish. He had been making a fool of himself over the girls. The men were all quarreling over the love-making. She thought it was high time he sobered up. She called him in a wifely voice to come into the kitchen. There she handed him a cup of strong black coffee and told him to drink it. Tom, however, insisted that it was still the shank of the evening and he wanted hard liquor. He had drunk enough black coffee on the range to last him for life. He finally struck her.

She says that she got a revolver out of the drawer where it was kept in the kitchen. She didn't remember very clearly just what happened after that. To the best of her hazy recollection, Anita was there and a struggle started for the revolver. They were all leaning over the kitchen table, trying to grab the revolver out each other's hands; and the thing went off. Tom collapsed.

Anita Davis, the blond young motion picture lady, gave the police a bad time and the only light they could find.

When they first began to question her, she shifted her gum to the starboard and said indifferently: "Yeh; I shot him."

She finally added this description of the night: about the only one they could get. "Mrs. Kerrick had been bawling out her husband for allowing so much rough stuff with the girls in the house. He knocked her down and she ran to get a gun. We settled the quarrel and shook hands all around and were seated at the breakfast nook. Mrs. Kerrick had made some coffee. She offered Tom a drink. Iris offered him a glass of liquor and he took it. Then I noticed Sarah's hand come up with a gun in it. I grabbed for it and hooked my arm on hers and pulled down—and the gun went off. That's all I know."

The police—utterly bewildered—hit on a grand idea. As long as nobody would tell what happened, they decided to put the whole bunch on trial charged with murder and scare them into talking.

They were scared all right. All but Joe Hunt. Joe used to sit in the prisoner's pen waiting to be called to court with grave composure—sitting on his cowboy heels and smoking dobe cigarettes.

Then something happened that the police hadn't figured on.

At that time, there was a bitter prejudice against Hollywood drinking parties. Dorothy Mackaye and Paul Kelly had just been sent to prison for a killing resulting from a wild party. The jury had its appetite whetted.

Some enterprising and irate prosecutor found an old law which provided that every person present at an "unlawful assemblage" where a crime was committed, was guilty of any crime that occurred there.

In other words, they were all guilty of the murder of Tom Kerrick because they had been drinking bootleg booze in the house. The party was therefore an unlawful assemblage.

The jury licked its lips and found them all guilty of the killing—even the man who had been sitting outside in his automobile.

The sarcastic blond lady suddenly lost her sarcasm and became a hysterical frightened girl. Mrs. Kerrick fainted in court; the others collapsed.

Then came the one heroic event of the whole fracas. Mrs. Kerrick became so ill that the doctors feared she would never live to get into prison. Even so, a term in prison would kill her. She was a pitiful, wasted little figure of tragedy.

From the jail came the plea of the other two girls. They said that they would confess the crime and plead guilty if the police would allow Mrs. Kerrick to go free. But this was regarded as an unselfish bit of heroism; and not as throwing any light on the crime.

In the end, the Court of Appeals reversed the verdict of the jury. All were released from jail except Mrs. Kerrick. She went to San Quentin; thrived on it. On a technicality she was granted a new trial; but the district attorney dismissed the charge against her. He said frankly that he would be doggoned if he knew who killed Tom Kerrick.

And there it stands—Hollywood's most bewildering mystery. No one knows who killed Tom Kerrick or why. Was the murder committed by one of the men in the course of the promiscuous love-making of the party? Did one of the women shoot Kerrick? Or was it the heart-broken wife who loved Tom to distraction and who seemed to have had no reason to kill him?

Any theory of the crime seems impossible and unreasonable.

And so it rests there. The luscious Anita is presumably still a blond and still sarcastic. Joe is back on the cow ranges. Iris is somewhere in Hollywood. Mrs. Kerrick is trying to pick up the ends of her life without Tom.

No one will ever know who killed Tom Kerrick.

FOOT PAINS GONE in 10 minutes

OR COSTS YOU NOTHING

Burning, aching, tired feeling in the feet and legs—cramps in toes, foot calluses, pains in toes, instep, ball or heel—dull ache in the ankle, calf or knee—shooting pains from back of toes, spreading of the feet, or that broken-down feeling—all can now be quickly ended.

SCIENCE says 94% of all foot pains result from displaced bones pressing against sensitive nerves and blood vessels. Weakened muscles permit these bone displacements. Now a way is discovered to hold the bones in position and strengthen the muscles. Pains stop in 10 minutes when these amazing bands, Jung Arch Braces, are worn. Stand, walk, or dance for hours—you just don't get tired. Just slips on—results are almost immediate. One of the secrets is in the tension and stretch. It is highly elastic, amazingly light and thin, yet strong and durable. Worn with any kind of footwear. Nothing stiff to further weaken muscles and cause discomfort. The styles with exceedingly soft sponge rubber lift are urgently advised for severe cases.

Pain stops like magic. Soon bands may be discarded and feet are well to stay. Nearly 2,000,000 now in use. Specialists, amazed at results, urge them widely. Wear a pair ten days; if not delighted your money returned. Go to druggist, shoe store or chiropodist.

JUNG'S ARCH BRACES

1 Trouble starts in weakened muscles. Tiny bones of forward arch are displaced. Pain follows.

2 A super-elastic band assists and strengthens weakened muscles, replaces bones. Pain stops instantly.

Their Exchequered Careers

roles pack theatres all over the world, and whose fan mail exceeds that of any actress in pictures, gets $2,500 straight salary plus a bonus of $10,000 on each completed production. However, her contract calls for an increase of $500 each six months as options on her services are exercised, so that at its expiration she will be receiving about $5,000 per week. This will be in about three years.

Under the De Mille-Pathe arrangement, Marie Prevost drew down $20,000 a picture, five to be made each year. Phyllis Haver, from the same company, was drawing $1,250 per week. Jetta Goudal, at the time of her break with De Mille, was receiving $1,750. Recently she brought suit against the company alleging that she was discharged without warrant and that $101,000 was still due under the terms of her contract.

William Boyd started with De Mille at $125. When he scored a success in Road to Yesterday he was awarded a bonus of $250 a week and when his Volga Boatman hove to with a bang, the old contract was scrapped and he was raised to $750. He now draws $1,500.

Sally Eilers was under contract to Mack Sennett at a salary starting at $75 a week and ending with $1,000 in four years. She obtained release and started work immediately at First National for $350 a week. Sue Carol, under contract to Douglas MacLean for five years at a salary ranging from $150 to $1,000, recently declared MacLean had breached the agreement and went to work for Fox. Blanche LeClaire has signed with M-G-M for two years at a salary ranging from $75 to $250; Lucille Miller signed with Sennett for five years at $60 to $325; Ada Williams with Fox for five years at $60 to $210; Joyce Blanche Murray with M-G-M for two years at $75 to $250. These newcomers aren't getting any fancy salaries—yet. Possibly they never may. But before them beckon the half-million earnings of Colleen Moore and Corinne Griffith and those of Gilbert and Jolson and the like.

Take the case of Lupe Velez, for example. Lupe came to Hollywood in 1927, under contract to Frank Woodyard at approximately $125 a week. She played in Hal Roach comedies. Douglas Fairbanks saw her work and wanted her for a leading role in The Gaucho. Lupe asked for release from her contract with Woodyard, later repudiated it because, she said, she was not of age when she signed the document and a settlement was reached out of court. The little Mexican firebrand paid either $20,000 or $50,000, the newspapers said, for freedom. Now Lupe is a United Artists star, a real sensation and at present getting a salary of $1,500 a week, a total of $78,000 a year.

Then there is the case of Anita Page, another of the present sensations. Anita arrived in Hollywood in mid-winter last year with the party of Harry K. Thaw.

They didn't even get into the studios. When Thaw had gone, Anita hauled out her best bib and tucker, stormed the M-G-M casting office, won a screen test, was assigned to play a leading role opposite William Haines, made good and then came through with one of the most outstanding performances of the year in Dancing Daughters. She repeated in Broadway Melody and now is safely anchored on the Metro lot with a new contract. Under its terms she will receive a total of something like $182,000 within the next four years.

A screen player has a definite box-office value up to a certain point, then red ink starts creeping into the figures. Pola Negri was a "wow" for Paramount when she came to this country following the showing of her German-made picture Passion. But she never repeated, so, when her contract expired last year, she was allowed to go.

NOT long ago contracts began lapsing as the studios began lessening the weekly outlays. Widely known players suddenly announced they had decided to free-lance. From the payroll registers the following names began disappearing, (some by request, mind you, but not all):

Paramount—Pola Negri, Bebe Daniels, Evelyn Brent, Betty Bronson, Ruth Taylor, Louise Brooks, Wallace Beery, Shirley Dormann, William Collier, Jr., Raymond Griffith, Raymond Hatton, Jack Holt, Adolphe Menjou, Iris Stuart, Lois Wilson, Fred Kohler.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—Mae Murray, Carmel Myers, Pauline Starke, Sally O'Neill, Aileen Pringle, Lew Cody, Roy D'Arcy, Tim McCoy, Marceline Day, Ralph Forbes, Jacqueline Gadsden, Patricia Avery, Gertrude Olmstead, Eleanor Boardman.

Warner Brothers—Irene Rich, Syd Chaplin, Patsy Ruth Miller, May McAvoy, Jason Robards, Clyde Cooke, Matt Moore, Helene Costello.

De Mille-Pathe—Rod La Rocque, Marie Prevost, Vera Reynolds, Julia Faye, Leatrice Joy, Jane Winton, Majel Colman, Sally Rand.

First National—Doris Kenyon, Natalie Kingston, Mollie O'Day, Ken Maynard, Nathalie Kovanko, Charles Murray, Lillian Rich, Harry Langdon, Johnny Hines, Thelma Todd.

William Fox—Madge Bellamy, Virginia Valli, Olive Borden, Shirley Mason, Margaret Livingston.

Universal—Jean Hersholt, Jack Hoxie, Marian Nixon.

A great many of the former contract players are in demand continuously. Claire Windsor, Jane Winton, Carmel Myers and many others are busy every minute. Louise Fazenda can't accept all the roles that are offered.

DRAMA

BROADWAY MELODY—Bessie Love and Anita Page as sisters doing a small time vaudeville sister act. The unstable affections of a song writer of the Great White Way provide heartbreak and action, and the Broadway atmosphere is authentic and thrilling. A high mark in talking pictures.—M-G-M.

THE DIVINE LADY—A glamorous account of the romance between Lady Hamilton and Lord Nelson. Corinne Griffith is a lovely participant in the events leading up to Trafalgar, and the naval scenes are impressive, as is Victor Varconi as Nelson.—First National.

LADY OF THE PAVEMENTS—Love and lechery in diplomatic circles, and another demonstration of love's triumph over social barriers. Some very effective work from Lupe Velez. —United Artists.

THE WOLF OF WALL STREET—George Bancroft as a Wall Street stock manipulator who finds himself as great a sucker in love as others are suckers in money matters. With Baclanova and Nancy Carroll.—Paramount.

THE CANARY MURDER CASE—An S. S. Van Dine mystery story made into quite an entertaining talkie. Some clever stuff in this one.—Paramount.

DESERT NIGHTS—John Gilbert and Mary Nolan, but nothing particularly startling. Gilbert, as the manager of a diamond mine, falls in love with a dainty crook who aided in giving him several very inconvenient days.—M-G-M.

THE DOCTOR'S SECRET—Barrie's Half An Hour made into an excellent talkie which adds laurels to the distinguished brows of Ruth Chatterton, H. B. Warner, and John Loder. Strictly adult entertainment. —Paramount.

IN OLD ARIZONA—A genuine wow, due to (a) a real story written by a real writer, O. Henry, and (b) the fact that the actual sounds of the great outdoors are recorded, instead of being replaced by sap synthesis. Producers are invited to step up and compare this honest reproduction with the prevalent practice of rattling the contents of a Woolworth counter inside a washing machine.—Fox.

SHOPWORN ANGEL — Nancy Carroll and Gary Cooper go through the tortures of wartime heartbreak, further complicated by her inky past and his innocence.—Paramount.

NED McCOBB'S DAUGHTER—Taken from the powerful stage play of the same name, this picture is a fast-moving drama of bootlegging, character analysis, and violence.—Pathé.

WEARY RIVER—Richard Barthelmess and Betty Compson deliver superlative performances in a story of underworld activity and ultimate redemption.—First National.

THE GODLESS GIRL—Cecil B. De Mille v. reform schools; the picture also contains some dreadful anti-atheism stuff which indicates that somebody must have spent fully ten minutes in some book store.—Pathé-De Mille.

REDSKIN—Troubles of an educated American Indian, ably portrayed by Richard Dix. Also, the picture is in color, which helps a great deal.—Paramount.

DREAM OF LOVE—Nils Asther and Joan Crawford in a story of romantic royalty, modernism, and traditions tending to hamper the movements of anybody unlucky enough to be a prince.—M-G-M.

COMEDY

SPITE MARRIAGE—A side-splitting comedy wherein Buster Keaton proves himself deserving of a place in the front rank of screen comedians. Dorothy Sebastian is excellent as his romantic objective, an actress, who marries him to spite another man.—M-G-M.

WHY BE GOOD?—Colleen Moore and Neil Hamilton in a speedy picture involving lessons in how to marry the son of the owner of the store one works in.—First National.

THE GHOST TALKS — Helen Twelvetrees, a newcomer, does well in this typical mystery farce full of bandits and detectives.—Fox.

MARQUIS PREFERRED—A gay and sophisticated continental comedy with Adolphe Menjou as debonair as ever.—Paramount.

SHOW PEOPLE—A highly entertaining comedy wherein Marion Davies, Bill Haines and quite a background of other celebrities joyfully kid movies and those who make them. —M-G-M.

ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE—Bill Haines doing much to make this resurrection of the old safe cracker palatable.—M-G-M.

New PERSONAL BELT

Beltx banishes forever the bothersome safety pin—instead, the pad is gripped with a tiny immaculately clean bit of celluloid especially designed for absolute security.

Dainty, soft, silk elastic makes Beltx comfortable and gives a freedom heretofore unknown. Wide enough for security, yet will not crease or chafe.

Beltx is designed to be worn low on the hips, fitting just snug—it never pulls or binds—as does the old style, waistline sanitary belt.

Instantly adjustable to hip measurement in the belt line, from 22 inches to 42 inches—to height in the tab length—it meets every requirement of a personal belt by simple adjustment with tiny slides.

So diminutive—it is easily tucked away in a corner of your purse.

In colors—to match your lingerie. A charming and acceptable "little gift." Price $1, three for $2. Write today.

Taking Her Time

that night, and frequently we work until midnight or later, I dash home, bathe, dress and have dinner. When I am working very hard on a picture, I retire early."

Vacation days are the same. Days that are granted for alleged rest are filled with shopping and hard work. Look, or maybe you'd rather listen, to this schedule.

"I get up at eight when I am between pictures. That is the one luxury I bask in. There is nothing so utterly perfect as lying in bed and watching the hands of the clock slowly move by that hateful six forty-five. After my bath and breakfast in my room, there is usually a story conference at the studio. Sunday Irvin and I have made it a ritual to eat together downstairs. It is the only day in the week that we both don't have to rush to studios.

"At the studio, after the story conference, the costume designer wants to know whether I would prefer chiffon to georgette or whether I want the dress high in front and long in back, or high in back and long in front. The publicity department usually has a request for me to pose in shoes or gloves or hats to advertise a certain product, which means that I must change my costume several times, because you can't pose in sports shoes with an afternoon dress, nor wear gauntlet gloves with a tea gown.

"Then the publicity department wants photographs, gallery portraits, and there is a trip to Mr. Carsey's studio where sixty-five or seventy negatives are made.

"One day, recently, I had appointments at three different photographers. That day I devoted entirely to being photographed. With my maid, I drove from one studio to another, making up en route.

"After the story and dress conferences and my photographs, there may be camera tests of voice or hair or costume for my next picture, or a flock of pictures to be autographed.

"Sunday afternoon—at least several hours of it—I devote to my fan mail. That is when my secretary, Mary Ann Porter, and I get together and pour over the letters that require personal answers. During these sessions it seems as though I sign a million pictures." Billie's fan mail has mounted to thirty thousand letters a week.

"I always find time to visit the Hollywood Hospital and see some of the children who are ill there—and some of the adults. In addition, I frequently appear at benefits, the Examiner Benefit, and others.

"It leaves me but little time to poke around in shops with mother, and to visit Ackhershott's quaint little Old Europe antique shop that is so full of gay pots of cactus and small wooden statues that whistle if you wind them, majolica lambs, and no end of fascinating things.

"I don't have time, it seems, unless I rush madly, to buy hats, gloves and costume jewelry . . . and . . ."

But just then there was a knock at the door, and it was the hairdresser. And—well . . . there you are!

Mary Steps Out

the seamier side of life in just that manner. Her only contact with the penalties of illicit love was in Tess of the Storm Country, and her innocent shouldering of adult responsibilities was snow white in its purity.

Coquette is the story of a Southern girl, too generous with her lover. Her father shoots and kills the man and consequently is convicted of murder. Coquette, left alone with the child, commits suicide. Hardly a typical Pickford picture!

Hollywood thought of Pollyanna, of Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, of Through the Back Door, of Esmerelda, of Sparrows, of My Best Girl. They thought of the myriad pictures, full of youth and charm and far removed from sordidness, that Mary had done.

There were editorial comments, some kind, others cruel; some complimented her on her courage in upsetting a tradition; others condemned her and said that as a box-office attraction she was nil. Still others chided her in not having the daring to play the role as written. They were among those who forgot that the screen, more than the stage, has a rigid censor.

In the center of this hub-bub, what has Mary Pickford to say?

Small, very small, and perhaps a trifle weary, a violet dress and hat and slippers lending violet lights to her blue-grey eyes, Mary drew the little rocking chair closer. A March sun, bright and golden, streamed through the white ruffles of the curtains in her dressing bungalow. A framed sampler, dim and old, was on the wall.

Mary smiled that wistful, radiant smile. A smile that illuminates and transfigures her whole body.

"This is such a little chair. . . ." she began.

It looked like such a chair as a mother might rock her child to and fro in. It might have been for that, only it had small arms that jutted forward four or five inches.

"It might have been used for that," said Mary, her eyes a bit brighter, a bit more tender, as she leaned forward ever so slightly and cradled in her arms an imaginary child, and softly swayed the chair. "Yes, it could have been used to rock a child." She knew how mothers cradled theirs, left arm a trifle higher than the right, face all rimmed with eternal care and fondness.

The look fled. She was again Mary Pickford, the actress, and perhaps a trifle weary.

"Coquette?" She was Mary Pickford, business woman who is also an artist.

"Coquette is not my first grown-up role, you know. No, I made Rosita and Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall. They were both costume pictures. Neither was highly successful. I don't think it was because the public would rather see me as a child, as much as it was because I was so submerged by the trappings and the heavy costumes and the historical plots of the pictures.

"I am making Coquette because I think any wise actress will change her roles before the public demands it. There is no immediate need for me to. My Best Girl, which as my last picture has proven, by the box office, to be the most successful picture I ever made. They are pleased that I remain as I am. Nor were they horrified when we announced that I would do Coquette as my next. Whether they will accept it, and my newer type of role, remains to be seen when the picture is released.

"After all, Coquette is not a bad girl. Nor is she adult, really. She is merely a young girl who has been dealt a tragic section of life.

"Douglas did not want me to make it —at first. For several days he insisted that it was not the sort of thing I should do. He thought it was too ugly. Despite the fact that it was a New York success, he was very much against it."

Douglas, himself, said this, later, about Coquette:

"I wouldn't sit and stare at a mud wall for two hours. Why should Mary choose to make a grim, ugly play? But the modern plays are that way, and the stage is crowded with them. Because New Yorkers like anchovies they will make a whole dinner of them. It's the same with their stage fare. I like Galsworthy, for instance, who points his lines with morals and makes his plays pleasant theatrical sermons."

"I don't believe I could play a little girl on the screen again." She paused. Mary, the eternal little girl—Mary, whose elfin manners kept a world young. Mary, never playing a child again. Never scampering across the room, or having her curls lathered, or being hit in the eye with a large and over-ripe tomato.

"You see," and her voice was low, "I have gone through so much the last two years . . . so much, that I don't believe I could ever act like a child again."

There was a pause, and thoughts raced by. The death of her mother, the hurried trip across the Atlantic to forget, the other sorrows that are all too quickly absorbed by the press.

Mary has her own way.

Hollywood has its pet supposition. As usual, Hollywood is wrong. And the drama was enacted before its unseeing eyes.

Mary is keen-minded, sensitive and intuitive; she has always been an independent thinker, dominating frequently in conclaves at which Douglas and her mother were present. In the light of recent happenings, Mary is now clearly seen as boss of her own career.

But that is nothing new. Mary is not making a defiant gesture. She always has had her own way.

EARLE E. LIEDERMAN—The Muscle-Builder
Author of "Muscle Building," "Science of Wrestling," "Secrets of Strength," "Here's Health," "Endurance," etc.

When Even Your Sweetheart Turns Away—

Do you know what it means to be lonely and forgotten? To be without friends? To have your mother begin to lose faith in you? To have even your sweetheart turn away in scorn—even your wife go back on you—because you failed to deliver in a pinch—because you weren't able to play the man when you had the chance?

Some day danger will confront you or your friends when you least expect it, and it will be up to you to overcome it or fail. When that time comes will you be ready for it? Will you have the strength, the muscles, the stamina every man owes to himself if he wants to be loved and respected?

The Only Thing That Can Save You

There comes a time in every man's life when strength —real strength—is the only thing that can save him. In war or in peace, on the sick-bed or in the prize ring, your strength either makes you the winner or the loser —and losing often means death.

Check up on yourself now. How are the old biceps? Are those rolls of flesh around your stomach pudgy fat or lean, strong muscles? Are your legs like toothpicks or are they strong and shapely? How's your wind? If you got into a life-and-death rough and tumble scrap would you be on the bottom or on top when it's all over? Come on, now, be fair to yourself. If you haven't got the punch in a pinch, snap out of it, and be a man. There's a way to get that punch, and get it in a hurry. It's not difficult and it's quick—and it gives you real, live, red-blooded strength. I've given it to over 100,000 men and many of them were weaker than you are when they started. But they don't call me the Muscle-Builder for nothing. Here's what I guarantee to do for you:

30 Days Will Do the Trick

One short month is all I need to show you just what a real muscle-builder can do for you. In just 30 days I'll begin by adding one whole inch of real honest muscle on each of your arms, and I'll put two more inches of wonderful health-producing strength across your chest. Your head will snap back erect. The thighs and calves of your legs will grow shapely and powerful, and your shoulders will begin to widen and fill out with curves of muscle.

Life will begin to be worth while. The little tasks that seem so hard now will seem like nothing at all then. You'll begin to take a new interest in things. Your work will be like play, and the boss will begin to notice it, too. Yes, sir, in just 30 days you'll begin to be somebody.

Then Things Will Begin to Happen

Then give me 60 days more to work on you, and things will really start to happen. This timid weakling that everybody used to take advantage of will now do some ordering around of his own. And when he speaks people will jump, because he's found the strength to enforce his orders. In those three short months that he is with me he will have gained something that takes years to acquire without my knowledge. Those big, powerful arms—that broad, handsome back—that shapely muscular neck. What a picture you'll be in a bathing suit! What a sight in a gymnasium! You'll be a magnet for all women's eyes. That healthy, aggressive, erect stride of the man who knows what he wants and is going to get it, just commands attention.

Well, that's the story in a nut-shell. If you're man enough to work a little for the sake of your strength, success and happiness, just sit right down and mail me this coupon. It won't cost you a penny, and you can see for yourself why thousands of men have so much faith in Earl E. Liederman, the Muscle-Builder.

Conrad Nagel was master of ceremonies. He said he was chosen because they thought he wouldn't say much. He added that Doug had said he didn't want to come up on the stage and probably the best way to get him up was to induce his wife to come first. This strategy worked for presently both Mary and Doug were bowing from the runway.

THE chief subject of conversation at the delightful party given by the James Gleasons at their hospitable home was Roland West's Alibi, which had been privately previewed that morning. Chester Morris, Regis Toomey and Harry Stubbs of the cast were unofficial honor guests and they were showered with congratulations from everyone present.

Regis Toomey's wife is a Southern girl; they have been married four years and act like bride and groom. Sue Van Dusen, who is Mrs. Harry Stubbs, is a great friend of theirs and she and Mrs. Toomey spend most of their days joyously inspecting houses with a view to early purchases.

THE opening of the new "Blossom" supper room at the Hotel Roosevelt was the occasion for a brilliant dinner-dance. Sophie Tucker was mistress of ceremonies and cleverly presented the feature numbers arranged by Sid Grauman.

Putting Science Into Sex Appeal

the other girls put together. Also, redheads have less submission and less compliance than any other type—nothing but the drive to induce, unrestrained by fear of consequences to themselves or others.

"In casting brunettes, and brown-haired women with blue eyes, our tests show that greater care must be taken. Women of this sort are more individuals, emotionally, and conform less to a fixed and invariable type.

"Yet, this we do know, about brunettes. They have, as a rule, a greater sum total of passion and captivation than either blondes or red-haired women.

IN THE test for emotional reactions, Dr. Marston's subject grasps a bulb, wears a heavy rubber tubing called a pneumograph around the chest, has a brachial artery shut off temporarily by a constriction of the left arm, and immerses the fingers of the left hand in a salt solution.

No, it doesn't hurt, though it sounds very medical and formidable! The grasp of the bulb measures grip variability, the pneumograph measures breathing, releasing of the artery constriction enables your man of science to read the blood pressure, and the sweat of your finger tips activates in the bowl a tiny electrical current, the recording of which registers perspiration.

Then the doctor flashes on the opposite wall a movie. If the love scene "gets" you, your body reacts involuntarily to the emotions. Keenly the professor and his assistants watch the moving fingers of the instruments write the reaction story, and after further careful study he is prepared to tell you how strongly you emote.

"We have made careful experiments on both men and women," states the doctor, "to find out which of the primary emotions has the strongest appeal. Men prefer love passion (submission), next, dominance (as in prize fights); third, inducement (sheik stuff); and last of all, compliance. In short, men obtain greatest pleasure from giving themselves to women. If they can't do that, they want to fight."

How Hollywood Gets You

half dozen actresses whose names now are widely known, together with a few down-and-outers, still hoping; drifters, derelicts, failures. I sat among them for a little while in a deadly silence. Heavens, what a relief when they called me in! And signed me for a desired part.

I caught the spirit of depression, the frightened, despairful gnawing they felt in their hearts. After all the years of trying.

I know two girls who had promising starts in pictures. Both were doing bits. The treacherous road to success seemed to have opened. They were earning their way. There came a long trail of hard luck. Enforced idleness for months. Discouragement. Despair. I met them on the street a few months ago carrying their bags.

"Going to work?" I asked.

"Work, H—l!" one of them replied. "We're going down below the border."

Which meant to a dive in Mexico.

Strenuous, frenzied, there is no place on earth like Hollywood.

Now, that's the drab side of the picture. Let's turn to the other:

HOLLYWOOD is a restless, exciting, glorious place to live. Its motion picture studios offer the greatest rewards for success of any institutions on earth. Girls in starring roles are earning more money than the President of the United States.

I don't go to parties. I'm not invited—often. Don't know whether the good wives fear that my vampire label is a menace or because they can't spell Livingston without two g's. But these Hollywood parties are screams. When Reginald Denny was married a few months ago, I met two girls on the way to the reception held at the Hollywood Athletic Club.

"Come on, Margaret," one of them said. "Let's go."

"I'm not invited," I replied.

"Neither are we. But that doesn't make any difference."

Texas Guinan gave a party at Marie Prevost's home while she was here making a night club picture for Warner Brothers.

"I invited fifty to dinner," said Miss Guinan. "Two hundred and fifty came and seventy-five were still there for breakfast next morning."

That's Hollywood spirit, you understand. It's just an effort to be sociable. Whenever any of the screen crowd sees as many as five cars parked in front of a player's house, they cry—"Oh, there's a party! Let's go in."

Thus the film colony lives and loves, works and worries, plays and hates. Hollywood gets you! There are no "extras" here, they are all stars in the electric lights of their own minds.

THERE isn't another place like it. And if a few go from it into "The Port of Missing Men," and if a few girls drop from view and their names no longer are spoken at home—well, that's life. Hollywood forgets. The Chamber of Commerce, the Girls Studio Club, Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge and countless other individuals have issued urgent pleas that girls stay away from the cinema unless they have sufficient funds and plenty of nice clothes to keep them a year at the minimum.

Right now, many actresses are wondering "Where do we go from here?" because of the advent of the talkies. Some of the silent drama girls have good voices. Some have not. Some have undergone their speaking tests admirably. Others appear to be in the fix of the parrot which spotted the sleeping dog and said "Sic 'em, Jiggs!" And Jiggs sprang to his feet, looked around and lay down again.

"Sic 'em, Jiggs!" said the parrot again.

Jiggs caught on this time and when the bird repeated the order, Jiggs sprang up, seized it by the neck, shook it 'til its feathers were almost gone.

"For the love o' Mike!" exclaimed the owner. "What's the matter?"

"Matter, h—l," replied poll. "I talked too much."

Exit poll. Also, exit some "queens of the silent drama."

beauty. In the doorway stood Andrea, the South American servant, motionless, statuesque.

Billie's eyes widened with well-simulated admiration. "Oh!" she exclaimed breathlessly, and was rewarded by Abbott's flush of boyish pleasure.

"You—you like it?" he asked eagerly, trying unsuccessfully to conceal his genuine pride in his treasures.

"It's wonderful, Glenn—all of it—simply wonderful!" Her gesture, including the view and the colorful crudities of the cabin, held so much admiration that Abbott felt as if he himself had created even the hills and vales.

ABBOTT, catching the sudden glint of interest in her eyes, stepped forward, eager to sweep her into his strong arms, to tell her he was mad about her. But Billie, sensing his passion and realizing her danger, turned from him abruptly and began studying his collection of knives.

Her casualness was like a dash of cold water to Abbott, who felt about for something to interest her, to re-establish their relationship on safe ground.

"Won't you have some lunch—or tea?" he asked.

"Heavens, no!" cried Billie in such horror that they burst into laughter. The tenseness of the situation was greatly relieved; but he was not entirely able to conceal his feelings.

"It's wonderful to have you here! I wish—I could do something for you."

Billie, toying with a knife, looked up quickly.

"There is something you could do for me, Glenn—if you were really willing," she answered, watching him with narrowed eyes.

"Anything!" he said eagerly.

Her gaze fell before the adoring appeal in his eyes. She began to suspect herself of being rather a rotter for playing up to him deliberately to achieve her own ends. After an embarrassed hesitation she replied, "I wish you'd get Gilbert Johns appointed as a secretary to our Embassy in Paris."

Abbott stiffened. The frank openness he had shown her was suddenly replaced by an inscrutable silence.

Billie, warned by his manner, met his calculating eyes with her most disarming smile. With a twist of her body she brought herself close to Abbott and laid one hand lightly on his knee. He remained immovable. As if unable to understand his attitude, she looked up at him with a puzzled expression.

Fat Men!

This new self-massaging belt not only makes you look thinner instantly—but quickly takes off rolls of excess fat.

DIET is often weakening—drugs are dangerous—strenuous reducing exercises are liable to strain your heart. The only safe method of reducing is massage. This method sets up a vigorous circulation that seems to melt away the surplus fat. The Weil Reducing Belt, made of special reducing rubber, produces exactly the same results as a skilled masseur, only quicker and cheaper. Every move you make causes the Weil Belt to gently massage your abdomen. Results are rapid because this belt works for you every second.

Fat Replaced by Normal Tissue

From 4 to 6 inches of flabby fat usually vanish in just a few weeks. Only solid, normal tissue remains. The Weil Reducing Belt is endorsed by physicians because it not only takes off fat, but helps correct stomach disorders, constipation, backache, shortness of breath and puts sagging internal organs back into place.

"Gilbert Johns?" he asked coldly. "Your almost—Siamese twin?"

Billie tried to laugh. "Why, yes," she answered as casually as possible. "He's the one."

Abbott got down from the table without bothering to remove her hand, which fell as he moved away from her.

"Suppose," he remarked, facing the girl keenly, "we put our cards on the table." Billie, genuinely puzzled now, listened apprehensively. "I've shown very definitely what I feel for you," he continued levelly, "and the idea hasn't exactly repelled you, has it?"

Billie flashed him a glance, amorous yet hesitant. For a moment Abbott was unable to continue; then, again master of himself, he asked grimly, "Just what is Gilbert Johns to you?"

Words failed her. Abbott, believing her hesitation leading to a confession that young Johns was much to her, steeled himself and turned away. At last she forced herself to reply. "Gil is just—why, just a pal."

Abbott looked down at her searchingly. Her innocent expression did not betray the lie.

"Only a pal?" he repeated, still scrutinizing her closely.

"That's all."

He wanted to believe her; but women had used him too often before for their own ends to spare him the agony of suspicion. "But if he's only a pal," he persisted, "why does his future mean so much to you?"

Billie did not answer at once. Then, a little bashfully, she asked, "Haven't you ever wanted to help a friend who needed just that extra push to reach success?"

"You generous little thing!" he cried, his face clearing. "I'm a suspicious brute, Billie. It would serve me right if you never spoke to me again. I'm sorry."

"It was horrid of you!" she agreed, holding him off with an extended arm and finger. "You really ought not be forgiven; but—" She smiled alluringly, her eyes daring him to kiss her while her hand appeared to rebuff him.

Abbott took her finger; and when she did not demur, her hand, which he held in both of his—gently at first, then crushingly.

"If you're pulling for Johns, he must be regular," he said. "I'll see what I can do." He pressed her hand against his cheek. Billie, fired with triumph, glanced at him with eyes soft with thanks.

Unable to restrain himself any longer, Abbott swept her into his arms, kissing her hair, her cheek, her lips. Billie's impulse was to fight him off; but his passion kindled her and she relaxed in his arms, her lips seeking his hungrily, kiss for kiss.

IT WAS with great effort that she faced Abbott in Washington next morning. Gil, too, was visibly worried with thoughts of little Kentucky, though he tried to assure Billie that he had nothing whatever on his mind.

True to his word, Abbott used his considerable influence. Billie watched him as he talked with government officials, a man among men, and found herself unconsciously comparing this fine, vigorous, frank friend with her rather weak-willed play-boy fiance.

As they descended to the street again Abbott put his hand on Gil's shoulder in a heavy clasp.

"Well, that's settled, Johns. This fall should see you in Paris!"

Gil, ashamed, tried to express embarrassed thanks, but Abbott silenced him. Glad to escape, he hurried on to the car, leaving Billie with Abbott.

Silently he pressed her hand. "Slip the crowd tomorrow and have tea with me in the cabin, won't you?" he begged.

For a moment Billie hesitated, then nodded. His fingers tightened on her convulsively as he handed her gently into the car beside Gil.

"Remember the speed limit, young man!" he warned laughingly—"Take no chances!" He stood at the curb watching Billie, his heart in his eyes, until the car was swallowed up in traffic.

HEADLINES screamed from the morning papers, fulfilling Billie's boast to her father that she would make the front page.

MOTOR MAGNATE'S DAUGHTER TO WED YOUNG DIPLOMAT

"B. Bickering Brown announces the engagement of his beautiful and charming daughter, Miss Billie Brown, to Gilbert Johns———"

Glenn Abbott stared at the print with stricken eyes, the lines deepening about his set mouth.

"The young folks have been secretly engaged for a month, but avoided an announcement until Mr. Johns' position with the Paris Embassy was secured—"

The paper fell from Abbott's strong, lean fingers. The words whirled dizzily in his numbed brain. Gradually as the realization of the despicable trick came to him his vitality returned and his face grew hard.

He turned to Andrea, moving quietly about the room.

"Want to spend the night in Washington?" he asked. "Well, be off with you, then!" He paced back and forth, trying to quell the tempestuous emotions warring within him. He had worshiped, adored Billie, and she had tricked him cheaply. All his love now turned to bitter hate.

Billie, dreading to meet Glenn Abbott, had wanted to cancel her acceptance to tea; but, never a coward, she was ready to go when Glenn called for her with his car.

They had hardly started when the gathering storm clouds began to lower, and thunder rumbled from the hills. Billie turned to her grim, silent companion.

"Hadn't we better turn back?" she suggested, seizing on a plausible excuse. "We'll be drenched before we reach the cabin."

Abbott drove on without comment

SCHMEISER SCHOOL OF DANCING
7 North Clinton, Rochester, N. Y.
(26 years a teacher of dancing)

Billie knew now that she was dealing with an embittered, ruthless man. The rain began to fall in torrents.

Still silent, he showed her into his cabin and motioned her to a chair.

"The fire is—warm and cheerful," she remarked with attempted casualness; but as she glanced at his cold, set face, she shivered nervously.

WITHOUT a word Abbott stepped into the bedroom. Billie, watching him apprehensively, saw him take from the chest a robe of vivid, barbaric design and lay it on the couch. He came back and, without a glance at Billie, searched for a pair of South American moccasins which he carried into the bedroom.

Billie's hands were shaking when he returned. Stepping close to her chair he said coldly, "You can't stay in those wet things. There are dry clothes in the other room."

She tried to assure him that the fire would quickly warm her; but the touch of Abbott's hand on her wet dress caused her to hurry away, eager to escape from him. She heard him follow her to the very door. Desperately she looked about for a key; but there was none. Mechanically, watching the closed door fearfully, she dropped her wet garments to the floor and threw the robe about her shivering body. A moment later as she stooped to pick up her wet clothes she saw the door slowly opening, and Abbott stepped into the room.

Savagely he pulled her into his arms, pressing her against him as if she were indeed a common woman. For a moment he wavered, remembering that only yesterday she was the only girl he had ever truly loved; but she had tricked him cheaply, and she must pay!

He fumbled at her robe, trying to loosen it. The horror in Billie's eyes, so unmistakably genuine, restrained him. Still determined to make her pay for having tricked him into passionate ardor only to make a fool of him, he tried to continue. But the desire to humiliate her died. Releasing her suddenly, he strode to the door.

Billie clutched the robe about her. "Glenn," she cried breathlessly, following him and placing her hand impulsively on his arm, "I knew you wouldn't—couldn't. You're too decent—"

He flung her away in a gesture of repulsion. "It's not decency" he answered contemptuously. "You're as cheap as a harlot, without even a harlot's excuse! That's why I couldn't touch you!"

The door slammed behind him.

For the first time Billie saw herself through his eyes. He was right. She had used her body to gain her ends, indifferent to what pain she inflicted. And for what? Just a little more applause, a wider platform in the limelight, a louder blare of the Big Brass Band.

Tragically she plodded back to the cabin to put on her wet clothes. She felt herself indeed, the thing he believed her—cheap, common, a woman of the streets.

KENTUCKY and Gil were alone before a cheerful fire, intimately sheltered from the rain. Deep in the comfort of a wing chair, lazily puffing at his pipe, he listened contentedly to the negro love melody she crooned to the accompaniment of her mandolin. As she finished, he leaned forward and rumpled her hair.

Gil sank back in his chair and drew on his pipe again. 'Tuck was a dear child . . . Adoring and adorable . . . Helpless, somehow, too . . . Made a chap feel strong, and eager to take care of her . . .

The door blew open in a gust of chilling wind and rain, and Billie tumbled in, clothes dripping, her hat forgotten, She tried to escape upstairs unnoticed; but Gil had seen her.

"I'm a sight!" she said, managing to smile as he came quickly up to her. "Mr. Abbott and I were caught in the rain."

Gil sensed Billie's unstrung condition.

"Darling is there anything wrong?" he asked anxiously.

She shook her head and swallowed hard. "Oh, no, Gil—only an overpowering conviction that I'm a rotter!" she answered lightly.

"You—a rotter?" he repeated incredulously. "Why, Billie, you're—you're the most wonderful girl in the world!"

Billie, grateful for his reassurance, allowed him to kiss her again before she ran upstairs.

GIL watched her go, completely unaware that Kentucky was still in the room until she came up, put her arms ardently about him and, standing on tiptoes, kissed him tenderly. Quickly, then, she ran after Billie, leaving Gil dejectedly staring after her . . Poor, game little kid! She must have seen him kiss Billie . . . It must be hell to love a guy like that!

"Why, Billie, your hands are like ice!" exclaimed Kentucky, taking them in her own to warm them, and leading her over to the fire.

Billie's misery melted before the sweetness of the child. She drew Kentucky into her arms and tipped back her head.

"I was afraid our crowd would rob you of your ideals, but they couldn't," she said, smiling into Kentucky's ardent little face. "How wonderful it must be to feel as innocent and unsoiled as you."

Kentucky laid her cheek against Billie's. Silently they watched the flames, each lost in secret thoughts of her own . . .

Glenn Abbott returned to the Andes without seeing Billie again, nor did he communicate with her during the weeks that followed.

On the morning of Billie's wedding to Gil Johns, Kentucky learned what she had for some time suspected—that she was to have a child . . .

Hidden ills are the most to be feared

Foes to our health stalk everywhere, yet alert men and women need not fear those ills that give warning, for modern science has perfected many a safeguard.

At the first warning of pain, do not be satisfied with superficial remedies! Gastric pains, dizziness, lack of energy, and indigestion, may be the danger signals of active stomach ulcers—one of the most dangerous of ailments because it is hidden.

For more than a generation, Dr. H. H. Warner, with his chemists and medical staff, have been perfecting a remedy for this disease, and now Dr. Warner's Stu-Mak Remedy is accepted everywhere as a harmless, healing panacea for this all too common trouble. If you suspect the presence of this ill, which may so easily become malignant, send for a trial box. The price is $2.00, or three boxes for $5.00.

the screen. The public ought to forget and forgive, perhaps; but they will not. That's a cinch.

An audience whispering: "That's her; I wonder if she still takes it" just doesn't seem to lend itself to romantic illusion.

Why Wasn't Anna?

A FAN writes an indignant letter to me demanding to know why Anna May Wong has been starred in English pictures and feted like an empress in London—when she was half starving in Hollywood.

You know, lady, it really isn't my fault. I didn't make any hoodoo signs over Anna when she was here.

As a matter of fact, Anna didn't get on so well in Hollywood for the singular reason that she was not sufficiently Chinese in the way she acted. Her father and mother are Chinese born and there isn't a drop of white blood in her veins. But she always acted like a little white flapper in the film colony. Which probably added to her private and personal joy of living; but was bad business from a salesmanship standpoint.

Too Flapperish

I REMEMBER once being invited to a dinner in Chinatown for the special reason that I wanted to ask her about the ancient Chinese philosophers. Anna listened to my questions with wonderment; then she snickered. She knew a good deal about the immortal works of Elinor Glyn and Michael Arlen; but she had never heard of Lao Tzu.

Revised Romance

THE revised edition of the current romances of Hollywood are that Lupe Velez says she gosh no wouldn't marry Gary Cooper; and Lita Gray Chaplin isn't so sure she is going to marry Roy D'Arcy.

Ramon's Sorrow

JUST when everything seemed to be coming his way and his dearest hopes within the range of coming true, Ramon Novarro has been hit by a sorrow that has left him speechless and crushed. This was the death of his younger brother, Jose Samaniego. He was a lovable boy; and he always seemed to be even more handsome than Ramon. He had, however, no screen ambitions. In order to get their minds off their sorrow, Ramon is to take his father, mother, his brother, Mariano and his lovely sister, Carmen, to Berlin this summer where he is to take lessons in voice culture.

Carmen is a beautiful and fascinating girl. She could make a great triumph on the screen; but Ramon will not hear of her working for a living—especially as an actress.

Two Men With a Past

MAKEUP always interested me, Mal, even from the first time I appeared on the stage as a little Abe in Tess of the D'Urbervilles. Little Abe, you know, was a lame boy. But it really was necessity that made me expert in make-up. When I was in San Diego working on the stage, I was too old for kid parts and too young for juveniles, so there was nothing left for me to do but play character roles, which required my knowing all kinds of make-ups. I remember once having to portray a skeleton. I could have used one of the ready-to-wear skeleton disguises, but instead I preferred to use my own conception and spent two and three hours a night making myself up. That was one job of which I really was proud."

"It's a strange thing, Harold, but I don't recall ever having seen you as a Keystone cop."

"No, about that time the vogue of the Keystone cops was waning, and though they were still being used occasionally I never was cast as one. Getting back to that first job of mine as a fruit cart vender, I remember surprising the director with an unexpectedly good make-up, but what he was most interested in was whether I could take a good brodie, which was high art in those days, or whether I was just an upright actor.

"I did pretty well, I guess, for the director expressed his approbation and for a while I did my share of bumping. I worked several times with Fatty Arbuckle, but without much success. Arbuckle, as you recall, had a collection of the best brodie artists on the lot, and he led them in person. Every time Fatty went into a 108 they thought there was an earthquake out in Edendale way. I could bump with most of them but Arbuckle had his own boys who were so well accustomed to his methods that they hardly needed direction."

HOW did it happen, Harold, that you quit Sennett's?"

"Well, Mal, at that time Roach who had been dickering with Pathe, had been offered another proposition if he could get the trio of Just Nuts. Stewart and Miss Novak were then under contract elsewhere, so Roach wired Pathe that only the comedian was available, and they replied that he was to go ahead with me.

"Hal offered me fifty dollars a week to go back with him. It sure looked like a lot of money in those days, Mal. I had grown very fond of Ford Sterling, with whom I had worked in several pictures, and had learned a lot from him. He was a hard fellow to work with, because he was so meticulous, but he invariably knew what he wanted and how to get it. I have since found that this policy pays.

"When I told Ford that I was quitting to do comedies for Roach at fifty a week, he urged me not to do it. 'You'll never get anywhere in cheap comedies' he told me. 'You ought to get in with Griffith. You can act, kid, and you can eat up that Bobby Harron stuff." But Roach's proposition looked awfully good, and I liked comedy, so that's how I happened to leave Sennett's."

"Chester Conklin, Mabel Normand, Sterling and Chaplin, were going great in those days, weren't they, Harold?" added St. Clair. "But I certainly was a flop as an actor, for they put me to titling pictures. Then when Sennett changed his release from Triangle to Paramount, he let us all go. I can't remember what I did after that, but I know it wasn't long before I was called back to the Keystone again as a gag man.

"And believe it or not, once more they made an actor out of me, I was assigned the role of the Crown Prince in Yankee Doodle in Berlin, I must have been a howling success in this picture—and I'll never forget that Crown Prince get-up—for that made a director out of me. As a director I was paid $20 a week. What a salary! I made four pictures for Sennett. Then I made one for Fox and another for Sennett, until finally I was with Paramount. But I must say, Harold, that Sennett's was a great school of experience. The only thing I regretted was that I did not get fired often enough. If I had, I might have owned the studio, for I advanced every time I returned there."

I'VE always wondered, Harold," queried Mal, "the real low down on how you were inspired to wear horned-rimmed glasses?"

"Originally, the thought came to me after seeing a ministerial character in a downtown show, who had worn glasses. Contrary to general assumption, however, I did not get the horned-rimmed spectacles idea from that. It really is chance that I wore them. Horned-rimmed glasses were just then coming into vogue. To me they represented youth. With them low comedy make-up was unnecessary, for the boy wearing tortoise rims could just as readily portray a doctor, a minister or lawyer, as he could a policeman, for men in all walks of life were then beginning to adopt the rims. That's all there was to that, Mal, except that I had a mighty hard time convincing the boys back in New York that it would be good policy for me to kiss goodbye to Lonesome Luke and start the glass character."

About this time somebody got word to John L. Murphy, Harold Lloyd's production manager. Murphy came storming out to the set and shouted.

"Hey, you fellows, this is a film plant not an old lady's home."

The cameras began clicking, St. Clair started to give orders, and Lloyd resumed his antics. When Murphy wasn't looking, Lloyd was heard to remark:

"At that, Mal, those were the happy days."

TAKOFF WEIGHT AT THE RATE OF 40¢ A LB.!

HERE'S a new way of reducing. Figure out in advance how many pounds you want to lose and you will immediately know how much it will cost you with this newly discovered TAKOFF treatment. According to the way TAKOFF has acted for others, it has been proven that its cost of reduction is usually around 40c a pound.

Think of it—you can lose a half a pound a day or more safely without tiresome exercise—without wearing yourself out—without depriving yourself of tasty, delightful dishes that you always enjoy. A discovery called "TAKOFF", which is the prescription of a well known physician, is now put up in convenient form so that everyone, regardless of where they live, can benefit. TAKOFF is not a dangerous drug. On the other hand, it is a harmless vegetable compound that speedily corrects and adjusts digestive disorders and arouses the all-important food assimilation fluids to uniform activity. No matter if you are five or fifty pounds overweight—whether the fat is on your arms, face, legs or stomach, whether you are man or woman, TAKOFF accomplishes the reduction pleasantly and safely. From your very first day treatment you will notice a feeling of better health, more ambition and energy, because you will begin to lose from the very start.

TAKOFF IS SAFE
CONTAINS NO DANGEROUS THYROID

Unlike many other reducers, TAKOFF is remarkable, inasmuch as it does not contain any dangerous thyroid whatsoever—nor does it contain any other harmful substance. It is really nature's own aid for the obese—it can't harm you and it must help, or your money back.

GUARANTEE $10,000.00 IN CASH GIVEN TO ANYONE PROVING THAT TAKOFF CONTAINS THYROID OR ANY OTHER HARMFUL SUBSTANCE

HOW TO ORDER

While TAKOFF has been recommended and used for many years by the physician who discovered this magical formula, it is only a few months since it is available to everyone. Heretofore it could only be had at a fancy price by a limited few who lived at Hollywood, California, the home of this doctor. Now anyone who is sincere and ambitious to take off weight safely and without diet or exercise, can secure a 9-day treatment which is generally enough to reduce 5 to 8 pounds for the small sum of $2.00. Send no money now—just sign your name and address to the coupon below and you will receive your 9-day TAKOFF treatment in plain wrapper by return mail. When it arrives, pay the postman only $2.00 plus the few cents postage.

Mercolized Wax Keeps Skin Young

Remove all blemishes and discolorations by regularly using pure Mercolized Wax. Get an ounce, and use as directed. Fine, almost invisible particles of aged skin peel off, until all defects, such as pimples, liver spots, tan, freckles and large pores have disappeared. Skin is beautifully clear, soft and velvety, and face looks years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty. To quickly remove wrinkles and other age lines, use this face lotion: 1 ounce powdered saxolite and 1 half pint witch hazel. At Drug Stores.

Out—why would I need a personal press agent when the public do my publicity for me? No, I've never had one."

Suddenly, he laughed. A grotesque laugh, this! The three pounds of scar tissue were scattered so cleverly over his fact that sitting three feet from him I would not have known that the long gashes and cuts were fake if I had not known they were on the face of Lon Chaney. "A picture of my house did somehow get into a magazine. Someone sneaked up on me and got it. I don't know how they did it. One day a woman came to the door and asked if the house was for sale. 'Everything is for sale for a price, madam,' I answered. She gave me the price and then told me that she had seen the picture of the home in the magazine and come all the way from Philadelphia to buy it!"

NOW Lon is planning to build a new home in Beverly. But it is not in the motion picture section of that city. At present he lives in a duplex. Even his next door neighbor does not get an opportunity to see Lon Chaney. He has never given a motion picture party; never entertained motion picture people. As well as he knows Director Tod Browning, they never exchange social amenities. He has been to the Montmartre six times in ten years, but never on Wednesdays or Saturdays and he has never been to the Cocoanut Grove on Tuesday, the motion picture evening.

He did make one personal appearance. The opening of The Hunchback of Notre Dame in New York City. "The only reason I did it was for the American Legion.

He attended the opening of White Shadows of the South Seas recently at Grauman's Chinese Theatre. His first picture opening. "And my last! Again they sneaked up on me and took a picture of myself and Mrs. Chaney. The only picture we have had taken together. Did I object? I squawked. Why, they printed the d— thing in the New York paper!

"Don't misunderstand me!" Was there another note of warning in his ejaculation? "I am always glad to meet people on the set when I am in character. It's just when I'm myself that I don't and won't see them.

"Do you remember the time when they were taking pictures of us entering the front gate, going to work, etc., as a sort of news reel for the exhibitors? Well, one day they called to me to join the semi-circle. I answered 'Sure'. But when the camera was grinding my back was turned—I was talking to Ford Sterling. When the thing came out the exhibitors wired in to find out who had his back turned. The answer was 'Lon Chaney.' Don't you think it was better publicity to be the only one with my back turned to the camera? It still meant mystery for me!"

Women men admire .. pretty rounded face and neck

Miss Gonzales of Reno Nevada, writes, "I have used Tiffany Tissue Builder only two weeks and already it has filled out my sunken cheeks and removed the wearied, worn-out lines that woman dreads. I used to look so old for my age, but now am proud of my appearance."

You, too, can abolish forever sunken cheeks, thin necks, hollow shoulders, flat busts. No dieting or tiresome exercise is necessary.

Mrs. B. Roleson of Clifton, N. J., writes, "Tiffany Tissue Builder has done wonders for me."

Miss Effie Robertson of Charleston, Miss., says, "I am delighted with the results of using Tiffany Tissue Builder. It has done me worlds of good."

And thousands of other women have used this delightful way to secure the same results.

Simply apply Tiffany Tissue Builder to develop more flesh where you want it. It is a secret compound of amazing building oils. Hollow cheeks, hollow temples and shoulders, flat busts, skinny necks round out almost at once—dainty and firm. New beauty is yours now and forever.

Crow's feet and wrinkles disappear as though by magic. The soothing tissue building oils will not irritate the most tender skin. Neither will they grow hair.

Results guaranteed or your money promptly refunded if you are not delighted after four weeks' use. Price $3.00. Send check, money order or currency and we will send prepaid. If you prefer, send no money but deposit $3.00 plus few cents postage with postman when he delivers it. Use the coupon below.

"But if they were all like you, Mr. Chaney? If every star created the same illusion as you and Greta Garbo?"

"I'm glad they're not all like me for then I would not be different!" The frankness of the man amazed me, even accustomed as I am to frankness from picture people. "But then they are not all specializing.

"There's another angle to this thing, too. I really don't think that who I am is any of the public's business. I feel my private life is my own. It's a sacred thing. We don't pry into the public's private business.

AND yet there is one group of people who are always welcome behind the window shades of the life of Lon Chaney. He is making arrangements now to address the prisoners at Sing Sing during his next trip to New York City. And he has recently published an article on the causes of crime in the Island Lantern, the official publication of the prisoners in the Federal prison on McNeil Island. An article which caused Mabel Walker Wildebrandt, the editorial supervisor, to comment that it was of tremendous interest that Lon Chaney's views on crime should so coincide with those of experts when he is a motion picture actor rather than a criminologist.

I disagreed with Mrs. Willebrandt. Mr. Chaney is a criminologist. He has studied the criminal's every action for his screen interpretations. Just what make-up to use, what gait, what slouch of the shoulders. And he has studied it so thoroughly that the criminal has become his great side study. And before them, he is himself always; to them he comes as the man rather than the actor. He was like a small boy when he told of the man in London who had committed murder. "When he saw one of my pictures he confessed—and said it was because of my picture."

Perhaps it is erroneous to say that Chaney never looks at his fan mail. When he stands above the waste container at the studio, he shuffles through it, looking for the return addresses in the corner. If there's a prison stamp upon it, he slips it into his pocket and sends out an answer.

"But if you felt your box-office power slipping, would you turn to publicity, Mr. Chaney?"

"Never! I like myself. Anybody does. When a person ceases to like himself he turns to drink, to death—shoots himself or hangs himself. I am not different. If I went in for publicity I would talk about myself naturally. And that would not be good business. If I find the box office slipping, I'll quit the show business. I have an ace in the hole. I always carry my Union card with me. There's never a time when I can't go back to carpet laying and paper hanging!"

Hobnobbing With The Film Folk

Bell is Grand Disburser of the Royal Funds, while the Sacred Providers of the Royal Fun are Alan Dale, Sylvia Picker, Marshall Ruth, John Breeden, Mary Beaton, Jimmy Barnes and Betty Collins. Each member has a right to an alias, too. Thus Cannon is "Big Shot;" Lois Moran is "Pep;" Nick Stuart is "Sue" (in deference to his engagement to Sue Carol, one supposes); Rex Bell is "Horsey," and Jose Crespo is "Hot Tamale."

Several outsiders have been admitted to the club, including Sally Phipps, who is "Queenie;" Maria Alba, who is "Chili;" Dorothy Ward, "Bossy;" Eddie Foy, Jr., "Speedy;" Claude Gillingwater, Jr., "Gilly;" and so on.

Alan Dale, one of the young actors, brought a box lunch the other night, and sat down and ate it in a corner all by himself, without speaking to anybody. But the other members got even by making him try to walk the tight rope, and of course he couldn't say a word.

But the kidders were kidded the other night when a waiter at the Montmartre began to tell the girls to mind their cigarette ashes and the men to mind their manners and keep their elbows off the table. He was an actor in disguise, but before his identity was discovered he had everybody's goat.

THIS MONTH'S WINNING LETTER

Below is printed this month's winner of the prize of $5.00 offered each month for the best letter by a reader giving a frank opinion of the talkies.

166 Santa Clara Ave.,
Oakland, Cal.
March 17, 1929.

The adolescent talkies I think might be likened in amusement value to the magic lantern slides which feebly prepared us for the excellent motion pictures which daily bring to over thirty million citizens in the United States alone an appreciation of literature and drama.

The talkies must be regarded with intelligent tolerance until their bronchial difficulties are overcome and their tonal reproduction is harmonious and uniform.

The startling bellowings and sepulchral wails which issue from the talkies are the growing pains of a new industry. The development of the movies, which today bring educational and recreational advantages to millions, can be traced back through various early crudities.

Patience! I would say to those who complain of the talkies and prefer their dramas smothered in silence. Patience, to those who but grudgingly admit the possibilities of this new advancement in the picture industry.

Patience, for, from present indications, in a few tomorrows we shall have motion pictures of the world's activities in natural color and natural sound.

Yours very truly,
EVA LOVEL DUNBAR.

Madame Chevalier, charming wife of Paramount's French importation for the talkies, is causing a frenzy among the Hollywood women with her style creations. Every day sees her on the boulevard with some innovation. One day it was an enormous choker of tiny braided turquoise worn as the only splash of color with a grey ensemble. The local gals had no more than copied that when she sprang a new type of jeweled purse on them.

THAT "rest," mentioned so negligently, reads like a modern fairy tale. Upon graduation from high school, he went on up to the University of Alabama. And there, upon the teams of the Crimson Tide, made for himself a national reputation. Before he was old enough to vote newspapers all over the country carried stories about him, radio announcers made whoopee with his flashy three-word name, an army of fans discussed his merits and activities like those of a thoroughbred horse.

Fame indeed. And then what? A line in the rule book which states that a man may play but four years of collegiate football. Fame . . . and then oblivion.

What to do? Well, how about the films? People always were remarking that he looked far more like an actor than a football player. At last he made the step toward a wish which had lain dormant and unrecognized all during those early years; he hit the trail for Hollywood.

DESPITE his hopes, it was slower going at first than expected by feet accustomed to dazzling speed. He was given glorified extra-work, bits, small parts. It was all in the way of excellent training, and Johnny, a disciplined athlete, knew that a man must understand any game before he hopes to conquer it.

"I pegged along for six months, and then I was cast opposite Marion Davies in The Fair Co-ed. After that things came pretty fast. I was loaned to Fox for leads in three pictures, and to Pathe for Annapolis. Then I returned to M-G-M to play with Joan Crawford in Our Dancing Daughters, and Norma Shearer in A Lady of Chance. I was pretty green at first, but I learned steadily from all of them."

More recently he has done an excellent piece of character acting in the role of Greta Garbo's husband who dies for "decency" in A Woman of Affairs, and has been given his most important part thus far in the principal male role of Mary Pickford's new special, Coquette.

"Hollywood is full of heartaches, and I think most of them are caused simply because somebody is trying to get the best of somebody else. Still, I suppose that's part of the fascination of pictures, and all in all I don't find this town so unattractive. Of course, having been born down Alabama way—"

But think! Living down there in lovely, lazy Dothan, would he ever have been able to kindle ambition in the hearts of small town boys all over the world—that fighting ambition "to get somewhere, to be somebody?" And that is the ambition which, after all, comes close to being the finest of the many boons granted a needful world by the people of shadowland.

See the Fat Go!

From Any Part You Wish Reduced This Easy Way

NO more need you worry over double chin, "fatty" neck, bust, arms, abdomen, hips, legs or ankles. Since the discovery of COLLIPASTE, thousands of fat women and men have taken many pounds off some part of body, where fat showed, too much. COLLIPASTE is not a cream or clay. Does not contain water. You rub it into fat part at night. Morning finds excess fat coming out like perspiration. Bulky part quickly reduces in size and weight. Skin tightens, tissues feel solid, muscles are strengthened, almost like magic. COLLIPASTE is white, like cream, daintily perfumed and works while you sleep. Successful results from every jar or money back. Order a jar now. Send no money, just coupon below. Reduce those ugly too-fat parts and keep your health.

CLIP AND MAIL COUPON
Dermolav Laboratories, Dept. 41-C, No. 1700 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

Please send me, postpaid, in plain wrapper, one jar of COLLIPASTE with book of instruction. On arrival I agree to pay postman $1.95, plus few cents postal charge, my money to be refunded if I am not satisfied.

A Look at Lupe

THERE'S not a lad in the land of rocks and thrills who wouldn't have given his left ear to have changed places with me the other noon.

I sat at the right hand of Senorita Lupe Velez at a Park Central luncheon given in honor of her long-awaited arrival in New York.

Lupe is the original Mexican jumping bean. She is all action.

Civilization rests uneasily upon her. Her temperament seems to be merely an adaptation of her native fire. And she does what she is told. She sings when they tell her she'd better sing. She goes around and spreads her stuff when she gets the word. She doesn't forget to look furious once or twice. She admits that her temperament is put on. It is what the public expects.

Nor does Lupe forget that she and Gary Cooper are coupled on every tongue. Perhaps she loves him and will marry him. But one feels that her enthusiasm is a bit too practiced. She shouts at someone at the end of the table, who is talking about Gary, "Don't you say nothing against my Gary. He wonderful, my Gary." Mebbe. And then again mebbe not. Time will tell. Lupe won't. Who knows?

Velez, I was saying she's a rare picture. And when you see her in her next film don't say somebody didn't warm you.

Jottings

GEORGE JESSEL, who surprised New York with a Rolls-Royce, a chauffeur, and a footman at the time of the presentation of his latest picture, will sign up with a bigger company after he's made his third show for Tiffany Stahl . . . RKO opened its new Gramercy studios at Twenty-fourth Street near Lexington Avenue with special equipment in the form of a swimming tank to be used for under water scenes . . . Margaret Livingston, who's been sporting around New York recently, started off on a Palm Beach vacation . . . D. W. Griffith spoke at a woman's luncheon club here and then beat it out to Chicago to see the opening of his Lady of the Pavements, at which Lupe Velez made a personal appearance . . . Louis B. Mayer, vice-president of M-G-M arrived here the other day and Mrs. Cecil B. De Mille is on her way . . . Richard Dix, they murmur, is palpitating over Regina Cannon, a certain film press mamselle . . . and Lila Lee, formerly Mme. James Kirkwood, has a yen for a Paramount scribbler . . . Norman Kerry's wife is seeking a divorce . . . Marshall Neilan, the director, is in N. Y. stopping at the Algonquin till Blanche Sweet gets her final divorce papers . . . A New York columnist has it that John Gilbert was so pleased with the connection during a twenty-minute phone talk with Greta Garbo in Paris that he sent the operator a box of roses.

Senorita Cyclone

"Did you ever hear Gloria Swanson say anything she shouldn't?"

"No, Mr. Schenck."

"Well, Lupe, I want you to swear for the last time. I want you to raise your right hand and say, 'I, Lupe Velez, swear that I will not swear any more.'"

So I do it. I like to do what is right in this country. Then I turn to go out and I trip my foot on the rug by the door. Before I can think a minute I turn around and stamp my foot and say, "Why in hell you have not this damn rug nailed down?"

Mr. Schenck, he is a good sport. He just throw up his hands and laugh and say, "Lupe, that beats me!"

It's no use. I am not bad but it's no use trying to make me a lady. My mother try; my sisters try; the convent try; Mr. Schenck try, but Lupe still swear when she want to make people to understand just how much she means it.

* * * * *

THERE was a knock at the dressing room door. Lupe bounced up as though a stick of dynamite had gone off beneath her. The door opened; Gary Cooper entered. She was in his arms in a moment, ignorant of the fact that her delicate taffeta dress, her gown for the picture, was being soiled against his greasy chamois costume.

"Oh, my darling, my baby! You come to see Lupe. I love you, darling. I love you always." She turned to me. "Isn't he a darling? Isn't he wonderful, baby?"

I agreed. What can you do but agree with Lupe? Gary did look mighty handsome as he stood there with his arms about her. But it wouldn't have made any difference whether it was Gary or some other man of the moment. To Lupe, some man will always be wonderful, be thrilling. Men are as much a necessity to her primitive, untutored nature as they were to Carmen's. She is woman elemental; woman untouched by the restraint of man-made conventions. Her morality is the result of a shrewd Latin mother. Her allurement is something which defies description by tongue or on paper. Her beauty may fade but that wild intuitive spirit, bred of revolutions, developed without inhibitions—will it ever be conquered? There is one man who could, perhaps, have done it. Her dog is named for him. Yet, he failed and in that failure, he made Lupe Velez all actress.

I arose, patted them both on the back, and left Lupe and Gary together. I wondered what man would be there the next time I paid her a visit. What does it matter? Whoever it may be, she will love him just as she now loves Gary—as an inspiration for her to give the depths of herself to her one real love, the public.

The End.

"I agree, Princess Pat face powder does give 'twice the beauty'," says Mary Philbin, beautiful Universal Film Star.

Twice the Beauty from Face Powder if You use PRINCESS PAT

THE FAMOUS ALMOND BASE MAKES IT DIFFERENT

FACE Powder gives the greatest beauty when it is softest. The characteristic of Princess Pat Face Powder, which invariably brings delight, is its unusual softness. It is noticeable at once that Princess Pat goes on differently. It gives to the skin a wonderful, velvety smoothness. It lends to the face an appearance of perfection that is natural, and not "powdery."

All the many advantages of Princess Pat Face Powder are due to its almond base. And since no other powder possesses an almond base, Princess Pat is bound to be different—bound to be a glorious experience when it is used for the first time. No woman really knows the excellence to which powder can attain until she has tried "the powder with the almond base."

A Difference With a Reason

So many powders are described as impalpable, or fine, or clinging, or of purest ingredients. But do you find that these virtues are explained?

If Princess Pat lacked its marvelous almond base, it, too, would lack explanation. But every woman knows that almond in its various forms is the most soothing and delightful of all beauty aids.

The usual base of face powders is starch. The slightest thought must convince any woman that almond as a powder base is preferable to starch in the very nature of things.

Consequently there really is a reason for the difference immediately noticeable when Princess Pat Face Powder is tried for the first time.

And Your Skin is Actually Improved

Of course Princess Pat is used primarily for the greater beauty it gives immediately—as powder—as an essential of make-up. It is preferred for its dainty fragrance; for the hours and hours it clings—longer than you'd dare hope.

But there is something additional to account for the preference of women who know. The almond in Princess Pat is definitely good for the skin. All the while your face powder is on, the almond exerts its soothing, beneficial qualities.

Continued use of Princess Pat almond base face powder is an excellent preventive of coarse pores. It keeps the skin smooth and pliant. It helps wonderfully in overcoming either oily skin, or dry skin. For it helps make the skin normal—in which event there cannot be dryness or oiliness.

Princess Pat Powder Comes in Two Weights

For years, women have been familiar with the oblong "treasure chest" box of Princess Pat powder. This oblong box contains medium weight powder.

But to please those who prefer a light powder, there is the Princess Pat round box. Princess Pat in the lighter weight has the same almond base. And because of this it clings equally as well as the heavier weight. Most light weight powders, as women well know, will not adhere well. Princess Pat, therefore, fulfills a particularly important want in face powders

Learn Electricity in 90 Days at the Big Coyne Shops

Coyne Has Stood The Test

Thirty years is a long time. No business or School could continue so long, unless it were rendering a real service and producing real results. Yet Coyne has not only stood every test for years, but has grown larger and more successful as each year has passed—until today Coyne stands alone as by far the largest Practical Electrical School in the world.

So you take no chance when you come to Coyne. You run no risk when you place your Electrical Training in my hands. The very fact that Coyne has already successfully trained thousands of fellows like you, for Big Pay Jobs in Electricity, is the very best proof in the world that Coyne can and will do the same for you.

Ninety Days To Success

You don't have to wait until you are an old man to win success. You don't have to wait 12 months, 6 months, nor even 4 months. Just 90 days, that's all I ask. Spend 90 days with me in my Big Coyne Shops, and your future is assured. Never again will you have to worry about a job, or the size of your weekly pay envelope. Your services will be in demand all the time, and wherever you may go.

Employers come to Coyne for Trained men because they know that all Coyne men have had 90 days actual experience, under Expert Instructors, on the very same kind of Electrical Equipment that they have in their plants. They don't have to waste a lot of time telling Coyne men what to do. Nor are they afraid to entrust them with the operation and care of their expensive electrical machinery. They know that Coyne men have been trained RIGHT, and they are glad to have them in their organization.

That's why it's so easy for my Employment Department to assist you in landing a good position, once you have my Training. And that's why Employers all over the country are constantly writing me for more men. I don't have to "sell" my graduates to the Electrical Industry. Electricity needs them—and often COMES TO ME FOR THEM.

You Learn by Actual Work on Electrical Equipment

Not by books or correspondence, but by actual work on the very finest Electrical Equipment that money can buy. In this way you not only learn twice as fast, but you graduate as a PRACTICAL man—a man ready to step into any electrical concern anywhere and prove by his work that he is an Expert.

Age, Lack of Education or Experience No Drawback

It makes no difference whether you are 15 or 45; whether you never finished the Grade School or are a College graduate; whether you know anything about electricity or have worked at it as an untrained man for years—I can help YOU, just as I have already helped so many others like you. I can prepare you in 90 days for a Big Pay Electrical Job.

.....

"Can he really play?" a girl whispered. "Heavens, no!" Arthur exclaimed. "He never played a note in his life."

They Laughed When I Sat Down At the Piano But When I Started to Play!—

ARTHUR had just played "The Rosary." The room rang with applause. I decided that this would be a dramatic moment for me to make my debut. To the amazement of all my friends I strode confidently over to the piano and sat down.

"Jack is up to his old tricks," somebody chuckled. The crowd laughed. They were all certain that I couldn't play a single note.

"Can he really play," I heard a girl whisper to Arthur.

"Heavens, no!" Arthur exclaimed. "He never played a note in all his life. . . But just you watch him. This is going to be good."

I decided to make the most of the situation. With mock dignity I drew out a silk handkerchief and lightly dusted off the keys. Then I rose and gave the revolving piano stool a quarter of a turn, just as I had seen an imitator of Paderewski do in a vaudeville sketch.

"What do you think of his execution?" called a voice from the rear.

"We're in favor of it!" came back the answer, and the crowd rocked with laughter.

Then I Started to Play

Instantly a tense silence fell on the guests. The laughter died on their lips as if by magic. I played through the first bars of Liszt's immortal Liebesträum. I heard gasps of amazement. My friends sat breathless—spellbound.

I played on and as I played I forgot the people around me. I forgot the hour, the place, the breathless listeners. The little world I lived in seemed to fade—seemed to grow dim—unreal. Only the music was real. Only the music and the visions it brought me. Visions as beautiful and as changing as the wind-blown clouds and drifting moonlight, that long ago inspired the master composer. It seemed as if the master musician himself were speaking to me—speaking through the medium of music—not in words but in chords. Not in sentences but in exquisite melodies.

A Complete Triumph!

As the last notes of the Liebesträum died away, the room resounded with a sudden roar of applause. I found myself surrounded by excited faces. How my friends carried on! Men shook my hand—wildly congratulated me—pounded me on the back in their enthusiasm! Everybody was exclaiming with delight—plying me with rapid questions. . . "Jack! Why didn't you tell us you could play like that?. . ."Where did you learn?" —"How long have you studied?"—"Who was your teacher?"

"I have never even seen my teacher," I replied. "And just a short while ago I couldn't play a note."

"Quit your kidding," laughed Arthur, himself an accomplished pianist. "You've been studying for years. I can tell."

"I have been studying only a short while," I insisted. "I decided to keep it a secret so that I could surprise all you folks."

Then I told them the whole story.

"Have you ever heard of the U. S. School of Music?" I asked.

A few of my friends nodded. "That's a correspondence school, isn't it?" they exclaimed.

"Exactly," I replied. "They have a new simplified method that can teach you to play any instrument by note in just a few months."

How I Learned to Play Without a Teacher

And then I explained how for years I had longed to play the piano.

"It seems just a short while ago," I continued, "that I saw an interesting ad of the U. S. School of Music mentioning a new method of learning to play which only averages a few cents a day! The ad told how a woman had learned to play the piano in her spare time at home —and without a teacher! Best of all, the wonderful new method she used required no laborious scales—no heartless exercises —no tiresome practicing. It sounded so convincing that I filled out the coupon requesting the Free Demonstration Lesson.

"The free book arrived promptly and I started in that very night to study the Demonstration Lesson. I was amazed to see how easy it was to play this new way. Then I sent for the course.

"When the course arrived I found it was just as the ad said—as easy as A B C! And as the lessons continued they got easier and easier. Before I knew it I was playing all the pieces I liked best. I soon will be able to play ballads or classical numbers or jazz, all with equal ease. And I never did have any special talent for music."

Play Any Instrument

You, too, can now teach yourself to be an accomplished musician—right at home—in half the usual time. You can't go wrong with this simple new method which has already shown over half a million people how to play their favorite instruments by note. Forget that old-fashioned idea that you need special "talent." Just read the list of instruments in the panel, decide which one you want to play, and the U. S. School will do the rest. And bear in mind no matter which instrument you choose, the cost in each case will be the same —averaging just a few cents a day. No matter whether you are a mere beginner or already a good performer, you will be interested in learning about this new and wonderful method.

Send for Our Free Booklet and Demonstration Lesson

Thousands of successful students never dreamed they possessed musical ability until it was revealed to them by a remarkable "Musical Ability Test" which we send entirely without cost with our interesting free booklet.

I Sell Records a Queer Way

So people tell me, because I will gladly send to any person who sends me his name and address, a selection of ten records absolutely ON TRIAL, entirely at my risk. Choose any records you want. Furthermore, I positively insist that you return the records to me at once, if they are in any way inferior to records that sell for three or four times as much. Don't be "sorry" for me, but shoot the records back, and let me stand postage expense both ways, unless the reco ls are better, clearer and richer in tone than any records you have ever before had, t any price.

I have built a million dollar business on just these "queer" methods, trusting absolutely in the honesty of my customers, and making them the sole judge of whether or not the records will cost them even one cent. All the records are electrically recorded. They are all in the standard ten-inch size with music on both sides, and play on any phonograph, just like 75 cent records. They include the most recent hits, as well as famous old favorites; and I'm willing to stake my last dollar that they are GOOD.

Choose any ten records you want and simply write their catalog numbers on coupon below. See terms on coupon and see how fully I protect you in every way.

A monthly feature devoted to bringing our readers the latest, most authentic news of talkie personalities and developments.

Jolson at the Mike

ALTHOUGH Al Jolson is by all odds the talkie sensation of the year, studio officials like to tell about the difficult time he had in keeping still in front of the microphone.

He'd sing the first verse okeh, then he'd forget his position in relation to the mike and run this side and that, singing all the while. Naturally, when the play-backs were taken, one couldn't hear a thing. A director solved the problem by rigging up a platform above a scene, with a "puppet master" stationed there, holding a wire that led to the mike.

When Al started his running business, the fellow above would start running, too. "Galloping mike" was coined as a result of this experiment.

Producers decided not to depend upon galloping mikes and accordingly, new stages, equipped with several carefully concealed mikes, were built.

In a scene between Jolson and Warner Oland, who played the part of Al's long-bearded Jewish father, the problem of microphone concealment first arose.

"I have it," Al rejoiced. "Hide the mike behind Warner's beard!"

Full of Spring?

FANNY BRICE, upon being complimented for her excellent rendition of Spring Song, told her admirer, "I'm glad you like it. I had a terrible time leaping from mike to mike."

A Unique Test

FOUR monkeys play in First National's Isle of Lost Ships. They took Vitaphone sound tests before being signed for their parts.

Making Noise

DIRECTORS of sound pictures are finding that microphones do not pick up noises the way the human ear gets them. For instance, when it was necessary to record the noise of an L train in William Boyd's The Cop, at Pathe studio, Scot Littleton, director of sound effects, got a railroad hand-car and photographed the actual sound of the iron wheels on the track. The result was a deafening roar. After experimenting with many things, Littleton got a perfect reproduction by tying an iron pipe to a roller skate and dragging it across the bare floor.

The sound of a steam-operated cargo hoist was recorded from a child's toy hoist. The beating of horses' hoofs was best obtained by pounding two wooden egg cups in a box of sand. The crunching of the sides of ships when they brushed together in The Missing Man was produced with a cigar box and a piece of resined string. In The Spieler, it was necessary to get the foot sounds of Alan Hale and Fred Kohler engaged in a terrific fight. Two ex-pugilists wearing rubber shoes and wrestling—not fighting—on a canvas, supplied the desired effect.

"The microphone has no selectivity," explained Mr. Littleton. "It has no brain to control it and it takes everything as it comes."

SCREEN SECRETS offers five dollars each month for the best letter by a reader giving a frank opinion of the talkies. This month's winner will be found on page 103.

Humor and the Talkies

By HAROLD LLOYD

PARALLELING a situation which existed 15 years ago, when on all sides you heard the question, "What do you think of these new moving pictures?" is one which confronts all of us today. The only change is the substituting of "talking pictures" for "moving pictures."

My opinion of talking pictures means little, perhaps, but I have given them intensive study, if only for a selfish purpose. Frankly, I am at a loss to state at this moment how we will manipulate sound and dialogue. One thing is indicated at this stage of talking picture progress, and that is that we may have to change the entire technique of comedy-making to keep up with the parade. All the ingenuity that has made the advancement of motion picture comedy an important factor in the progress of the cinema will have to be brought into play in the making of the talkies.

Even a comedian has to be serious when he considers the talking picture.

From the comedian's point of view, sound will be the most vital factor of the new art in the creation of fun on the screen. Where we formerly had to depend on a clever trap drummer to get effects for gags like the blowing of a whistle, etc., we now can get that right with the making of the scenes. The quacking of a duck, or the mooing of a cow can be used for laugh purposes. The ticking of a clock we hope to turn into laughs, and a dozen other such bits of business.

I could name a hundred instances where sound would have been of inestimable assistance in putting over scenes which we had to eliminate before or after previews. I see sound as a real adjunct to the wares of the comedians and will open up to him an entire new bag of tricks.

Master Voice

DOUBLE exposure of sound is the latest! They needed an all English audience for Reginald Denny's latest picture, His Lucky Day. When they couldn't find enough Englishmen, Denny just had them double expose his voice 20 times, with different ejaculations. So the crowd you will hear will really be all-Denny.

His New Idea

THE world is still trying to crash Hollywood gates. An Omaha, Nebraska, screen aspirant, recognizing the new qualifications for crashing the movies, recorded his voice on a home made record. The record arrived at the Paramount studios, along with a test made by a novice cameraman. The lad's message was contained on the record. He expressed a desire to get into pictures, and to prove his ability, recited Gunga Din.

Long, Long Ago

JACK MULHALL made his vocal debut in the original dialogue films, produced by the Edison company in 1917. An attempt was made at the time to synchronize phonograph records with film. As there were no radio amplifiers, nor inventions for interlocking machinery to adjust, automatically, the speed of film to record, the first "talkies" were much better seen than heard.

Dear Van:

I feel that I should tell you something of just how I feel about the wonderful treatment you give your Partners. Of course, you always go 50-50 in profits, but besides that, You take a great deal out of your own share to give to your Partners.

It is an easy matter for anyone of your sales representatives to make $15.00 a day, clear money. I have made $15.23 in two hours in one afternoon on personal sales in my territory.

You have presented me with $1457.00 worth of gifts, checks and prizes, in addition to the commissions that I have made on my sales. After I received the Piano that you sent me, I had a piano manufacturer come to my house and he immediately appraised it as being worth $1400.00 at retail.

In addition to this, you have given me clothing, bonus checks, table covers and numerous other beautiful and valuable prizes. I consider you the most generous, straightforward, fair and considerate sales manager and Partner that I have ever been associated with. You have assisted me in obtaining an additional musical education.

Do you wonder that I am thankful?

Very truly yours,

Wilbur A. Skiles

Who's Who in Filmdom

Alice White

Alice White

AS A SCRIPT girl, Alice White first came to the glare of the studio lights, but without thought of ever appearing before the camera. She was born in Paterson, New Jersey, but received her education in Roanoke College, Roanoke, Virginia. Coming to Hollywood, she took a secretarial course which led to a position as studio script girl. Two years later she was offered a chance to act. Her rise to stardom was rapid. Alice is five feet, three inches tall, weighs one hundred and ten, has blonde hair, and is still single, in spite of the siege of most of Hollywood males. Her resemblance to Clara Bow caused her much grief at the outset of her career; but she has since made a name for herself that has entirely compensated for her early disappointments. Among her most popular pictures are Harold Teen, Show Girl, Naughty Baby, Hot Stuff, and Broadway Babies.

Nils Asther

Nils Asther

ALTHOUGH he dislikes being known as a "great lover," film fans have pronounced Nils Asther one of the most romantic figures on the screen today. Born in Malmo, Sweden, on January 17, 1902, he was educated at home, in Lunel University, and later at the Royal Dramatic school at Stockholm. He graduated from school at the age of fourteen, and being unhappy at home, ran away to become an actor. In the course of his stage career, he met Greta Garbo, with whom he has been teamed in several productions. Nils, too, entered pictures as a Maurice Stiller discovery, and after making seventeen pictures for Ufa, came to America under contract to United Artists. Topsy and Eva, Sorrel and Son, and Laugh, Clown, Laugh, were his first American productions. Nils is six feet, two inches tall, weighs one hundred and seventy, has greenish eyes and curly black hair.

Nancy Carroll

Nancy Carroll

NANCY LAHIFF, as Irish as a shamrock, went on record with her first "talkie" in New York City, that is, she was born there. With eleven brothers and sisters in the family, she decided while quite young that if she rode in a limousine and trailed around in shimmering negligees, she'd have to go out after them herself and not wait for parental gifts. She embarked on a theatrical career in a local talent contest on New York's East Side. In 1923, she entered the chorus of the Passing Show. Besides doing a dance specialty, Nancy hung from a chandelier. She was offered the leading role after the fourth week, with James Hall as her leading man. Eventually Nancy came to Hollywood to appear in The Music Box Revue, Loose Ankles, and Chicago. It was her dramatic interpretation in this last that led to a Fox role in a Virginia Valli picture.

Dorothy Revier

Dorothy Revier

DOROTHY REVIER is one of those rare beings, a native Californian. She was born in San Francisco of an English father and Italian mother. With many artistic relatives in her family, it was not surprising that Dorothy should become interested in dancing. She studied under the best masters in the West, and is equally graceful in the Italian and Russian ballets, aesthetic, ballroom, and eccentric dancing. After graduating from high school, she became a professional dancer touring the Pacific Coast in prologues, where she was discovered by a First National producer, who signed her for her first role. She is under contract to the Columbia Studios, but is constantly in demand by other studios to whom she is "loaned out." Among her recent productions are Scarehead, The Red Dancer, The Drop Kick, The Iron Mask, Submarine, and, very lately, Burlesque. Dorothy Revier is one of the best cooks in Hollywood.

John Mack Brown

Johnny Mack Brown

JOHNNY is one of the few noted athletes in the country to make an established name for himself on the screen irrespective of athletic honors. A sensational football player from the University of Alabama, he came to Hollywood with his team to play against Stanford on New Year's Day, 1926. Without professional stage experience, he was offered a chance to play bits and small parts in M-G-M. pictures. In The Bugle Call, he made his first appearance as a full-fledged actor, and was immediately chosen as Marion Davies' leading man in The Fair Co-ed. Among his most recent productions are Our Dancing Daughters, The Divine Woman, A Woman of Affairs, Lady of Chance, and Coquette, opposite Mary Pickford. He is six feet tall, weighs one hundred and sixty-five pounds, has black hair and brown eyes, and was born in Dothan, Alabama, September 1. 1905.

Mary Duncan

Mary Duncan

LUTTRELL, VIRGINIA, had the honor of becoming the birthplace of Mary Duncan one August 13, less than twenty-five years ago. She was educated in the public schools of her native town, the high school in Richmond, and later at a Virginia finishing school. She matriculated at Cornell University, taking a course in arts and sciences. There she became so intrigued with college dramatics that she abandoned her books and went to New York City to seek a theatrical career. She pawned a luxurious fur coat when her parents objected to her plans, and enrolled with the famous Yvette Guilbert for instruction. During the two years she was with Guilbert, Mary also studied music. Roles in Toto, The Egotist, The Great Lover, The Purple Mask, and New Toys followed. She played in a London presentation of The Nervous Wreck, before returning to America to play in The Shanghai Gesture.

START TONIGHT AND REDUCE WEIGHT!

Reduce 2 to 4 Pounds Tonight at Home and Feel Better Tomorrow Morning than You Have for Months

(Every Statement Certified From Actual Experience)

Send the Coupon for your first three Fayro Baths

Thousands of smart women have found this easy way to take off 2 to 4 pounds once or twice a week. These women take refreshing Fayro Baths in the privacy of their own homes.

Fayro is the concentrate of the same natural mineral salts that make effective the waters of twenty-two hot springs of America, England and Continental Europe. For years the spas and hot springs bathing resorts have been the retreat of fair women and well-groomed men.

Excess weight has been removed, skins have been made more lovely, bodies more shapely and minds brighter.

The Hot Springs are now Brought to You

A study of the analyses of the active ingredients of the waters from twenty-two of the most famous springs have taught us the secret of their effectiveness. You can now have all these benefits in your own bath. Merely put Fayro into your hot bath. It dissolves rapidly. You will notice and enjoy the pungent fragrance of its balsam, oils and clean salts.

Then, Fayro, by opening your pores and stimulating perspiration forces lazy body cells to sweat out surplus fat and bodily poisons. Add Fayro to your bath at night and immediately you will lose from 2 to 4 pounds in an easy, refreshing and absolutely harmless manner.

Your physician will tell you that Fayro is certain to do the work and that it is absolutely harmless.

Fayro will refresh you and help your body throw off worn out fat and bodily poisons. Your skin will be clearer and smoother. You will sleep better after your Fayro bath and awaken feeling as though you had enjoyed a week's vacation.

Lose Weight Where You Most Want to

Fayro reduces weight generally but you can also concentrate its effects on abdomen, hip, legs, ankles, chin or any part of the body you may wish.

Results Are Immediate

Weigh yourself before and after your Fayro bath. You will find you have lost from 2 to 4 pounds. And a few nights later when you again add Fayro to your bath, you will once more reduce your weight. Soon you will be the correct weight for your height. No need to deny yourself food you really want. No need for violent exercise. No need for drugs or medicines. Merely a refreshing Fayro bath in the privacy of your own home.

Try Fayro at Our Risk

The regular price of Fayro is $1.00 a package. With the coupon you get 3 full-size packages and an interesting booklet "Health and Open Pores" for $2.50 plus the necessary postage. Send no money. Pay the postman. Your money refunded instantly if you want it.

HERE'S PROOF

Read what Fayro Baths have done for others

"Three Fayro baths reduced my weight 11 pounds in 8 days. I feel better than I have felt for years."

"I weigh 16 pounds less and feel younger and sleep better. Fayro is wonderful."

"My double chin vanished in the magic of Fayro baths."

"My hips were always too prominent until I commenced Fayro baths. I have lost 12 pounds."

"Thank you for Fayro. I lost 14 pounds in three weeks; feel better and certainly look better."

"Since childhood my thick ankles have always been a source of embarrassment. Fayro baths have reduced them beautifully. Thank you very much.

The Face

The Blade

The Wonder Worker

365 Shaves
With the Same Blade!
—and Still Going Strong

THINK of it! 365 keen, cool shaves a year — and not one penny for blades during the whole time! That's what an amazing new shaving invention did for J. W. Starksbury of Oklahoma! And W. D. Carroll of Pennsylvania got two solid years of slick shaves out of an old blade that was just about worn out to begin with! No wonder experts everywhere are simply astonished!

KRISS-KROSS—the remarkable invention that makes such long-distance shave records possible—deserves to be called much more than a stropper. Rather it is a super-stropper or blade rejuvenator. Almost literally, it makes a new blade out of an old one every day—makes hundreds of keen, quick shaves blossom where only one grew before. Until you've seen KRISS-KROSS—fitted its sturdy, nickeled smoothness into the palm of your hand and tested its uncanny ingenuity, you'll never know how really sensational this announcement is!

MAGIC DIAGONAL STROKE

KRISS-KROSS employs the diagonal stroke, same as a barber uses. Never before has anyone captured the secrets of successfully reproducing this stroke automatically. Eight "lucky leather grooves" do the trick in 11 seconds with a precision it takes a master barber years to attain.

But that's not all. KRISS-KROSS embodies still another feature that has hitherto baffled mechanical reproduction. It strops from heavy to light. It's absolutely uncanny the way the strokes grow lighter and lighter until an adjustable, automatic jig flies up and notifies you that your blade is ready—ready with the keenest cutting edge that steel can take!

NO MORE BLADES TO BUY!

No wonder that this super-stropper prolongs the life of any make blade—single or double edge—for weeks, months and years! Think what it means! No more bother about remembering to buy new blades! No more "raking" with dull ones! Eleven seconds with KRISS-KROSS and your blade has the slickest, keenest edge that ever said "Good Morning" to your chin. It solves your blade problem for all time. Keen, velvet-smooth shaves forever. And think of the economy!

SENSATIONAL OFFER

And now, for my surprising offer! To introduce KRISS-KROSS I am giving with it Free a new kind of razor. Instantly adjustable to any shaving position. A flip of the finger makes it T-shape, straight or diagonal (new way). Gives a sliding instead of pulling stroke. Reduces beard resistance 45% and simply sips right through the toughest crop of whiskers. Entirely unlike anything you ever saw before. This remarkable razor comes free with 5 special-process blades which, renewed with KRISS-KROSS stropper, should last you from five years to a lifetime, without any exaggeration!

GET FREE OFFER!

Send for full information on these surprising new inventions today. KRISS-KROSS products are never sold in stores. You deal direct with me or my authorized representative. YOU'LL NEVER KNOW LIFE Until You've Read the Greatest of All Forbidden Books!

YOU'LL never know the tremendous force of human passion—you'll never understand life in the raw, stripped of artificial conventions and hypocrisies, until you've feasted on the most thrilling Tales from that greatest of all true-to-life books—the immortal Decameron.

Here in the frankest, most revealing tales of love and intrigue ever written are situations so startling, so true to life, that we feel they might be happening today instead of centuries ago. Written in an age of plain speaking, they show us how real flesh and blood men and women act—the deep secret motives that influence our actions today no less than they did centuries ago.

And now for a short time only you can inspect these great examples of realistic writing—the stories which you have always longed to read—in your own home for five days, without obligation! Read all about this amazing offer, then send for your copy at once.

For centuries the Decameron has thrilled millions—has inspired countless great authors—has been lauded by the most discriminating critics. Rich in fascinating plots, vibrant with all the passions of the race, it has furnished forth plots for the world's great masters of literature—Shakespeare, Chaucer, Keats, Tennyson, Dryden and Longfellow. A large volume would be required to list the writers who have copied or adapted some of the plots. Hardly a great novel, or a poor one, exists, in which the plot is not in part or in whole taken from the Decameron. No one can know literature, can call himself truly sophisticated, truly a master of life in all its infinite variety, until he has drunk from the bottomless loving cup of that genial old Italian, Giovanni Boccaccio.

These Great Writers Have Taken Plots From the Decameron

Shakespeare took parts of The Merchant of Venice, Cymbeline, All's Well That Ends Well and Romeo and Juliet from these stories. Lessing took the plot of Nathan der Weise, Chaucer the idea of his Canterbury Tales, Dryden, Keats, Longfellow and Tennyson wrote poems—all based on these great tales, which have outlived thousands of manuscripts written since their day.

Between the covers of these Tales from the Decameron you will find life itself—real, pulsating passionate life that refuses to be confined by paralyzing restrictions—life that refuses to follow the dictates of prudery. Far from being immoral, as many narrow minded people used to think, these Tales from the Decameron are in reality almost a text book for the earnest student of that greatest of all studies—human nature.

Boccaccio's stories have already lived five times as long as our United States—over twenty-four generations. They were the "best sellers" when gunpowder was scarcely known—and yet today they still delight us, still give us pleasure and instruction, with their immortal vitality, forever young, forever gay, forever thrilling. If you like to read a story of adventure, read one of these. If you want a charming love story, read another. If you look for tragedy, read a third. The fourth will make you weep.

The morals and customs of Italy of the fourteenth century are all laid before you—the way people lived, the hovels and palaces they dwelt in, their methods of travel—all are told with a wit and pathos that never crept between the covers of any book penned by a historian. Thus the stories not only amuse and entertain, which after all is the first requirement of good fiction, but they give us the history of the manners and customs and morals of a long passed age. They constitute a landmark of literature, which must not be passed over, if you would broaden your vision—make yourself truly cultured.

SCREEN SECRETS

In which the Editor discusses talkie developments—and other things

THE Fox Follies of 1929, in which a typically Ziegfeld revue is transplanted to the sound screen, will be remembered as a milestone in the mechanical progress of the movies, almost as important as the advent of the first talking picture.

Here for the first time the enlarged screen, filling the stage from side to side of the proscenium arch, is made use of. This enlarged screen, with the new double-sized film necessary for projection upon it, gives the effect of depth and is a long step toward three-dimensional pictures. With the natural multi-color sequences, a new process which William Fox is bringing out for the first time, as well as the talking accompaniment and musical score, it gives the most perfect illusion of an actual stage production that has been attained so far.

Captain Roscoe Fawcett, Editor

It would seem almost unbelievable, were it not for the other amazing developments in pictures which have taken place during the year, that the enlarged screen, which Douglas Fairbanks advocated only a few months ago as one of the greatest possibilities of the future, is actually here.

And how will the producers of musical comedies and even stage plays with their sky-high prices be able to meet this popular-priced competition on their home grounds? It looks as though some philanthropic person ought to establish a home for poverty-stricken scalpers.

Representing the Family

ALL the eyes—and ears—of Hollywood are upon John Barrymore as he starts work in his first talkie for Warner Brothers, known for the time being, at least, as General Crack. It is a rollicking, swashbuckling tale of swords and periwigs in which Barrymore plays the part of a dashing, beloved rogue. In Barrymore's voice, Warner Brothers should have a box office asset as great as Al Jolson's personality. All of the Barrymores are gifted with voices as pleasing to the ear—as expressive—as musical instruments. But since Lionel has relinquished the actor's field to become a director, and Ethel has not yet yielded to the lure of the talkies, it remains for John to uphold the honor of the family on the speaking screen. With an able supporting cast, headed by Marian Nixon, who plays his leading lady, everything seems to be set for a fine production. Barrymore will need a good picture, incidentally, following Eternal Love, his next release, in which he is called upon to play an unsympathetic role which will do little to build him up with his public.

Deserved Success

THE sensation of the month and the great white hope of all actors of the silent screen is the little girl from Montreal who is known to a small social group in Hollywood as Mrs. Irving Thalberg, and to the world at large as Norma Shearer. The Trial of Mary Dugan was the vindication of Norma Shearer. For months during which she played ordinary roles with distinction, but not with greatness, because it simply wasn't in the script, she suffered from the usual Hollywood whisperings of favoritism, first because she was the fiancee and later the wife of Thalberg, who is a high mogul at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. It must have been a tremendous triumph for Norma when she received from her friends and co-workers spontaneous acclaim on the sheer merit of her ability as an actress which has at one stroke placed her among the forefront of the figures in a new and difficult field.

Speaking of Pantomime

THE talkies have brought a sad day for the pantomimic artists. This I learned from Ford Sterling, one of the outstanding comedians of the screen since the days of the Keystone Cops. Nowadays, the directors, intent on mastering the new art, have their minds on the playback room, where the dialogue of the scene which they have just taken is played back to them. Naturally when any time is taken out for pantomimic business, there is a silent place on the playback record and the director wants it eliminated. It is only natural therefore that great pantomimic artists like Charlie Chaplin should protest against the coming of the talkies. However, Sterling believes that within a few months, when the talkies have become more familiar ground, pantomime will come into its own again and will find its place in talking pictures along with the dialogue, since pictures must necessarily appeal to the eye as well as to the ear.

This Matter of Voices

A GREAT deal of hooey has been spread abroad about this mysterious business of voice quality and the difficulty of registering voices on the microphone. As a matter of fact casting directors tell me that almost any normal, pleasant-speaking voice is perfectly suited to the talkies. There are many cases to illustrate this. Raymond Griffith left the stage because of an accident to his voice which reduced it to a whisper, yet it registers perfectly in the talkies. Douglas Fairbanks held back from the talkies because he was fearful of his voice. But now the fact that he is to make a talkie with Mary Pickford is evidence enough that it registers well. The voice, however, has a personality of its own, just as the camera brings out a separate personality, so that naturally people with expressive voices will now get a better break than those who can only rely on pantomimic ability or photographic beauty, to put them over.

My Life Among

BETTY COMPSON, as the tragi-comedy queen of Warner Brothers' all-color On With the Show, is expected to make even the most ardent New York stage show first-nighter sit up and take notice.

the Stars

Betty Compson gives to SCREEN SECRETS readers her history—a story which pulses with love, life, disappointment, success. It is the Life of a Woman —real, alive, intimate, throbbing with truth.

As told to Ruth Biery

By Betty Compson

BETTY COMPSON sat on a low stool before the blazing fire of the long, colorful sitting room. With chin cupped in right hand, she pondered pensively for fully ten minutes after I had asked for her life story.

"I had thought never to tell it!" she remarked finally. Were those tears which glittered in the deep blue of her eyes—the eyes which I knew had turned innumerable masculine heads during her twelve years in this city?

"It is the story of a child trained to think of her own beauty; of a girl forced to support herself with that training; of a woman"—she paused for another long moment, then spoke hurriedly, very hurriedly—"of a woman who went to the heights and then dropped to the depths through her own indifference. Of a woman who said she would marry a big director someday—and who did as she said.

"Well," she rose, paced the floor with quick, determined movements, "I will tell it but I will not camouflage it. I am just one more woman. I have done wrong at times; I have done right at others. Good or bad—I will tell it. I have no regrets whatsoever. The joys and the sorrows, the good and the bad—the Hell and the Heaven; not one regret for any of them. I will tell them all just as they happened. You may call it 'The Life of Woman!'"

THIS is the story she told me:

I believe a life story should go back to your mother; your grandmother. There are things about them which must influence the children. If not through inheritance, then through the telling and retelling. My grandmother was a Norwegian woman. She was not a convert to the Mormon faith but she wanted to get away from her home conditions, so she ran away to Utah with a group of Mormons, and married one of them. When she was 31 she divorced him, went down to Fort Douglas, saw an officer who appealed to her, even though he was 10 years younger and literally grabbed him off and was married. She started the habit in my family of going after the man you want and tying him to you.

My mother was standing at a window of her home in the scrawly, indifferent, mining town of Frisco, Utah, one day when she was 18. She saw a man ride by on horseback. She turned to the woman with whom she was living and said, "That is the man I am going to marry."

It took her six years to do it! It was two whole years before he would even look at her. She was just one of the everyday, mining girls of the place. He was a big shot with a good position, a graduate of Cornell university and 18 years her senior! But she had heard her mother say a woman could get any man and illustrate it with her own story. So she trained herself for him and waited. When she was 24 they were married.

He was her god. As she had wrapped her whole life around getting him, so now she wrapped her life around holding him. Her one ambition was to have a son who would look like him, talk like him, be like him. He drove her over to Beaver, a little town nearby, to have the lovely brown-eyed, dark-haired boy of whom she was so certain. In a tumble-down two-room shack, a blue-eyed, fair-haired girl came to her. Undoubtedly, I was my mother's one great disappointment.

I HAVE found in this life, however, one disappointment usually follows another. I was scarcely born before the gold rush came to Alaska and father left to "make a lot of money." She was heart-broken! Alone in that tiny town for one and a half years without mail or money, with a baby which couldn't even remind her of him. Perhaps it was my mother's condition, the depth of her loneliness and sorrow, which made me so keenly perceptive even as a baby, although I believe all babies are taken too much for granted, not treated enough like humans. It seems to me as though I were always grown up. I can remember distinctly my own weaning. I don't expect people to believe this, but when I was 10 years old I told my mother about it and since she had never told me, she had to believe it.

I was a year and a half old when my mother brought my milk to me in a cup. I went into a tantrum. She took a black glove with a feather in it and put it over her breast and told me someone had run away with the other. To this day, I am afraid of a feather. I can't bear to wear them in pictures. They are like a nightmare to me. Do you know, I don't suppose I have ever really suffered more than at my weaning? The only way she could stop my crying was by giving me a purse with three silver dollars. They were so bright and made such a pretty clangle that I forgot the black feather and the cup. And I believe my love of silver dollars began right then. I have always wanted to be a rich woman. Well—(she laughed a little)—I have my director and my Rolls Royces.

FATHER did come back with quite a lot of money, only to leave again to make some more to go with it. But he sent us to California. And in Santa Monica, where we stayed with some spinsterly school teachers, I had my first love affair—at three years of age.

Of course, I knew I was a beautiful baby. My mother, when her first sorrow at my not being a boy had relaxed a little, took great pride in my appearance. My nails were always in perfect order, my hair, my skin. I never went out without a sunbonnet; I was never allowed to play in the mud or do anything which would get me dirty or injure my physical appearance.

Do you know, I think children should be flattered. It gives them a poise and self-confidence, takes away that baffling self consciousness. When I entered a room, I knew I looked pretty; knew people would say nice things about me, so I was never worried or awkward.

Keep yourself beautiful! Betty's mother always told her. It is plain that Betty is an obedient daughter.

When Mr. Press took an interest in me and played on the beach and treated me like I was a real grown-up lady, they were attentions which I took for granted. I have always taken men's interest for granted. Doesn't every woman, for that matter? It was just like a grown-up affair. The school ladies were strict and didn't approve of it. Even mother became afraid that he might kidnap me or something. She told me he couldn't come and see me any more! I was heartbroken. It was my first big heart tragedy and was as serious to me then as the others were later. And on top of that, father returned and took us back to Frisco, just when mother and I had learned to adore California. I made up my mind then that some day I would live in California.

Wistful Betty Compson, at fifteen, played in the orchestra of a Salt Lake City theatre for $15 a week.

DO YOU know, my life as I remember it, sort of seems to go by love affairs from the very beginning. My next one was in the Black Hills of South Dakota. His name was Mr. Anderson. He taught me to fish and catch my own bait and to whistle. And to me, that was real devotion. But he killed my interest when he deceived me. No man can deceive a woman, whether she is four and a half or twenty-four, and get away with it.

It was Christmas. Mother, the day before, took me to Deadwood, 16 miles from the mining camp where we were staying. She drove a horse named "Cricket." I shall never forget it. The snow, the ice, the jangling sleighbells, three deer scampering for cover on a hillside.

Here is a scene from one of Betty's first cinema efforts in Hollywood, a one-reel Christie comedy.

I was so thrilled that I could hardly wait to get home and tell Mr. Anderson about it. We came into the long room, crowded with people, a little late in the evening. There was a new victrola and I had never heard a victrola. The great tree glimmered and twinkled its merry welcome. I was so excited. It was Christmas eve and Santa Claus was coming! But Mr. Anderson was missing.

I looked everywhere for him, for Christmas eve meant nothing to me without him present. Love is like that, you know. You cannot be happy unless the one you love is there to be happy with you. I just sat down quietly in a corner. There was a long, long hallway and I kept watching the door. Suddenly, there was a jangling of bells and much joyous racket—and there stood Santa Claus at the end of the hallway entrance. But as he came down that hall I knew it wasn't really Santa Claus. It was Mr. Anderson! I knew his walk, oh, everything about him. Didn't I love him? Now, I had sense enough to know that Santa Claus couldn't come every place on that one evening and if he'd only told me he was going to play Kris Kringle, it wouldn't have made any difference, but to try and fool me! I was disappointed. My dreams crumbled to earth like a movie-set house on the crag of a hill when an earthquake is shaking. Funny, but I don't remember my father at all that Christmas.

This same winter when I learned there was no Santa Clause I came to understand about babies. A woman at the camp was going to have one.

"Mother," I said one day, "I know Mrs. La Vance is going to have a baby."

"Yes," mother answered quietly, without any fuss or concern about it. And she told me about it. From that day, sex had no terrors for me. I knew all about it. You are not afraid of the things in this world of which you have a complete knowledge.

From South Dakota we went to Eureka, Utah, where I had my first experience with schools and other children. The latter petrified me. In fact, I was horror-stricken. In the first place, they were dirty. They even went barefooted! And they ran around like little animals, like the animals I had known in the hills of Dakota. They were imbeciles who didn't know anything. Why, they wouldn't even listen to their teacher when she was telling things of real interest. I hated them. To this day I don't like children.

It was here that I became really acquainted with my father. He seemed to sympathize with me, to understand about the other children. He taught me how to run the sewing machine. I was so tiny I had to stand to do it, but he helped even when mother was afraid that I would run a needle through my finger. Then—well, he, too, broke confidence with me. I was to lose my first tooth! I hated the thought of that because it would spoil my appearance. And I didn't want to be hurt. I have always hated the thought of being hurt. Father brought out the string.

"It won't hurt, baby!"

"Do you promise it won't hurt, daddy?"

"Yes, I promise."

But it did hurt. For years after that I couldn't like father. Thereafter, I pulled them myself so there wouldn't be any misunderstandings. And I didn't lie to myself. I knew they would hurt when I started to pull them.

Jim Cruze is not "Mr. Betty Compson" by a long shot. Jim and Betty are quite independent of each other.

I didn't finish the school year. We returned to Frisco. Here, I liked the children better—but the place, ugh, how I hated it. My hair had been curly, but the wind and the alkali dust took all the curl out of it. That was awful. Mother put it into braids. They were nice thick braids, which compensated a little.

The first thing I did at the new school was to tell them they should Meet Mrs. John Gilbert!

Mr. and Mrs. John Gilbert after elopement ceremony following dash from Los Angeles aboard Union Pacific Matrimony Special to Las Vegas, Nevada.

Ina Claire and Jack Gilbert surprised everyone with their marriage in Las Vegas town, with cowboys to cheer them.

HOLLYWOOD still is trying to get over the surprise of John Gilbert's marriage to Ina Claire, Broadway's musical comedy star. But Ol' Man Cupid, who has chuckled many a time at those "never again" vows, has the last laugh as usual.

John determined never to go to the altar again, after his first youthful marriage ended disastrously. That was before he saw Leatrice Joy, the sparkling-eyed girl with a New Orleans drawl. When Miss Joy parted from him for the last time, John took the vow again. But that was before he met Ina Claire!

You don't see much of John and his bride these days, for they are both busy working for the movie producers, who have so little time or sympathy for honeymoons. But glimpses of them show how gloriously happy they both are.

John and Ina Claire planned it all very quietly. If they were married in California, they would have to wait three days to obtain a license. So they took a special car to Las Vegas, and with a few intimate friends the couple stood up before a justice of the peace for the ceremony. Both gave their ages as 32.

Miss Claire is one of Broadway's darlings, famed star of Grounds for Divorce, and a long list of successes. "The Street" calls her lucky, for she has never appeared in an unsuccessful play. Truth is, Miss Claire has one failure no one knows about—Gaoler's Wench. She tried it out on a Brooklyn audience, and after the curtain came down, firmly told the producer to pack the play in some dark attic where no one would ever see it again. She was married once before, to James Whittaker, New York dramatic critic. In Mr. Whittaker's column one day appeared a brief line of review on his wife's current stage attraction, in which he complained that his wife had listed her occupation as "actress," when she married him and unkindly intimated that he had been deceived.

John Gilbert, of course, is known wherever the flickers flash for his Big Parade, The Merry Widow, and a host of other hits. He is the highest salaried male star on the

TRUE TO TYPE

Jacqueline Logan inherits her beautiful but fighting backbone from General Logan of Civil War Fame, and it stands her in good stead for the equally difficult battles of Hollywood.

By DOROTHY SPENSLEY

HERE'S a great-grandniece of General John Alexander Logan, the battling John of Civil War days, holding her own in the Hollywood sector. A great-grandniece of the self-same John who carried his fighting instincts right into the House of Representatives after the cannon had ceased and the carpet-bagger racket had begun in those glowing days of '65. Step right up, folks, and get your little history lesson. Painless, pleasant, practical.

Here's Jacqueline Logan admitting that there are as many battles to be fought in pictures as there were in the Civil War. Take it from her. She knows all those stories that have been handed down about great-granduncle John. Here's Jackie pointing out, fearlessly, each place in her career where she had to stop and reconnoiter, to rally her forces and to plunge valiantly on. Oh, the merry, merry moil that is the picture business.

A beautiful red-head, this Jackie. Blue-eyed, slim-limbed, who has birthday dinners given for her at the Biltmore. Lives at home with mother, if you please, and has a cat named Thomas. A yard-long Persian who stalks through the apartment like a very king of catdom. A Persian whose mistress has a sense of humor, a sweet crimson mouth, long lashes, and determination.

IS IT the turbulent blood of great-granduncle John coursing through her veins that makes her stand the gaff? The old Logan fighting spirit of come-what-will-we're-ready-for-it?

"I sometimes wonder," smiled Jackie, fingering a cigarette. "I wonder whether it's that or just the Irish in me."

Ten-to-one it's the spirit of that grand old fighter, the Hero of the Fifteenth Corps.

The first fatal error in this campaign against the cinema citadel, according to Jackie, was when she was given a lead.

"I had done only a very little picture work in a Johnny Hines picture in New York during the day-

Louise Brooks, Paramount player, is trying to decide whether Fido was ever born, or, like Topsy, "jes' growed."

TALKING pictures have changed everything in Hollywood, even its vocabulary. Listen in on a conversation overheard at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, between two sound stage technicians: Here goes, so figure it out for yourself if you can.

"What do you think of Mary Doakes' voice?"

"She bloops."

"Yeah, I always thought she was kinder rheostat."

"Have you heard McGreavy?"

"Yeah, he sings way down in the mud."

"Bill, you'd oughta have been with us today. When they gave us the interlock on that rain thing we got off to a false start because we got the hand too soon, so we had to retake. Next the motors raced, there was buckling in the bungalow, and after a lot of grief we finally shot the feller."

"You ain't heard nothing yet. We were shooting by remote control down on the back lot, and some one thought our three-phase motor leads were power lines and hooked lights on them. Can you tie that? After 1,000 feet of racing, we found the load on the line."

"Yeah, that was funny, but you oughta heard 'em howl over that playback. Some one musta thought it was a hammer and used it for driving nails or something because it certainly ruined the diaphragm. It made the artist sound like he had a mouth full of cotton."

"Maybe he did."

"No, we argued 'em into taking it over again because the mixer said it sounded like a million dollars through the p. e. cs. We had swell music all morning but we lost half an hour building a twenty t. u. pad to stick in the trunk because they couldn't mix it."

Lay members on the studio force are searching for sound language glossaries to figure it out.

His Crowning Glory

WHEN you see Bill Boyd in The Leatherneck, you may note an effective, if somewhat painful bit of business that wasn't written into the script.

During one of the rough-and-tumble fights, a three-inch shell weighing about 60 pounds, was jarred off the mantlepiece, striking Bill squarely on top of the head.

He managed to keep on with the scene, thus saving the painful experience from being totally without benefit, but passed out completely as soon as he got out of range of the camera. For some time afterwards he wore six stitches in his head as a memento of the incident.

He will start work soon in an aviation picture entitled The Flyin' Fool.

Oh What a Legacy!

ALICE WHITE is famed for her pretty, shapely legs. Some boy, a little too fresh even for Hollywood, accosted her one day with the remark, "Where are those pretty legs taking you, girlie?"

"They're taking me home and no heels a-dragging either."

A Grave Situation

DOLORES DEL RIO is occupying her spare time since her return from Louisiana where she has been making the last sequences of Evangeline on location, designing the first permanent monument for the grave of Longfellow's heroine.

When the company arrived at St, Martinsville, the sleepy little town not far from New Orleans, where, if you remember your Evangeline, you will recall that the Acadians settled after their exile, they found the burial place of Evangeline unmarked by any stone or tablet, with only a slitary cypress to denote her resting place. They immediately started a fund to provide a permanent monument for Evangeline and the citizens of St. Martinsville assigned Dolores the task of designing the monument.

Dolores studied to be an artist before going into pictures. She designed all the tiling and decorations of her Hollywood home. She is an authority on old masters.

Or Canned Baloney

WHILE all of Hollywood is worrying about a nice new expressive name for talkies, an Iowa hick walks into Hollywood and nonchalantly suggests:

"Why don't ye call it canned tongue?"

Free Air

THE problem of interference with the making of sound pictures by airplanes flying too low overhead has been solved at last. The Producers' Association has come to an agreement with California aviators whereby the latter will not fly lower than 2,500 feet over sound stages, provided that the producers will fly large colored balloons over the stages where picture production is in progress.

Bawth a la Hollywood

THE newly-arrived stage actresses of New York are giving the Hollywood natives a run for the invention of new fads and fancies.

Charlie Chaplin, recovered from his illness, proves it by this snappy game of leap frog with Count D'Arrast, Hollywood director, at Coronado Beach.

Ina Claire, the dainty star of many frothy comedies of the New York stage, and now the new Mrs. John Gilbert, has become a sun bath addict. She searched all of Hollywood and Beverly Hills until she found a house with a glassed-in sun porch with all the transparency of a gold-fish globe, but more privacy. And now she is giving sun bath parties to her Hollywood friends. Among her guests are Ruth Chatterton, Jeanne Eagels and other friends of her New York stage days.

Between sun baths she is rehearsing for her first talkie production, to be an original play by Arthur Richman, author of The Awful Truth and other brilliant comedies, in which Miss Claire starred on the stage. Mickey Neilan has been selected to do the directing.

Leila Hyams decided to celebrate Fourth of July with Roman candles, sky-rockets, n' everything. We'll join her army!

Why Are You Blue?

LOUISE FAZENDA was putting on the new make-up for a technicolor picture, another development that has complicated the lives of actors in the last few months.

Instead of the weird pallor and green and purple shadows required for black and white films, actors for technicolor pictures use ordinary stage makeup, slightly accentuated, because the incandescents soak up so much of the color.

"Then you don't use shadows under your eyes any more," some one asked her.

"No," she replied, "only the natural ones from working 18 hours a day."

Ancient Annie Oakley

FORTY-FOUR years ago, Henry De Mille, the New York playwright of a half-century ago and father of Cecil and William, lost a gold-headed umbrella in a small-town theatre in New York State.

He advertised and the finder returned it. Mr. De Mille sent the honest man a letter which said that if he would present the letter at any house where a De Mille play was showing, he would be given a free seat.

Two months ago, the letter was presented at a showing of King of Kings. The theatre manager honored it and then sent Cecil De Mille the letter.

Time to Retire

F. W. MURNAU, the six-foot German director, is tired with the long strain of making one screen epic after another and is going to take a rest. At last reports, he was ambling off toward the South Seas in his yacht.

At the time of his departure, George O'Brien, who is one of his close friends, was working on location in Northern California. Murnau called him up on long distance.

So This is Hollywood

Lupe Velez and Gary Cooper have been on the matrimonial brink for so long that their public is becoming impatient to hear wedding bells.

"Hello, George, I am leaving for the South Seas in a couple of days," he said as nonchalantly as though he were going up into the mountains for a week-end. "Pack a shirt and come along."

George said he was sorry, but he thought Mr. Fox had other plans for him.

"Well then drop over and see me at my home some time, will you?" invited Murnau, casually.

His home is in Germany. He will take a long rest from picture making, but will probably come back some time, as he is very fond of America, and has expressed a wish that he might become an American citizen.

What's in a Name?

MALCOLM ST. CLAIR was describing the picture, 49th Street, which he wrote and is directing for R-K-O, to his old pal, George O'Hara. He was painting it with broad strokes—a stupendous production.

"Well, Mal," interrupted George finally. "Why don't you change the name to 110th Street, and make it a bigger and better production?"

Mal hesitated but a second, then came back, "Or, of course, I might call it 125th Street, and make another one of these all-colored pictures!"

A Speech in Time

THE rush for the stage is on in the local theatres. These movie girls want to prove that they have voices and personalities which will compete with any New York player's. Really, it is amazing the salaries that our stars will take for just one stock production.

Sally O'Neill went out on vaudeville and sure enough, Pathé immediately signed for her three pictures. A real comeback for Sally.

Lois Wilson secured herself much movie work by playing leading lady for Edward Everett Horton.

Ruth Taylor, the little blonde, whom gentlemen preferred in the pictures, has opened in Little Orchid Annie. Probably Paramount will re-sign her when it sees her.

Leatrice Joy is out making vaudeville appearances and has been signed for several productions during her absence. The Eastern cities made a great fuss over her.

Tom Moore is being starred in a legitimate play called This Thing Called Love, and is playing in Mal St. Clair's 49th Street between performances.

Any way to keep up with the invading New Yorkers!

Stage Fright

CARMELITA GERAGHTY is the only screen person playing in Paris Bound!

Anne Harding, Frederick Marsh, Herbert Clark, Charlotte, Walker, Julietta Crosby—oh, Pathé has lined up a list of Broadway notables which is rather breath-taking.

Carmelita admits it. She says she actually shakes every time she enters the set, so appalled is she by the newcomers.

More Money

COLLEEN MOORE was describing a yacht that she and John McCormick frequently charter. "It's cheap, too," she explained, enthusiastically. "Only a thousand a week, including everything."

Which may have been cheap to Colleen but—well, we don't all make more than ten thousand for the seven-day period.

Gallant

IVAN LEBEDOFF, the handsome Russian character actor, walked into the Fox luncheon room.

"My, isn't he grand?" one fan writer exclaimed, in a stage whisper.

"Yes. But I don't believe I have any perfume on my hand!" answered another chatter pen-pusher.

Moran and Mack, the Two Black Crows, are using Moran's gloved finger as crow bait. But his raised right hand suggests a necessary caw-tion, if the bird should bite.

So This is Hollywood

Mr. Lebendoff rose, walked to the table, kissed the hand of first one lady and then another. "As if perfumed hands really matter!" he complimented.

Rubbing It In

A WELL-KNOWN stage star desired to have the same masseuse employed by Alice White and wanted her at the same hour that Alice has her daily.

"If you'll let me have her I'll teach you about the stage," she generously offered.

"If you'll leave her alone and let me keep her, I'll teach you about the movies," was Alice's soft answer.

Lupe Gets Chummy

MORDUANT HALL is the most dignified of all New York's critics. He writes the pedogogical reviews for The Times and not even his closest friends have been heard to call him 'Mordaunt.

Lupe Velez met him at a tea. "I can't remember your name, so I'll just call you Cutie," she exclaimed, with a pat on the cheek to make him understand it was all friendly.

And not a soul dared to even kid him about it.

Senorita Cyclone Emotes

LOUD sobbing at the premiere of Coquette in New York City disturbed two flappers in the audience. They called an usher.

"We've stood that girl's hysterics as long as we can. Please have her put out," they ordered.

The usher hurried to obey. When he addressed the offender, Lupe Velez looked up, and stammered between her sobbing, "I can't help eet. Eet ees my Miss Mary, Meester Usher!"

The flappers made a personal apology.

Red Light

LILLIAN LEIGHTON, stage and screen character actress, purchased a new car and was driving down Hollywood boulevard for the first time, alone, in it. She went against a traffic signal.

"Hey, what do you think you're doing?" a policeman stopped her. "Get back there. Can't you see the signal?"

Lillian paled, then stammered, "Please, Mr. Policeman, won't you let me drive around this block and come back? I'll promise to come right around to this spot and stop as long as you want."

"What's the matter, can't you back?" the officer demanded.

"No!" Lillian answered meekly. "I've had only one lesson."

Winifred Westover, formerly Mrs. William S. Hart, is returning to the screen in the title role of Lummox.

Irish Ayes

BARRY NORTON, ploughing through his fan mail at the Fox Studio, opened a letter that made his well-known smile broaden a bit. It was an invitation to become a member of the Irrepressible Sons of Free Ireland. The writer said: "We make the suggestion because, while you may have been born in the United States, we feel certain from your name that the blood of the old land flows in your veins."

This would have fired Norton with much enthusiasm, but for the fact that the blood of old Buenos Aires, Argentina, flows in his veins and that his real name is Alfredo de Biarben, Jr.

Sponsored by the Navy

CHARLES BICKFORD, the stage actor who plays the leading role in Dynamite, has led an adventurous life.

During Roosevelt's regime, he traveled around the world with the U. S. fleet, working as a stoker. He later became a stock actor working all over the country. Every year he would go to New York and visit the casting offices, but for years he refused to work there because he could find no part to his liking.

The first part he found that suited him was that of Oklahoma Red, in Jim Tully's play, Outside Looking In, the role played by Wallace Beery in the screen version known as Beggars of Life. Ever since, Bickford has been constantly in demand on the New York stage as a character man.

Dorothy Sebastian props herself up on a dimpled elbow and looks altogether too seductive to make us believe she's had a hard day at the studio.

Rah! Rah! Rah!

HAS Paramount gone high brow? They have taken the pains to list all their college players. We quote from their listing:

Richard Dix, Minnesota, specialized in liberal arts and football.
Adolphe Menjou, a graduate engineer. Cornell is his alma mater.
George Bancroft, the Naval Academy.
Charles Rogers, journalism, University of Kansas.
Richard Arlen, University of Pennsylvania.
William Austin, graduate of reading college, England.
Clive Brook, Dulwich College, England.
Lane Chandler, business administration, Montana Wesleyan.
Gary Cooper, art course, at Grinnell, Iowa.
Jack Luden, medicine, at Johns Hopkins.
Frederick March, graduated, University of Wisconsin with a B. S. degree.

It is interesting to note that no women players are listed!

Place For Old Razor Blades

CLARA BOW has bought some property for a new beach home along the Malibu in Santa Monica. It's on a promontory, with water out the front, to the north and to the south.

"I selected this site," Clara said, "so that my guests could toss cigaret butts out one window, ginger ale bottles out of the other, with the ocean to haul away the trash."

Smart girl, eh?

She Autrey Sue Him For That

I WANT a picture I can show my mother," explained Sue Carol to Max Autrey, photographer at the Fox lot, who prefers to photograph his subjects more or less undraped.

"I'll make you a picture you can show only to your mother," was Max' laconic reply.

What about this, skeptics? Here's Doug, Jr., with Joan Crawford, and she's wearing what looks mighty like a wedding ring! This seems pretty strong evidence that their marriage has actually taken place.

George Lewis and Dorothy Gulliver believe this is the age of speed, as shown in this race between scenes on the Universal lot.

What Price Temperament?

JETTA GOUDAL has won her right to be temperamental. In a verdict handed down by the Los Angeles superior court, she came out victor in her two-year fight against Pathé, when she was given judgment for $31,000 under a contract which she claimed was voluntarily set aside by the company. Much of the defense against the suit dealt with her temperament.

The Lowe-Down on Careers

TALKING pictures, in revolutionizing the industry more or less, have resulted in coining a new joke over at the Fox lot, what with many people coming and going all of the time—new arrivals from New York whose lives in the picture center seems to be about three months. The mot is this:

The only man sure of his job on the lot is the man who paints the names on the office doors. He uses water colors, too.

Edmund Lowe has the right idea.

He's going to invent a new paint. He's going to call it option paint. The paint is to be used to paint names on office doors, it is to last exactly 10 weeks, when it must turn a violent red.

This is the danger signal to the office occupant. At the end of the twelfth week, the paint disappears entirely. Options

Coogan's Crown for Sonny Boy?

Al Jolson has given Davey Lee a start, just as Chaplin did for Jackie Coogan in The Kid. Is history repeating itself now?

By HARMONY HAYNES

MOTION picture history seldom repeats itself, but in all its annals there has never appeared so striking a similarity of personalities as those of Jackie Coogan and David Lee.

A few short years ago, Charles Chaplin, the dean of American comedy artists, released one of his most famous pictures, The Kid. In this picture appeared a certain big-eyed, chubby youngster who captured the hearts of all who saw him, and for the first time a child rose to the heights of stardom.

The boy's name was Coogan and from his initial picture with Chaplin his popularity grew by leaps and bounds, until his name flashed outside movie theatres was enough to cause a small stampede. But one cannot be a little boy forever, and Jackie inevitably outgrew his childish roles.

Jackie Coogan's retirement from this phase of his career left an aching void in the hearts of his admirers—but not for long. The talkies appeared on the ever-changing scene of movie history, bringing the famous Al Jolson to the screen for the first time in The Singing Fool, and with him a winsome youngster, whose adorable lisp cast a spell over those who saw and heard him, just as one Jackie Coogan had done some years before.

So similar is David Lee's triumphant march straight into the hearts of his public to the rise of Jackie Coogan to fame that it seems as if the pages of movie history had been turned back for a second reading.

Aside from the similarity of their rise to fame in the spotlight of public attention, Davey and Jackie are alike in character and appearance. Davey closely resembles the Coogan youngster who preceded him just a few years ago in his childish path across the silver screen. They have the same locks of soft brown hair, wide brown eyes that are nearly identical and the same wholesome disposition.

Jackie Coogan, at the height of his fame, was completely unaware of his imposing position as a motion picture star. Davey, innocent little four-year old, aside from being a little puzzled by his sudden popularity, does not know that he has become the logical successor to the Coogan crown.

Davey Lee, as he appeared in the arms of his discoverer, Al Jolson, in The Singing Fool.

There isn't any use trying to explain to Davey that he is different from any other little boy. He thinks that every tiny tot is blessed by the attentions of hundreds of strange people, just as Jackie Coogan before him thought. Neither of them could know the meaning of the several hundred fan letters that come daily.

Davey, still in his babyhood, memorizes his lines easily and his work is play. On the set his mother gives him his cues and his lines, indelibly inscribed on his impressionable mind, are repeated with childish ease.

The real charm of David Lee, just as in Jackie Coogan, is that refreshing way he has of just being himself, unmarred by the knowledge that he has become famous.

FOR the LOVE

Hovering over the heads of the motion picture stars is the talkie microphone. Here is Alice White arising for her daily tilt with the mike.

Here are Doris Hill and Director Roy J. Pomeroy on their way to work, but Nancy Carroll shoos them away—"shooting" is going on inside and there must be silence!

The second step in this talking motion picture business shows Dolores Costello, testing her voice in her own home, in trying out for a talking part.

OF MIKE!

Step by step along the path to talkie stardom

This shot shows the actual making of a talkie. Nils Asther and Raquel Torres are the principals. Director Van Dyke is near the microphone, with John Arnold, cameraman, grinding away from his sound-proof booth, through a double plate glass window.

Now—how will it sound? After the talkie sequence is made, the star can hear her own voice registered. Simple as playing the record over again! John Robertson, director, dropped around just in time to listen in with Ruth Chatterton to the part she played in Madame X. She hardly seems to be taking herself seriously here, however.

Ah, the picture is finished! Each of these huge horns belches forth a deafening loudness, simultaneously. The sound then sifts through the gigantic screen at the front—and lo! we have synchronization and a perfect talkie!

LATE again. I never saw the beat. You won't have any more job than a rabbit if you don't look out."

Thus Ma Martin from the kitchen of the Umpty-umph street flat to the elegant young lady finishing a sketchy breakfast in the Martin dining room.

The elegant young lady paid scant heed to the remark. She appeared to be a stranger on a slumming expedition but the tone and the language of Ma Martin made it clear that this was none other than the daughter of the house, Miss Barbara, known among her associates at the Bon Ton Modiste shop as "Bobbie" Martin, who would presently take her place in the ranks of the mannequins modeling this and that in the imported line of women's wear.

"Now, ma, don't you get into a stew. I haven't been late in months but you go over the same thing every morning. Wait till I begin losing jobs before you go getting gray-headed over me."

And so the elegant young lady, clad in a costume whose chic in other days would have shattered her reputation as she emerged into Umpty-umph street, took her matutinal leave of the Martin flat and made her way to the avenue where she took up a prominent position on a prominent corner.

TO THE uninitiated she might have seemed a very great lady about to cross a bewildering thoroughfare or wondering what had become of her chauffeur. But to Jerry Dillon easing down the avenue in a Rolls-Royce she was just another frail looking for a ride downtown and so he drew up with a flourish.

"Come on," he said, "this car makes all stops."

Bobbie hesitated prettily and then clambered gracefully aboard.

"I suppose it's all right," she said. "I was waiting for a friend but he seems to be held up."

"Well, you've found a friend and I've never been held up yet. How far do you go?"

Bobbie named her destination, kept up a steady stream of bantering chatter, and disembarked at her stop, pausing for a prettily murmured thank-you and the customary fencing over where they should have lunch.

"You're quite welcome—any time you can catch me," he spoke.

And Jerry Dillon slipped the big car back into the traffic stream without the slightest reference to lunch anywhere, any time or under any circumstances.

That was a new one on Bobbie Martin and she hurled a few dagger glances after the expensive car as she hurried to join the mannequin parade at the Bon Ton. It was a funny thing. He was smart enough looking and he drove the right car, but he hadn't asked her name or tried to date her. Something was wrong somewhere!

Nothing like yesterday's Rolls-Royce, who had been just as smart but who had put up quite a battle for her name and a luncheon date. She had promised to tell him next time, perhaps. That was one way she made certain of transportation down the avenue in the mornings.

If Ma Martin had known how Bobbie achieved her undeniable reputation for promptness at the Bon Ton, what would she have thought?

Marty Martin knew. But Marty was her brother whose Bobbie was lost in meditation as she made her first appearance of the day.

privilege it was to bawl her out for next to nothing at all and to whom she paid only a little more attention than she did to Pa and Ma. Besides, who knew what it was that Marty did every night of the week? And who knew anything about the girls who were forever calling him up?

Something about today's Rolls-Royce had reminded her of Marty—Marty as he might have been if he had been given to driving expensive cars down the avenue.

But Pa and Ma and Marty had no need to be so critical of Bobbie. She was a girl, as she said often enough, who could take care of herself. "Hard to get," was her motto. Nobody knew yet just how hard Bobbie Martin was to get but it wasn't for lack of trying to find out.

Bobbie was lost in meditation as she arrayed herself in the poinsettia model No. 643 for her first appearance of the day. Bobbie meditated some more as she did the tea coat with the white fox collar for Mrs. Somebody and Miss Somebody who may have been to the manor born, but who could never in the wide world make the tea coat look as it did on her.

She was still thinking about today's Rolls-Royce as she left for home that night when yesterday's whirled up before her on the avenue and this time he was not to be denied his date.

He was bound to know who she was and where she lived and so she gave him her name which really had some style to it but she balked at Umpty-umph street and gave a number which just popped into her head, the number, as she remembered in a moment, of that Mrs. and Miss Somebody who had taken the fox-collared tea coat.

Bobbie should have seen the face of this man who told her his name was Dexter Courtland when she said that. But she didn't and that was that. Somehow she missed even the pussy-cat smile on his face when he hopped out of the Rolls with the big box of candy he had insisted on buying for her.

And so Dexter Courtland stood there while the butler came to the door and she marched straight into the house in the face of his astonishment, while Courtland climbed into his car and drove himself around a block or two.

THINGS seemed to be getting a little bit difficult with the butler when Dexter Courtland came in a little while later and smiled at her with that cat-that-ate-the-canary look. She saw it this time and, not being entirely silly, knew what it meant. Such luck, that it should be his own house.

But Bobbie Martin knew her way around and could take care of herself. Probably it had been years since anybody tried an old-fashioned, nineteenth century faint along that avenue anywhere, but Bobbie worked it and caught time to think.

Bobbie laughed it off and admitted the joke was on her. He claimed one dinner date as a forfeit and twenty-one minutes later she was borrowing a nickel from him to telephone her mother that she wouldn't be home till late.

After that it was a fencing match—Bobbie throwing her flossiest bluff and Dexter Courtland proving patient and likable. She high-hatted the waiter and generally demonstrated that she was accustomed to dining in these exclusive places.

There were more dinners after that but Bobbie was the original hard-to-get girl and Dexter turned out to be the kind that liked them that way. It is just as well that Pa Martin and Ma Martin never heard the comments of the other hard-boiled little mannequins at the Bon Ton, when the daily armful of roses began arriving at the shop with Dexter Courtland's card.

It was Courtland's regular campaign for the hard-to-get ones but how was Bobbie Martin to know that? There were times after a hard day when his tom-cat smile didn't seem to bother her much and when the way he held her as they danced seemed nothing to make a fuss about.

THEN came the night that raised his stock a full fifty per cent. They were dining and dancing as usual. This time it was in a garish speakeasy that had nothing to recommend it but the fact that it was new and they hadn't begun to cut the liquor quite so much as the rest.

One of Bobbie's worn out dinner dates of several seasons back was in the place, full to the ears and making a nuisance of himself. It was that fat fellow from Akron or somewhere that she had left standing on the avenue one night for a little discipline.

He made for her now and began to paw her, talking loud and breathing gin into her face.

Of course, Bobbie could take care of herself and any girl is hard to get with methods like that, but she was tired and she hated a scene, except, perhaps one of her own making in the privacy of her own home.

She could have kissed Dexter Courtland when he gave the man that inquiring look in his well-bred way and asked her if they hadn't best be going. In fact, that was the night she did kiss him for the first time. It was all right being the hard-to-get girl but you couldn't expect a man to keep putting out forever without some compensation.

It was queer how she thought of that other boy with his Rolls Royce just at the psychological moment when she ought to have been sentimental over Dexter's kiss. What had become of him? She hadn't seen him again after that day on the avenue. And he was the one man who hadn't tried to date her on the way downtown. Nice hair he had—and eyes. He did remind her of Marty somehow.

He must be the hard-to-get kind. Now if Dexter had had the sense to be more like that. But then, Dexter wasn't bad. He hadn't said much about what he wanted. Not enough to warn her that it was time to wash him up. And then, one night, Dexter did play the hard-to-get game. He was calling for her at the house now. Pa and Ma liked him. And the Rolls-Royce did make a stir in the neighborhood. But that night he was late. In fact, he was very late. Bobbie sniffed. For two bits she would break the date when he did come.

But there she was—just the same—dressed to kill in the bargain things she got at the shop. She looked particularly beautiful that night with a little flare of anger adding a priceless value to the rouge and lipstick she wore.

SO IT was she looked when Marty came in, Marty who almost never spent a night at home and probably wasn't intending to now. Who was it that Marty had with him? Who indeed but the hard-to-get boy with the Rolls-Royce.

Hollywood—Home of Fashion

Simplicity is the keynote of this lovely gown of chiffon, with bodice simply modeled to fit the figure closely. Posed by Billie Dove.

The great god Fashion has his headquarters in Hollywood and from this center of all that's beautiful in a drab world, dictates the summer fashions for American women.

Mary Brian chooses this snappy outfit for slumber hours. The pajamas are of silk and satin and the jacket is of bright metallic cloth trimmed with fur.

Fashion dictates soft colors, a plain bodice and layers of tulle to form a bouffant skirt. Posed by Dorothy Revier.

HOLLYWOOD, as usual, is the birthplace of all that is new and delectable in fashion suggestions for American women. In all the latest creations there is a lack of elaborate design, skillfully replaced by a charming simplicity that makes the beauty of feminine wearing apparel astonishingly effective.

For evening wear the newest gowns are designed to fit the figure closely. Uneven hems are still dictated by the courts of fashion, the skirt being modeled in a flair that

McLaglen—Soldier

Life in the raw, an itch for travel and adventure, a battle against he-man hardships—such is the story of his life as told to Dorothy Spensley

By Victor McLaglen

During the World War, McLaglen's company was sent to Baghdad, where, in 1917, Victor was appointed Provost Marshal of the city.

In What Price Glory? with Dolores Del Rio, McLaglen's work gave him a definite place among the stars of filmdom.

Here Victor demonstrates to Maria Alba in his dressing room, a new type of reducing machine.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Never has an actor come to the screen with such a unique record of adventures as has Victor McLaglen. Born in London, educated in Christian College, South Africa, McLaglen left home at fourteen and joined the pride of the British nation—the King's Guard! At sixteen he prospected for silver in Cobalt, Canada. Two years later he toured the world as a professional boxer, meeting Jack Johnson in Vancouver. In 1914, in England, he enlisted six hundred men, was sent to Mesopotamia and distinguished himself in four major battles. Was promoted to major and Provost Marshal of Baghdad. Later won the British army boxing championship and entered motion pictures in England. He is six feet two inches and weighs two hundred and fifteen pounds. His seven brothers and only sister served in the British army during the war. "What Price Glory?" "The Unholy Three," "Winds of Chance" and "A Girl in Every Port" are among his outstanding American successes.

The Story of My Life

WITHOUT a doubt the first four McLaglens were born with the itching heel. We were rolling stones that gathered moss, occasionally. There was never a dusty road in Kent or in Surrey or in Sussex that didn't know the imprint of our feet. Soft grasses by the wayside knew the feel of our bodies where we had thrown ourselves to rest. Even North Downs, the uplands near Maidstone, and Botley Hill, bear marks of our excursions.

Perhaps we got it from Andrew McLaglen, a Scotch-Irishman, who had been born in Capetown, South Africa, and had migrated, eventually, to Tunbridge Wells, where he married a little Scotch lass—Lily, and gave the world Fred, Leo, myself, Arthur, Lewis, Clifford, Lily, Cyril and Kenneth. We all grew into six-footers, and over; even Lily, our only sister, measured an even six feet.

of Fortune

Victor played another slam-bang success in A Girl in Every Port, with Maria Alba furnishing the main heart interest.

Wearing the trappings of a desert sheik was no new experience for Victor McLaglen, whose itching heel often came in contact with arid sands.

Myrna Loy dreams to the tender love-making of this big, strong fellow in The Black Watch, soon to be released.

We didn't get our love of travel from our mother, of that I am sure. She much preferred the duties of parson's wife in the little suburb 28 miles from London. My father had been Bishop of Claremont in South Africa; he was consecrated in 1897, and when he died, last year, took with him the letters D. D., LL.D. He was a very righteous man, broad-minded and fiery, with firm convictions. He wanted me, like him, to be a parson. He wanted Arthur, who is now with me in Hollywood, to be an artist. We both turned out to be motion picture actors.

We have the itching heel, but we have a strong love of family that has drawn us together, like a magnet, from far places. Even when I was scouting around the continents, and the western horizon beckoned, I always felt that tug of home and home ties. Even when I was boxing my way through Canada, with my eyes on the great Pacific and Hawaii and China and India, my heart was back in a little Kent village. And when I was in Baghdad, with the hot Arabian sun pounding down on our pith helmets, I remembered the soft voice of a thrush in a cool English thicket. Even the shrill cries of the bazaar-wallas, screeching their wares, couldn't drown the memory of the England that a Britisher loves. But the adventure and the hazards and the excitement of campaign life compensated.

There was existence to a man's own taste. One day trekking out onto the desert, with perhaps a skirmish at Shaikh Sa'd, fighting, sweating, bleeding, cussing, living, loving; the next drinking sake or lebben, curdled camel's milk, along the bund and watching the tawny Tigris flow by our feet.

MY BROTHER, Fred, was the first to run away. When he was 14 he lied about his age, told the recruiting sergeant he was 18 and signed up with the Royal Horse artillery. He immediately became my idol. He played rugby and football at school; he fought in the ring; he was a boxer of no mean ability. I wanted to be the same.

"Look here, Vic," he told me on one of his leaves of absence, "here's a bit of advice. You'll need it. Hit anyone who takes an unfair advantage of you. But first be sure you are right."

That was not the creed of my father, the parson, but it sounded good to me. I adopted it.

Now then, the Boer war broke out. Fred was transferred to an active regiment, the Tenth Mountain artillery. He was sent to Africa. His letters were full of battles and gore and action. They were read aloud to us kids, and we sat there, aching to get into the thick of it.

One morning, when the sun was yet hazy, I climbed into my clothes and took the road that led to London. All I had in my pockets was 18 pence, about 37 cents in American money. It was my first trip to the city. I ached, with all the ardor a half-grown kid can summon, to give myself to the service of the King of Great Britain and Ireland, Defender of the Faith and Emperor of India.

It was dusk by the time I had walked the 28 miles from Tunbridge Wells to London. My feet ached, my tongue clung to the roof of my mouth, I was tired and hungry.

I trudged into Green Park, which flanks Piccadilly Circus on the right. Walking along I heard a voice say:

"I'd like to know where my bleeding belt is, Gawd blimey!"

It was a soldier.

"I've lost my belt, son," he said, looking at me, "and there's money to you if you'll help me find it. It's a heavy belt and it's got 40 sovereigns put into it. My whole savings, Gawd blast it. I was sitting with a jane in the park here, and now it's gone."

So the soldier went one way and I another about the dark park, looking for his belt. I had about given up the search when I came to an almost obscure bench and on it lay an object. It was the belt. I hurried back to where I had met the soldier, but he was gone. Here I was with a neat little fortune of about $200 and I couldn't find the owner. The stars, blinking out of a black heaven, looked more friendly. Strapping the belt to my middle, my eyes again sought the reflected glow in the heavens, and I walked toward Piccadilly.

To a boy from the country it was Paradise and Fairyland rolled up in one. There were pink lights, glittering and shimmering and gleaming, crowds eddying and swirling about, jostling me to and fro, and huge trams rumbling by.

There were women elbowing their way through the throng, pressing against likely looking men, peering into their faces. There were painted lips and whitened noses. There was beauty and evil and more beauty. It was pandemonium to a kid like me. I wandered about in it, finally approaching the Pavillion music hall, thinking to grab myself a bite of food. The first person I met there was the 40-sovereign soldier, a member, I could see for the first time by the electrics, of Roberts' Horse.

Andrew, seven, and Sheila, five, bask in the light of their father's famous grin.

"Soldier," I said, "I found your belt." I handed it to him. He was a good-natured sort of chap, doing the pubs with a couple of cronies, so, linking arms in mine, we went on to the Cafe de Europe. That was a place! One of the gayest in London, where the liquor and the ladies sparkled the brightest. "L'Europe," the soldiers called it. I was pretty green, young and inexperienced. I didn't have to tell the buddies that. They ordered me a lemonade and a ham sandwich, and set about, themselves, to drink their ale and bitters. In my pants' pocket were two sovereigns given me by the soldier for recovering his belt.

I GOT a room for seven shillings and a sixpence and the next morning at six I was in front of the recruiting office at Trafalgar Square.

"Do you want to join, my lad? You would make a fine Guardsman."

I straightened up to my tallest and the officer pulled at his grey moustache. "How old are you?"

"Eighteen, sir."

He believed it.

"Yes, we'll put you into the Life Guards."

It wouldn't have taken a belaying pin to knock me over. A feather would have done it. A Life Guardsman! The pride of the British Nation! The King's own bodyguard. The regiment that my father had always told me about, with pride and esteem in his voice. The regiment that functioned at all public occasions; that escorted the King, the visiting Kaiser and the crown prince of Germany. The regiment that had only six-footers and over in it. As proud a regiment as Frederich

Letters of a Movie Extra

HOTEL [illegible] STANFORD
HOLLYW[illegible], CALIFORNIA

Dear Dolly:

I have been rechristened, and how! By none other than Cecil B. De Mille, the godfather of the Industry, himself! I'll tell you all about it, only don't spread it around the prairie. I've been working for him for a change. Oh, quite a bit of change, because he pays well even if he does insist upon having you earn that money.

It must have been one of his famous diet days, 'cause he forgot to call lunch. I was simply starved, having been out so late the night before that I was too sleepy to get up in time for breakfast and was even five minutes late on the set as it was, for which, somehow (I never will be able to figure out just how he happened to miss the opportunity) he did not bawl me out. Well, it got to be 3 p. m. and my stomach was simply marking time and finally said, "For Heaven's sake, when do we eat?" My fool mouth just couldn't keep shut and blurted right out loud what my tummy had said.

That awful silence!—like the calm before the quake (only in this particular instance it was the qualm before the cake). Then Cecil thundered—his eagle eye roving over the entire crowd—"Who said that?"

Baby, if I had been full of cream when he made that remark, I would have been full of buttermilk a minute later. Something had to be done and done in a hurry. If I didn't speak up, he would go right down that line until he came to me, so I blurted, "I said it. You gave us an 8:30 call and it's 3 now." I'm surprised I didn't die of heart failure but I guess it was just because it's hard to die on an empty stomach.

"So, your poor, dear, little pampered stomach is of greater importance than my picture, is it?"

Now, I ask you, what would you have answered to that question? All I said was, "Well, to me it is."

So, being of the nature that likes to be different he merely said, "Lunch, everybody!"

Almost forgot to mention that I worked for Micky Neilan, not that Micky knew it, because I got my call from Bob Landis, his assistant. Micky's sets are more fun than a circus.

Mary Brian was on the picture as leading lady, and believe it or not, she talked to me! I was so thrilled because she is a dear, sweet thing and all the extras loved the way she didn't ritz us.

And now, last but not least, if my good fortune hangs out, I'll help dear Jimmy Cruze (if I don't get the call I'll just leave out that adjective) make a musical comedy. I went right up to him and said, "I understand you cried once 'cause an extra girl didn't get a job. Now, I'm an extra and I dislike very much seeing men cry, so you better give me a call." He just grinned and asked, "Can you sing?" "Nothing but a hard luck song", I wise-cracked, and he said if they decided to use any poor people he would give me a chance to prove that statement. And I have been singing Hallelujah, I'm a Bum ever since.

Love,

Francois Fern

Harry Carr's

Harry Carr

SAVED by the talkies—that's Mary Pickford!

It is as though she had been born again. Her picture Coquette has given her a new lease on life.

There is no question but that Mary was coming dangerously close to the end of her movie career. Her public didn't care for her in any other parts than spindle-legged little girls. And she didn't look like a spindle-legged little girl any more.

The talkies are a new deal of the cards for her. She can go on forever if she wants to. I confidently expect that she will go on as long as Mrs. Whiffen and celebrate her eightieth birthday in a studio.

Real Stories

WHAT applies to Mary applies to a lot of girls with brains.

It isn't only that the talkies give them a chance to use their voices. The real point is that it opens the screen to real stories. After all, there are only a few themes and a few stories that can be told without the use of words. The movies had about used up this supply.

Movies Under Fire

I HAVE been down on the Mexican border watching the horrors of war; and most of my playmates have been the movie newsreel men.

For cold-blooded nerve under fire, I will hand it to these boys. Two or three of them set up their cameras in box-cars so near the federal trenches at Naco that you could have thrown a paper wad into the fighting.

And take it from me, there is nothing comforting about the sound of bullets. There is one kind that sings past your ears with a long p-i-n-g. There is another kind that makes a sound like fssst and another that buzzes like a bumble bee.

Kidnaped the Rebels

ONE of the movie camera men is a young fellow named Varick Frazzel. He is just out of Yale with a lot of money, and a thirst for adventure and achievement.

One night, in the darkness outside of the Naco trenches, he was challenged by a band of deserters; and held up the whole bunch. He bundled them into his big Packard and delivered them over to the American cavalry officers for internment.

Talkies gave our Mary a new lease on cinema life.

The Last Sennett Girl

THELMA HILL seems to have emerged as the one Mack Sennett girl to survive the general cataclysm.

With the coming of the talkies, Sennett believes that the day of the bathing girl has gone forever—to his evident uproarious joy! He has given the famous Sennett beauties the air and has closed down the beauty shop.

To Thelma Hill he has given a five-year contract.

Where's Mack Now?

I AM waiting to see where, in his gorgeous new studio, Mack Sennett will transact his business.

In the old studio, he called in the talented architects and they made him an office so magnificent that nothing could appropriately be brought off there except meetings of the League of Nations. It was all teakwood and rosewood.

Mae Murray's charming voice brought her back to the screen after a long absence.

So far as I know, Sennett never saw the inside of it. He always transacted all business of every kind in the Turkish-bath rubbing room. The visiting celebrity sat on the rubbing table and Mack sat on the scales.

In his new studio, he has a grand room with carved desks and a great baronial fireplace and a thick carpet and electric lights peeking out through carved iron gargoyles and such.

Every time I have ever gone out to see him we have sat upon a couple of barrels in an alley behind the projecting rooms.

Calls Him Down

I HAVE never known any rich man so modest and unassuming as Sennett. He says he has had plenty of help from his old Irish mother. When she sees any symptoms, she says various things that begin, "Well, now just because you were lucky enough to make a little money, you needn't get the idea . . . etc, etc." None of which is calculated to increase the proportions of Mack's ego.

Leatrice Comes Back

LEATRICE JOY seems to have bridged the jinx that confronts a hand-picked De Mille star.

As long as these "De Mille discoveries" sail under the lee of his protection, they get along; but when they leave the old home and fireside, what happens to them is plenty.

The Bumps

IT IS really astonishing to consider the disastrous bumps that have befallen De Mille stars when they have left De Mille.

Agnes Ayres started like a million dollars with De Mille and hit the rocks. Bebe Daniels went into a slump; but finally survived it and swam out. Vera Reynolds—well, with her as though a parachute had collapsed. Lois Wilson is one of the most conspicuous.

Private Line

FROM THE INSIDE

The Case of Lois

LOIS is one of those singular cases where a girl got tied to a part and couldn't let it go. The funny part is that she knew it and saw it coming.

Paramount put her in The Covered Wagon as the little innocent gal out alone in the open spaces with a sunbonnet and a brave heart. She never could get rid of it. She went all through the Zane Grey stories—one dern sunbonnet after another.

She Had a Yen

AS TO Leatrice Joy, her troubles are only temporary. She has brains and intelligence. Her new contract with First National to make talking pictures ought to be the opening of a new day for her.

She has been suffering from a tragic mistake made during the closing days of her contract at De Mille's. I have never known an actress who didn't have a yen to do something fatal.

Just as every lawyer is convinced he could be a great wheat farmer and every opera singer thinks he could manage a bank, so every actress has a pet idea—that usually means ruin if she ever gets a chance to do it.

Leatrice's pet idea was to be the heroine of one of those Von Stroheim beer garden stories—young ladies who fall in love with the haughty young officer. She finally got a chance to do it in a picture called The Blue Danube. It pretty nearly finished her.

Modern

OF ALL women on the screen, there is no other who so completely expresses the idea of real modern American woman as Leatrice Joy. Not the screen flapper with the lip stick, but the real American woman with real problems.

Thelma Hill, Mack Sennett beauty, shows no reluctance to shoulder a five-year contract.

Jack's Wife Then

THE last time Marilyn Miller came to the coast, she was the admiring wife of a movie star, watching his career from the side lines.

Now his career has been junked; and Marilyn has been signed as talkie star herself to do the perennial Sally for First National.

Her marriage to Jack Pickford was one of the tragedies of the film colony. If Jack could only have disciplined himself, he would have been the best actor who has ever been seen on the screen. D. W. Griffith told me that he was the best young actor he has ever seen in a studio.

Leatrice Joy has just signed a contract to make talkies for First National.

At Last, Dr. Fu

I HAVE never been in any studio for any length of time that somebody didn't come in with a plan to do The Insidious Dr. Fu Manchu.

It wouldn't be considered respectable for any scenario editor to hold his job for long without considering it. And now it is really to be made, with Tully Marshall as Dr. Fu.

I think it is not too much to say that Tully Marshall has played more great parts than any other actor on the screen. His career runs from The Birth of a Nation on.

The Cutting Room Floor

ONE of the finest examples of good acting I have ever seen on the screen was the part of the rich old roué done by Tully in The Merry Widow.

As is usual with Von Stroheim pictures, the best of it lies on the cutting room floor. It was a remarkable study of degeneracy—the old wretch who gurgles with senile excitement over women's shoes. Most of it had to be cut. If it were plain enough to be understood, it couldn't get by the censor. It it weren't plain enough to be objectionable, it had no point.

Von Again

ACCORDING to what I hear from Von Stroheim, he has decided to abandon his career as a director. His troubles with the Gloria Swanson picture were one blow too much. So he says that, in future, he will be content to plod along as an actor and leave the troubles of a director to others.

Yes, yes, yes. That's what Von Stroheim says every

How Director Howard

Like a puppet master, the director plays on the sensitive chords of each actor's temperament to get the best that is in him for the screen. Here is an inside story of a most difficult part of picture producing.

As told by WILLIAM K. HOWARD to Ruth Biery

BUCK JONES, Jack Holt, Owen Moore, Marguerite de la Motte, Lois Wilson, Bebe Daniels, Rod La Rocque, Jetta Goudal, Joseph Schildkraut, Louise Dresser, Janet Gaynor.

These are some of the Hollywood stars whom William K. Howard has directed!

"Now, when it comes to Jetta Goudal—" began Mr. Howard.

"But let's begin with Buck Jones, Bill!" I interceded.

"Oh, all right. But another director made his picture, then I was chiselled in to make it over. Making a western is always making a motion picture at its best, whether it's Buck Jones or Jack Holt. It is done in terms of action. That's the reason western actors are easy to direct. Most of them are like Jones. Big, lovable fellows and marvelous horsemen. He told his horse when to stop and I told him when to stop. No temperament—just one of those men who deal with animals and get right down to earth and create an illusion of reality by doing things on the screen as they would do them in real life.

"Now, it was different with Jetta Goudal—"

"Just a minute, Bill. Why are you so anxious to get to Jetta? Owen Moore and Marguerite de la Motte come next."

"Well, it was different with them, too! They are sophisticates of the cinema. Moore is an old hand on both the stage and the screen. He knows how to get the rabbits out of the hats. He uses his hands

William K. Howard is a psychologist of the first rank. He knows his players and by carefully manipulating the proper strings, he gets what he wants.

Both Jack Holt and Rod La Rocque do their best acting in parts of their own choosing. Both are effective actors.

"Lois Wilson is so darned nice, you really can't say anything about her. She is always lovely and never causes any trouble."

Pulls the Strings

more effectively than any actor I have ever directed. Yet, even as seasoned an actor as Moore has his temperamental moments. I remember one night when we were working at the old Mayer studio. We all had dinner together and then came back to rehearse a scene. Moore knew all the mechanics but he just couldn't do them. It was his dinner. He couldn't work until that was digested."

"What did you do?"

"What could I do? When a man can't do the work, he can't do it. I waited until he overcame that dinner.

DE LA MOTTE is another post graduate. She has a great sense of humor but she does not care to play parts which are not in harmony with her own feelings. Sincerity is a quality you cannot instill in an actress. You can sing Mammy and Sonny Boy to them, but if they don't really feel their characters, it doesn't do a second's good to try to make them believe it.

"Red Dice was a play done by Jeanie Macpherson, with a typical Jeanie Macpherson ending. A Christmas wreath hung in a window. Outside it was quietly snowing. De la Motte and La Rocque were to appear in the wreath; chimes from the neighboring church to begin their emotionings. De la Motte was to say, 'Do you hear the Christmas bells, dear?' And Rod was to reply, 'No, wedding bells, darling.'

"It came to the scene. The phoney snow was falling. Their heads in the wreath—they looked as good as any cigar box wreath in the country. De la Motte looked up into La Rocque's eyes and with perfect seriousness remarked, 'Papa, what is beer?'

"Janet Gaynor is the greatest feminine personality on the screen," says director Howard. Bebe Daniels proved difficult at first. But when the right string was pulled—presto! No trouble at all.

"It was hours before we could continue. She just couldn't feel the part. We had to change the ending. She did us a good turn, by the way—we got a better ending. But if she doesn't believe it, you'd just better change it or put somebody else in it. If she does, she plays it beautifully.

ANTONIO MORENO is enthusiastic and colorful. He is temperamental in the right way. If a director is loose and doesn't seem to care about a picture, Moreno isn't so good. He sets the pace for enthusiasm, much as does Douglas Fairbanks, and he expects you to feel that pace with him. If you do, Moreno is easy to handle.

"He was leading a band of horses for The Border Legion. The signals were not clear enough to start them. There was confusion; a horse was getting a pounding for the picture. Moreno squawked—not because of himself but because of the horse. The signals should have been clear—it shouldn't have happened. A director just remembers to keep pepped up to Moreno—to keep things moving smoothly.

"Lois Wilson is so darned nice, you really can't say anything about her. I had her in The Thundering Herd, up in the snow-covered mountains. She adapted herself quietly and efficiently to all these trying conditions. She's like Florence Vidor and Irene Rich, those girls who are always lovely and never cause any trouble.

"Talking about how you direct people, comes back largely to one fundamental, anyway. If you have a player cast for a picture and she begins work, it's a cinch they aren't going to take her out. A director might as well make up his mind that no matter what her short-comings, he better make the best of it. The best way I've found with one and all is to be very appreciative and after each scene say, 'That's fine, thank you,' no matter how many times you have to retake it. Of course, when it comes to Jetta Goudal—"

"But what about Bebe Daniels?"

HE SCOWLED and then smiled. The scowl for Jetta, I took it; the smile for Bebe.

"Bebe had the advantage of me to start with. We did Volcano together. She was in New York and I was in Hollywood. She wanted her cameraman, who had been with her three years. I wanted my cameraman, who had been with me three years. I was insistent and she kept the wires busy with her insistence. I won out and then I received this wire: 'You seem to have won the cameraman argument and I'm sure since you fought so hard for a cameraman you'll try just as hard to make a good picture.'

"Which is typical of Bebe. We made a bad picture, but we worked together and worked hard! The picture just wouldn't work. But we've been good friends ever since. Some day Bebe should be tremendously successful as a dramatic actress, not just leaping hurdles and swinging tennis rackets and riding bicycles. She's really a tremendous actress.

"Of course, you work with her to a certain point. We were making a graveyard scene. She said at the end of the third day it was rotten. I agreed with her. At the end of the next it was the same story. Again, I agreed

CUPID'S BULLETIN

Marian Nixon

WINSOME Marian Nixon is often seen with Carey Wilson, the well known scenario writer, these days. Mr. Wilson has made a considerable fortune in his profession and has a magnificent home in Beverly Hills. About a year ago he was separated from his wife and a divorce decree has already been granted.

All For Love

MONTAGUE LOVE, the English actor who has played many bad men of the cinema, has just wed Marjorie Hollis, of Hollywood. Each has been previously wed.

Washburn Says "I Do"

BRYANT WASHBURN, for many years a prominent star, has just wed Dahlia Pears, known in the films as Virginia Vance. Melbourne Spurr, well known photographer of Hollywood film stars, was best man.

Her Perfect Alibi

ELEANOR GRIFFITH, New York stage star, who was brought west by United Artists to play the lead in Alibi, gave Hollywood the slip as soon as the last scene was completed. She said something about shopping, packed bag and baggage and departed for New York, where she took a commuter's train for Greenwich, Connecticut, to wed John Halliday, stage actor. It is believed that both Mr. and Mrs. Halliday will return to the west for the talkies.

Marshall Neilan

The Neilan-Sweet Difficulty

IN NEW YORK, Marshall Neilan has admitted to friends that he and Blanche Sweet are separated and that a divorce is in the offing. Miss Sweet was an immensely popular screen star a few years ago, and it is said she is ambitious to stage a comeback. Neilan's recent implication in the divorce affairs of Jim Tully are said to have culminated the break with his wife

Turn About Is Fair Play

SALLY EILERS broke off her engagement to Matty Kemp when she met young Bill Hawkes, to whom she is now engaged. So, Matty, casting about for a new object of adoration, seems quite entirely satisfied when Loretta Young smiles his way.

Talmadge-Netcher Nuptials

Mr. and Mrs. Townsend Netcher

CONSTANCE TALMADGE and Townsend Netcher, son of the owner of one of Chicago's largest department stores, were married in the Hollywood home of Connie's sister, Mrs. Buster Keaton, on May 8. Buster Keaton, the frozen-faced comedian, gave the bride away. Here is Connie and her new hubby as they appeared after the ceremony.

Pringle Gets Freedom

AILEEN PRINGLE has been separated from Sir James Pringle some 10 years. Now, it seems, friend husband has intimated that he has found another lady he would like to wed. So, as Aileen's heart is engrossed with her Hollywood career, she has gracefully consented to give him a divorce. Cedric Gibbons, art director at the M-G-M studios, is looking particularly cheerful about the forthcoming freedom of the popular player.

Carewe Wedding Bells?

THE Dolores Del Rio-Edwin Carewe romance seems to be reviving again. At Carmel, California, where the company has been on location making Evangeline, the star and her director were constantly in each other's company after the day's work on location was finished. New Orleans papers also hinted strongly of this romance when the company was on location near Iberia, Louisiana.

Get Busy! Here's Final Puzzle

GRAB your scissors, clip these pictures! On your marks—ready—go!

Here's the fourth and final cut puzzle picture in SCREEN SECRETS fascinating $1,500 prize contest.

If you haven't started yet, go back and clip the pictures from the three previous issues and you'll be right at scratch with the early birds.

And you'll have just as much chance of getting the "worm"—which in this case is one of the 110 awards—as any of those who entered this contest with the April issue.

CAN you use $400?—then cut out the puzzles in each monthly picture, fit the pieces together and name the stars in each assembled group. When you have assembled each picture, write a brief biography of not more than 100 words on one star from each group—four biographies in all.

To aid you in preparing these essays, SCREEN SECRETS is publishing each month a short life history of various screen players (see page twelve in this issue).

Then mail in the four correctly assembled pictures and the four brief biographies to the Cut Puzzle Editor, SCREEN SECRETS Magazine, Minneapolis, Minnesota. Contest closes July 15, 1929.

Below is printed puzzle No. 4, which is the final puzzle in this contest.

HERE ARE THE PRIZES:

1st Prize . .	$400
2nd Prize . .	$200
3rd Prize . .	$100
4th Prize . .	$75
2 of $50.00 . .	$100
4 of $25.00 . .	$100
5 of $20.00 . .	$100
5 of $15.00 . .	$75
20 of $10.00 . .	$200
20 of $5.00 . .	$100
50 of $1.00 . .	$50

110 Prizes - $1,500

FOLLOW THESE RULES:

1. SCREEN SECRETS will award $1,500 in cash prizes, as listed, for the correct assembly of the four puzzle pictures of the contest, appearing in the April, May, June and July issues of SCREEN SECRETS; for the neatest presentation of the puzzles; and for the best brief biography, told in 100 words or less, on one star in each of the four groups.

2. Contest began with the publication of puzzle No. 1, in the April issue of SCREEN SECRETS, and continues through the May, June and July issues of the magazine.

3. Contestants must keep all puzzles until publication of final set in July SCREEN SECRETS. Contest closes July 15, 1929. Anyone may compete except Fawcett Publications employees and their families.

4. There are no entry fees, and contestants need not purchase SCREEN SECRETS to compete. Copies may be inspected at public libraries, and it is permissible to trace the puzzles on plain paper.

5. All entries must be sent first-class mail, prepaid. None will be returned.

6. The verdict of the judges will be final.

7. Duplicate prizes will be given tieing contestants.

8. Send your entry to Cut Puzzle Editor, SCREEN SECRETS Magazine, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

The Cynical

Aileen Pringle is Hollywood's real high-brow, yet she is still struggling for a foothold. Perhaps she makes the producers uncomfortable.

I CAN imagine nothing funnier than H. L. Mencken sitting down with Elinor Glyn to gurgle with rapture over an inspiration bubbling from their two souls. Aileen Pringle was the inspiration. She had the remarkable experience of being discovered jointly by the critical and high-brow Mr. Mencken; and by the fervid and ardent Madam Glyn.

Mencken is a great critic with a pen so terrible that the literati shudder at the mention of his name. Just one "G-r-r-r-r" from Mencken and every novelist leaps in terror for his burrow.

Elinor is the lady who wrote Three Weeks with a perfumed lip stick on cerise-colored paper. She is a specialist in writing about the great passion called Love. In the Sunday newspapers she answers souls crying in agony for love. She can tell you right off the reel what to do about an ardent Romeo with a bank account but poor manners. Every lovely waitress thinks of Elinor as a she-Cupid.

I have always been curious to know what kind of girl Pringle could be—with a mind keen enough to attract Mencken and the IT quality developed so fervently and lavishly as to merit the attention of the Love Goddess of Hollywood.

Obviously, she must be a very complicated young lady. Well, she is. That's what's the matter with her career. Hollywood doesn't favor complicated young ladies. It prefers simple souls. You know—that kind that weep with gratitude on the shoulder of the director when he tells her he has decided to give her the part of Tessie, the young lady who darn near got ruined. The kind who looks with big eyes at newspaper interviewers and tells them they never were so frightened in their whole lives and how can such a wonderful, wonderful writer bother about a little girl like her. The kind who talks baby talk to fat producers and asks their advice about clothes—because nobody ever had such WONDERFUL taste in clothes.

PRINGLE isn't that way at all. She makes the producers and the impressive directors uncomfortable. She never seems to be taking them quite seriously. And if they knew what an infinitive was, they'd have a dreadful feeling they were splitting all of them in her presence.

¶ Aileen is a man's woman, fearless, frank, Carr to wonder at the miracle of an intellec-

With Conrad Nagel, Aileen won fame in Three Weeks. Now her best bet is the talkies, for she has a fine, personable voice.

Further than that, Pringle is a man's woman. She always makes me think of Brett in Ernest Hemmingway's The Sun Also Rises.

According to popular fancy, it is the bald-headed row of fat old gentlemen who make the fame of girls on the stage and screen. It isn't so. Women stars—especially famous beauties—do not get many fan letters from men. Their adorers are all girls.

Aileen Pringle is the kind of girl that everybody calls "Pringle." She is fearless, frank and witheringly practical. She has what is called common horse sense to such a degree that it is appalling. And she is struggling to get by in a town where everything is show-off.

Miss Pringle

and practical, which caused the admiring Mr. tual rising to fame bound in a Glyn tiger skin.

Why is it that, despite her beauty, no one ever calls her "honey" or "dearie"? To all and sundry, Aileen is known as "Pringle."

IT IS a matter of tradition that no girl ever gets inside Pringle's house. All her dinners are stag. And therefore are quiet, interesting talk-fests.

She lives in an Italian-type house on the cliff at Santa Monica. One of her neighbors is a newly-rich who has a winged Victory in the bay window and another neighbor is Matt Moore, who has a tennis court that he insists upon playing with in the middle of the night. She has an automobile that used to belong to Mary Miles Minter and a library filled with autographed copies of books.

There are very few well known authors who do not visit this house when they come to Hollywood. Pringle is the high-brow belle of the world. Hergesheimer, Carl Elinor Glyn wrote Three Weeks with a lipstick and cerise colored paper, and Pringle was wafted to success on its wave of popularity.

Van Vechten, George Jean Nathan have searched their souls to find printed words to say how nice she is. Yet she is still struggling for a foothold in Hollywood.

YOU have dinner in a dining room where the tall candles throw soft shadows across the monastic dining table. What you have to eat goes back to dim forgotten traditions. Pringle has trained her cook in the ways of the Basques.

Hollywood is filled with French, Italians, Russians and so on. So far as I know, she is the only Basque in the colony. They are a strange people from the mountains that lie between Spain and France. Nobody knows whence they came. Their language has no resemblance to any other known language. It is supposed that they are the backwash of some forgotten Gothic invasion of Europe. They are proud, disdainful, and more full of fight than the Clan-na-Gael on St. Patrick's Day in the morning.

Aileen was born in San Francisco, but all her people were Basques; and her tongue still knows that rasping and complicated dialect.

She told us of her marriage and how she came to get into the movies where she seems as strange a figure as a Greek statue in a 5-and-10-cent store.

SHE was married to a young Englishman—Pringle—whose father was in the British diplomatic service. They flitted around the world for a while; then settled down in Jamaica, where the family had a plantation.

Life became for her one long round of country life such as you read of in Thackeray. Every morning, she was wakened by a maid with her morning coffee. When she was dressed, the real breakfast came on. This was a five-story meal. There were always three kinds of meat and four vegetables.

After lunch—which was another lusty meal, they had an elaborate mixed drink which was almost a meal in itself. At four, they had sandwiches in the garden or terrace. At eight or nine they had dinner, with so many forks that nobody ever deciphered them all. Between times, they rode and visited the peasantry.

It is as easy to imagine Pringle going through this stuff as it is to imagine her as a protege of Elinor Glyn.

Society in

By RUTH M. TILDESLEY

SCREEN SECRETS SOCIETY EDITOR

CHARLIE CHAPLIN isn't going to let Mary and Doug have all the visiting nobility. One afternoon the comedian gave a luncheon at the Montmartre in honor of Lord and Lady Wier, their son John, and daughter Elspeth, and Mr. Will Tevis from Montecito. Judging from the frequent laughter, the party was a jolly one with Chaplin at his best, telling one story after another, pantomiming descriptive bits in the exclusive Chaplinesque manner.

BEFORE leaving on a trip east, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Morosco (Corinne Griffith) entertained at a dinner in their palatial Beverly Hills home. Mounds of pastel-shaded flowers lent charm to the table and covers were arranged for Messrs. and Mesdames Irving Thalberg (Norma Shearer), Conrad Nagel, Fred Niblo, Richard Barthelmess, William A. Seiter (Laura La Plante), George Fitzmaurice (Diana Kane), Ralph Forbes (Ruth Chatterton) and John Robertson; Misses Mona Maris, Beatrice Norton and Katherine Bennett and Messrs. Fred Niblo, Jr., Alex Bennett and Harry Crocker.

While Norma Shearer and Laura La Plante listened eagerly or contributed to the conversation anent the talkies, Enid Bennett (who is Mrs. Fred Niblo and the mother of three healthy youngsters) was kept busy answering Diana Kane's questions about infants—Diana's Sheila was not a month old at the time.

AT A merry dinner-dance given at the Breakfast Club, Bessie Love was presented with the club's Order of the Star and Garter because of her beautiful work in The Broadway Melody. Other screen favorites to win this distinction have been Dolores Del Rio, Dolores Costello, Billie Dove, May McAvoy, Claire Windsor, Vivian and Rosetta Duncan.

Maurice DeMond, president and founder of the Breakfast Club, bestowed the order on the vivacious Bessie, cheered on by all the guests, who included among their number Blanche Sweet, Lila Lee, Ruth Chatterton, John Colton, Sally O'Neill, and Molly O'Day, Lilyan Tashman and Eddie Lowe, Dorothy Burgess, Norman Kerry, Johnny Hines, Mr. and Mrs. Gus Edwards, Mary McAllister, Sharon Lynn, Paul Bern, Julanne Johnston, Polly Moran, George Sidney, Gwen Lee and Eddie Nugent.

CINEMALAND society makes a feature of bon voyage affairs, but it took six hostesses to stage a welcome home for Peggy Hamilton after a recent trip east. Pauline Starke, Doris Arbuckle, Priscilla Dean, Ona Brown, Mary Dean (Priscilla Dean's mother) and Shirley Moorman selected the Gypsy Lore Tea Room as a rendezvous and asked one of the press to lure Miss Hamilton thither on plea of an interview.

The six hostesses and guests, including Louise Fazenda, Vera Reynolds, Pauline Garon, Ruth Taylor, Loris Fox, Natalie Kingston, Sharon Lynn, Gladys McConnell, Anita Stewart, Jackie Saunders, Ruth Clifford, Sally Blane, Lina Basquette, and Rita Carewe, hid behind huge double doors and popped out with a loud and joyous "Welcome home!" when the unsuspecting victim put in her appearance.

"It's the very first surprise party I've ever had!" cried Peggy, after she had recovered from the shock. (Peggy herself has engineered more delightful surprises than anyone else in Hollywood).

We all sat around at the little red tables and listened to Peggy's eastern experiences, slipping off—one by one—to have our tea cups read by the "Irish Gypsy." Naturally everyone was satisfied to hear that Hollywood styles are far ahead of the east and amazed to learn of the appalling amount of cocktails swallowed on the wet Atlantic coast. "And they dare to malign the film colony and call us wild!" added Peggy, indignantly . . .

We all teased Lina Basquette when the fortune-teller predicted the event of the stork. Vera Reynolds chuckled wickedly at the news that there might be a wedding ring on her finger in a month or so (Vera slipped off her marriage circlet before entering the seer's booth—you know she is Mrs. Robert Ellis) . . .

ONE of Hollywood's youngest hostesses entertained one afternoon recently. Four-year-old Mildred Gloria Lloyd, Harold Lloyd's pride and joy, invited five little girls to help her play; the fortunate youngsters were June Caprice Millard, Nancy Payne, Joan Williams, Nancy Brown and Aimee Jarvis. Gloria is a capable young hostess and made it her business to see that her guests had plenty of ice cream and cake and bon bons and also enjoyed the various games planned by her helpful mother.

NOBODY knows how old Eddie Lowe is but his wife, Lilyan Tashman, gave a breakfast for him in honor of his natal anniversary and invited Mr. and Mrs. Frederic March (Florence Eldridge,) Lionel Barrymore, Mary Duncan, Bebe Daniels, Ben Lyon, Carmelita Geraghty, Robert Ames, John Gilbert, William Haines, Joan Bennett, Lillian Cooper, David Butler, Zoe Akin and Sidney Howard.

Bill Haines was up to his usual tricks playing jokes on unsuspecting victims, substituting salt for sugar so that everyone made wry faces over their coffee and almost breaking up the party when Lilyan discovered him in the act of pouring vinegar into the syrup jug. Vinegar on waffles—horrors!

RARELY does a week pass without bringing some pleasant social event in the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Gleason. This jolly couple live on a hill and always include directions for finding their domicile with all invitations; so when we were bidden to "come and eat hash with Octavus Roy Cohen" the other day, we were not surprised to find a curlycue map on the invitation.

The honoree, who is, as you know, a brilliant author, was much amused at the interviews he had had since coming west; he said that all any one appeared to be interested in was the fact that he had married his first cousin and that his father before him had done the same. Mr. Cohen has just written a book on Hollywood called The Valley of Olympus.

Raymond Griffith advised Phyllis Haver to go to Europe for her honeymoon but Mrs. Gleason objected, declaring that Phyllis was so much in love the trip would all be wasted on her. Bertha Mann (Mrs. Griffith) was looking particularly lovely.

Of course, the Robert Armstrongs were present. They are the Gleasons' closest friends. Then there was clever George Abbott, playwright, and O. P. Heggie, famous stage star who is now in the talkies.

MRS. GLEASON shared honors the following day at a tea given by Miss Helen Mehrman for her mother, Mrs. Henry Mehrman of Oakland, and the popular

Glorifying

Broadway with all its colorful musical comedy and soon delightful extravaganzas will furnish but for the entire nation.

Dixie Lee is an enticing bit of loveliness — no wonder she has a featured role in the Fox Movietone Follies of 1929.

Ann Pennington, knees and all, will bring the atmosphere of Broadway with her as she flits through the scenes of Warner Brothers' Gold Digger of Broadway.

Transparent slickers enhance the beauty of this scene and drive all the gloom out of a rainy day as the row of beauties line up for a high spot in M-G-M's Revue of Revues.

DO YOU remember the leading citizens' and citizenesses' New York visits? My, how they bragged! Of front tables at the Frolic, stage boxes for the Follies, whoopee, cherchez les femmes, also femina dux facti, what girls! What beauty, action, irresistible gayety!

The returned business man just made you roar, retailing the clever blackouts and funny wheezes. His wife trilled the catchy new airs, then—in tones awed or shocked—described the gorgeous peacockery of some scenes—and the near-nudes of others. "My dear, 'twas awful!" she whispered. "Don't tell the Dominie or the sewing circle."

Tired business man and night-loving spouse won't have to visit New York this year for a "rest," or if they do, the neighbors needn't envy. In every town will be a sound-film Follies, Scandals or Vanities as nearby as your nearest "wired" movie. The work of "glorifying the American girl" has been industrialized by the talkies with nearly every celebrity of the famed "girl shows" corraled in studio. Picture lots are opening up new "theatres" faster than a Fox cinema chain. The chorus-girl stock company is "it."

If you could get into the Hollywood studios (which unfortunately, you can't, owing to the requirements of the "soundies"), the change of a year would seem magic. They used to have one cabaret day or stage-set day when a bunch from a vaudeville agency or a dance school would do its stuff. The girls and the buffoons came and went. No singing, no intricate numbers, and 'twas soon over. Today, each studio is a lively college of jazz with chaps like Larry Ceballos, Sammy Lee and Earl Lindsay as the professors, and eyefuls and earfuls of clever stuff taught for weeks. Take the M-G-M Revue of Revues—

LIKE the big New York girl shows, they make it as they go along, or that was my impression. Girls' workaday costumes are even franker than beach suits, the "kids" loving to dance bare-legged with trunks and blouses of the skimpiest. Look who's here! A pretty Oriental, shaped like Venus, sans attire unless silvern loin cloth and breast tabs be deemed such! She's nominated for the Pearl out of the oyster in the marine scene, and Harry Rapf asks her to oblige. My, how that girl can dance! Whirling and prancing seductively, she drops at last at Harry's feet—raising supplicatory hands.

"How did you like it?" asks the Pearl of the Sea, who in real life is Beth Laemmle, niece of Carl Laemmle. "I can change it any way you want it."

"More—er—effects," suggests Rapf, after consulting the board of strategy. "Less movement about the stage!"

Beth laughingly nods. She'll put more wriggles and shivers into it.

They try the Pearl of the Sea number again. This time big, fat Marie Dressler emerges from the scallop, and even the staid business executives can't help laughing at her elephantine Naiad mockery. Good old Dressler! She's made millions laugh, and will again. After 43 years of stage athletics she can still bend over backward or fingertip her toes seven times, just as she used to astonish the maidenish old ladies of Coburg, Ontario.

Girls, girls, girls! Who said the movies could never rival the most complicated evolutions of Ziggy's or George White's chorus? They're at it now in a West Point musical number, "Say it With a Big Brass Band!" the rear-rank boys clinking castanets, the girls doing arms-man-

Another Gal Thrown

Untold hardships beset the path of Edwina Booth in the jungles of darkest Africa, where she is playing the feminine lead in Trader Horn, but she has fearlessly staked her life in a gamble to win stardom.

WHEN the roar of lions thunders in the ears of the movie people making Trader Horn off in the African jungles, the only girl in the cast isn't going to be afraid.

Edwina Booth put her head in the lion's mouth once before.

The inside story of this unknown extra's chance at fame proves why she was chosen from among more than 200 aspirants to the part of Nina in Trader Horn. And it proves why she has the spunk for such a hazardous job.

W. S. Van Dyke, whose Tahitan diary appeared in SCREEN SECRETS, had assembled all his cast for Trader Horn—except a girl to play Nina. Test after test was taken—none of the girls quite filled the bill. Then Van Dyke, at his wit's end, remembered a pretty blonde girl who had given him a thorough verbal trouncing three months before.

He didn't remember her name, but he remembered her spunk. She had been called to the lot for a publicity still, but through some error the girl had understood it was a "bit," for which she would be paid. So she had turned down another studio call, and then discovered she had been called for an advertising shot without pay.

EDWINA wasn't afraid. She told this famous director the circumstances, and described with considerable emphasis her feelings on the matter.

"Mr. Van Dyke was somewhat startled when I demanded a check for $7.50," Miss Booth told us afterwards, "and I'm afraid I gave him quite a piece of my mind. Well, he paid me out of his own pocket, and now, I suppose, I'll have to make good. He's got $7.50 invested in my career!"

Beauty of face and figure are not the least of Edwina's charms; it was her spunk that won for her the role that was sought by more than two hundred ravishing blondes

To go back, Van Dyke looked up the publicity stills, and found the girl who had bawled him out.

"That's the girl I want," he declared. "She's got grit. She'll need it."

And so Edwina Booth got the job.

WHAT she'll have to contend with in the way of danger and hardship will be a rigorous test. Before they sailed, Van Dyke told me what Edwina would have to face. Dangers so great that no U. S. insurance company could be found that was willing to underwrite the personnel and equipment of the daring group penetrating the African jungles to film this great epic.

"She will have every protection that I can give her, but that doesn't mean much when you're in the jungles," he said. "For example, in one scene she must face a charging herd of wild elephants. They will be real and they will be wild. When those beasts charge, Edwina will have to look out for herself.

"Throughout the picture, her costume consists of a very brief skirt of fur. She will have no hat to protect her against that deadly African sun. She will be nude from the waist up. She will wear no shoes or stockings.

"She must spend many days in the swamps. The flies and mosquitoes over there are bad enough for a naked body, but the jiggers are worse.

to the Lions!

By BOB MOAK

Edwina Booth has "charms to soothe the savage beast," and she will need them when she faces the ferocious animals that abound in the African jungles, where she has gone to play the part of Nina in Trader Horn.

"But I admire her grit. I have told her what she can expect.

"After leaving the railroad in Africa, we will travel 800 miles into the Belgian Congo by ox-cart. We will move most of the way through jungles in which there are no highways.

"She will be forced to rub shoulders with naked black men and women. Her only white girl companion on the whole trip will be Josephine Chippe, my script clerk."

I FOUND Edwina in the studio wig department, being fitted for a tall, hairy something that will adorn her head during the making of the picture.

"You'll have to talk to me here while the fitting goes on," she called to me as I entered. "They've kept me so busy for the last seven days that I'm all shot to pieces—shot inside with vaccines and outside with cameras for publicity."

Two big blue eyes shone out of a face that Van Dyke shortly before had described to me as "the perfect profile." The ashen yellow hair was topped with the big headpiece of the African priestess. As she rose from the hairdresser's chair, one guessed her height as five feet six inches; her weight about 120 pounds.

Edwina Booth was born in 1909 in Provo, Utah, where her father was a practicing physician and surgeon. When she was ten, the family moved to Salt Lake City, and, when she was seventeen, they came to Pasadena, California. Her real name is Edwina Woodruff.

"I remember how mother used to read to me for hours at a time. I memorized many of the things she read, for I decided that someday I would be an actress, and that I would train my mind to remember my lines. You see, I guess I must inherit a love for the stage. Edwin Booth, the famous actor, was my grandfather's cousin. That's where I got the name of Edwina. I took up the Booth, too, when I decided on a film career."

As she spoke, I caught a glimpse of a diamond ring on her "engagement finger."

"I suppose some one will miss you very much?" I asked smiling.

CINEMA SLANTS

Robert E. Sherwood

At this writing, Mr. Sherwood is taking passage for a swing about merry England and the continent, and future issues will find his regular SCREEN SECRETS department of comment further enlivened with slants on the cinema from the foreign view. As former Editor of Life, Mr. Sherwood is well known for his critiques of the screen, and his writings are tempered with the rich vein of humor that has characterized his work for many years.

New Policies

IT HAS always been a good trick for press agents to announce that enormous insurance policies have been taken out on the more prominent portions of some star's anatomy.

For instance, Ann Pennington's knees have been repeatedly insured for fabulous sums. So have Paderewski's fingers, and Lillian Gish's eyelids and Mae Murray's pout.

Since the outburst of sound on the screen, it was to be expected that there would be frequent sensational stories of how this or that star has had his or her voice insured.

The First National publicity experts were among the first to realize the possibilities of this. Besieged by representatives of the press, the First National officials finally broke down and revealed the secret that the Commonwealth Casualty Company had issued a policy for one million dollars on Corinne Griffith's voice.

Thus it will be seen that, if the lovely Miss Griffith should develop a frog in the throat, her press agents could claim that it is absolutely and beyond all question of doubt the costliest frog in history.

The Vocal Double

PERHAPS the First National press agents will also insure the voice of that mysterious and anonymous tenor who did Richard Barthelmess' singing for him in Weary River. Certainly, that tenor must be safeguarded and kept on the job—because it would be disastrous if Mr. Barthelmess were to have a different voice in each picture.

Broadway Deserted

YOU have doubtless heard the story of how the ancient Romans, finding themselves short of women, dashed across the border into the Sabine province and boldly carried off several alluring specimens of the local talent.

What is now happening to Broadway is reminiscent of the wholesale abduction of the Sabine women. Raiders from Hollywood swoop down on New York's theatrical district and carry off actors, actresses, directors and playwrights. Hundreds of Broadway's most popular celebrities (starting with Al Jolson) have already been taken; more are to follow.

Recently a number of people assembled for the purpose of writing and producing a musical comedy. It was scheduled to go into rehearsal May 15, and it looked (in advance) like a sure hit. The group sponsoring it consisted of three stars, a famous composer, an exceptionally competent director and a librettist of questionable ability. One day the director announced, "I'm sorry, boys—but I can't be with this show. I've signed up to go to Hollywood to do talkies." Another director was obtained, and almost immediately he, too, went the way of all flesh to the west coast.

The survivors, however, were still determined to put on the show until suddenly the three stars were afflicted with dots before the eyes and they signed on them; as a result of which they are now employed by the Fox Film Corporation.

After that, the composer came to the conclusion that he could make a lot of money writing theme songs for pictures, and the Twentieth Century Limited carried him away.

So only the librettist was left—and in case anyone is interested in his fate, I can be addressed in care of this magazine.

Nevertheless, Broadway still manages to survive, and the prospects for its future are beginning to brighten. The talkies are not wrecking the theatre; they are actually helping it.

With Sound

THE advertisements of Clara Bow's first talking picture, The Wild Party, contained the startling challenge:

"See It!—Hear IT!"

Unable to resist so suggestive an invitation, I attended a performance of The Wild Party and it is my duty to report that "IT" looks much better than it sounds.

by ROBERT E. SHERWOOD

Too Much Presentation

WHEN the powerful new producing corporation, R K O, showed its first "radio picture" at the Hippodrome in New York, it decided to accompany the all-talking-singing-dancing film with an elaborate and impressive "stage presentation." The picture was Syncopation, a tale of wild life in the jazz belt featuring Waring's Pennsylvanians band.

The presentation which introduced Syncopation consisted of Vincent Lopez and his expensive orchestra, assisted by several comely young lady soloists and a group of well-trained chorus girls.

It was very effective—in fact, too effective. For it caused the ultra-mechanical film which followed to seem dull and tame by comparison.

The great minds behind R K O will have to learn that it will take more than expert financing and colossal mergers to make for success in the film business. What is needed most of all is good pictures.

Crossed Wires

THERE was an expectant hush in the theatre when Mary Pickford's Coquette was shown for the first time. The assembled audience was excited; for it was about to see America's Sweetheart without her curls for the first time, the traditional "Pollyanna" of the screen was now to be revealed as a tragic artist.

No one, however, had anticipated just what was to be the real tragedy of Coquette. It was a dramatic development that could not have been foreseen.

Something happened to the wires connecting the projection booth with the loud speakers behind the screen, with the result that at times Mary spoke in a hoarse whisper—at other times she roared—and at other times her lips moved and no sounds whatever came forth.

It was a veritable disaster—and it proved that the new god, Machinery, is not by any means infallible.

Mr. and Mrs.

OF COURSE there is tremendous interest in the news that Mary and Doug will co-star in an all-talking picture. Just what this is to be is, at the moment, not known—but whether they appear in a play by Shakespeare or in one by Mae West, the event will be one of international importance.

This joint appearance of the world's most famous married couple has been promised for years. They have appeared inconspicuously in each other's pictures, as when Mary Pickford impersonated the Virgin in a vision scene in The Gaucho, and when Doug doubled for the leading man in Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall. (The leading man in question had to strip to the waist, and when it was discovered that his muscular development was insufficient, Doug stepped in to supply the required biceps.)

The most memorable incognito performance by a great star was in A Woman of Paris, which Charlie Chaplin directed. In one scene, in a railway station, a little porter staggered across the screen, bearing a heavy trunk on his shoulder. No one could see his face, yet there was something about his gait that caused the audience to roar with laughter.

It was, of course, Charlie himself.

Clean Talk

SCIENTISTS have advanced the theory that the ear is much more moral than the eye. This means that it is less harmful to hear a description of something risqué than it is to see that something in the flesh. Consequently, say the scientists, the film producers will be able to get away with a lot more snappy stuff in the future.

A good demonstration of this is to be found in The Trial of Mary Dugan. Norma Shearer, on the witness stand, tells the story of her scarlet past—and she doesn't mince matters, either. If that story had been visualized for the benefit of the audience, the censors would have cut to pieces. But they let it stand as Norma tells it. From all of which it would seem that action speaks lewder than words.

Brevities

VILMA BANKY'S accent is revealed for the first time in This Is Heaven, a semi-talking picture. Sometimes the accent is piquant; more often, it borders on the Milt Gross.

Alibi is an uneven melodrama, but wherever it is good it is great. Roland West, the director, has gone far ahead in demonstrating that sound can be used to heighten the effect of action. I can promise that Alibi will give you some terrific thrills.

Newspapers persistently refer to The Trial of Mary Dugan as "The Trail of Mary Dugan," just as they referred to that other Metro-Goldwyn epic as "The Trial of 98."

Norma Shearer is marvelous as Mary Dugan, and so is Lewis Stone as the attorney for the defense—but it won't bother me in the least if several years are allowed to pass before I see another courtroom scene in the talkies.

Something else of which I've seen enough for the time being is the story of the jazz-boy or jazz-girl who makes good in a big way. One of the latest, Close Harmony, is also one of the best, and it includes a fine performance by young Charles Rogers.

Not many people will have the opportunity to see the French film, The Passion of Joan of Arc, but those who do have that opportunity should seize it. Here is the silent cinema close to the summit of its artistry. Here is genuinely great drama.

Where There's a

Dangling from skyscrapers, racing death in dizzy motor rides, hazardous airplane flights and gambling with fate in wild animals' cages are all a part of the life of a film actor.

By RUTH M. TILDESLEY

WHEN you grip the edge of your theatre seat and gasp and shudder and moan as the thundering Limited flicks by to escape your hero by the proverbial eyelash, you often wonder how the actors do it.

"Do they really do those things?" you probably ask, and then you find yourself in a sweat over the frightful thrill of a girl in a lion's den, or a race with death in a careening automobile.

Those thrills are like weak tea compared to the dangers the stars flirt with to provide excitement for you. Below are told some of the outstanding risks which have occurred in the careers of screen actors, all for the purpose of giving you a thrill.

DEATH rides the moving picture trail at times, but more often her sister spectre, Danger, is in the saddle.

In Harold Lloyd's recent picture Speedy, a new scene was unexpectedly inserted when the comedian gambled with the twin spectres. Harold was driving the horse car hell-bent when an automobile suddenly appeared in his path, having broken through the traffic lines. He saw that he must either crash into the machine or hit an electric railroad pillar.

"It was a sure thing that the driver of the car would be killed if I hit him," explains Harold, "and a slight chance that I wouldn't if I crashed the pillar. I prepared for the shock, slammed into the pillar, uncoupling my horses, and was thrown clear over the dashboard. I won. All I got was a few bruises."

This was mere child's play to the comedian. Real danger to him consisted in some of the stunts in Safety Last, where he frolicked about on the steel frame of a building 12 stories from the street level, where the slightest misstep meant certain death, and no gamble.

In Girl Shy, in his chase to save the girl from marrying the villain, Harold utilized every known vehicle except an airplane. In one scene, he leaped on a fast-moving fire truck, grabbing the fire hose which immediately began to unwind. The gag was for Harold to keep on unwinding the hose until it came off the hose rack, and then fall off the truck. All went well until the nozzle flew off the hose and cracked him across the head, knocking him off the truck which was then moving at the rate of forty miles an hour. The hose gashed a six-inch cut in his head and it was a miracle his skull wasn't fractured. Two weeks later, when the wound was healed, Harold did the stunt again!

THE scenarist intended to have Ruth Elder, as the picture's heroine, make a thrilling escape from a kidnaper by leaping from an airplane 3,000 feet up in the

When time hung heavy on Harold Lloyd's hands in this daring stunt in "Safety Last."

How his audiences gasped when Harold loosed his momentary hold and struggled frantically for another grip in his "human fly" scene!

When Gladys McConnell, Pathe's serial queen, was told to drive her coupe into a plate glass window, she merely stepped on the gas.

Thrill There's a Way

Leaping from one building to another is part of the day's work to Bill Cody.

blue. According to the script, the girl's parachute would then open and Ruth would come drifting down to safe landing.

But what actually happened? Ruth's intrepid young double, Lita Wichart, a stunt actress with dozens of successful parachute descents to her credit, took the leap from the wings of the plane; her parachute failed to open and she dashed to death before the eyes of her husband, one of the horror-stricken spectators of the tragedy.

Working with wild animals needs a stout heart and a steady eye. Jacqueline Logan had had experience with a lion in one picture, and zebras and leopards in another, so she felt few qualms in accepting the role of an animal trainer in Pathe's The Leopard Lady.

The "big scene" called for her presence alone in a cage with several leopards. Four men with shot guns were stationed outside ready to kill the big cats if they turned on the pretty actress. The trainer explained that everything depended on her will, her eye and the whip, which she must keep constantly in motion.

JACQUELINE entered the cage and heard it clang behind her. She waved her whip and snapped out an order. To her amazement, the creatures obeyed. This is easy, thought Jackie, and circled around the cage barking out commands in fine imitation of the trainer, cracking her whip like an old-timer.

According to the script, the breaking of her whip was the signal for one of the leopards to attack her—the actual attack to be double-exposed, of course. Jackie noticed that the animals which had been so docile at first were beginning to snarl in an ugly and threatening fashion, but she bravely continued the scene.

Her whip snapped at the proper moment and she waved the stump wildly, backing toward the door of the cage. One vicious beast started after her in a slow, slinking way; his tail waving ominously, his gleaming yellow eyes holding the girl's in a fascinated stare. Jackie's feet became leaden. She heard someone fumbling at the cage door behind her and knew it was now or never—in a second, the leopard would spring. She stood petrified. Then someone grabbed her ankle and dragged her out

Marian Nixon—1929 Edition

Seemingly insurmountable handicaps stood in the path of Marian's career, but she overcame them all with dogged persistence. Now the microphone approves of her soft, feminine voice, and her troubles seem to be over.

By HARMONY HAYNES

MARIAN NIXON was trying to secure a little relaxation from her strenuous work at the studio. Being boxed up for days on a Vitaphone stage, even with Mr. Jolson there to make you laugh, or cry, depending upon how he happened to feel about it, is tiring. She looked a little weary, as if undetermined whether to laugh or cry. The polite way, in such a case, would have been to walk right by and leave her to her thoughts, but she's such a cute trick and has such a soft, truly feminine voice that I liked to hear her talk, so I breezed right up and said, Hollywood-fashion, "Cheer up, it might not be true."

She started. Then seeing it was no one more dangerous than a would-be-funny reporter, she smiled a little and said, "Well, it does seem too good to be true, but I guess it is."

"What's true? I didn't think we had anything like that out here."

"Why, why—that I am to play opposite John Barrymore in Captain Crack."

"Oh, at last! Well, well, just imagine a feminine voice in the making of a Barrymore picture. That's interesting. Tell me more about it."

WELL, there really isn't any more about it. Unless it's the charm still working."

"The charm? What charm? Is there something new afloat that I know nothing about?"

"No, it's as old as the hills. Just the wonderful old Charm of Three." Then she motioned me to a seat beside her. A seat which, as you may have guessed, I gladly accepted.

"Don't you realize that this is my third venture in pictures? The other two were flops. This one, the third, seems to be working.

Marian Nixon was too frail to screen well when she first came to Hollywood, but by persistent exercise she developed charms which have placed her quite definitely in the swim.

"It's a long story and perhaps a bit tiresome but I'll tell it just the same and you won't dare pretend it isn't interesting. You see, had I been born a boy I would have joined the navy and seen the world. But being a girl, and a very tiny one at that, I seriously took to heart that old motto about 'seeing America first.' I had a girl friend named Lillian Russell, not the Lillian Russell, just a Lillian Russell. We joined a very cheap vaudeville troupe and started west. Julanne Johnson was star of the troup. We had a good time on the trip but we didn't set the world aflame. However, when you are only sixteen nothing seems to matter much except the fact that the world is still revolving and you are going around with it. If the sun shines once in a while, so much the better, but if not, well, you always feel that it will some day.

THINGS were going along smoothly until we arrived in Los Angeles and then the company went broke. That left us in a strange town without a job. Sort of orphans of the storm. We took a room at the Lamm Hotel. I shall always bless that little fire-trap. It was cheaper than the Y. W. C. A. We paid exactly four dollars a week for our room—two dollars each. But even at that rate we wouldn't be able to pay it long unless we went to work. Lillian went to work almost immediately in an office at a studio, but as for me—well, I was too little and perishable-looking. No one could use me.

"Being in the atmosphere of pictures day in and day out, Lillian suggested that I try to get extra work. I did try, and I kept on trying but I

Norma Goes Talkie

Threatening and ominous, the talkies appeared on Norma Talmadge's movie horizon, but she promptly turned the dark cloud inside out and is now launched on the most exciting phase of her long and glorious career.

By HELEN STARR

Br-r-r-rrring!

SHARPLY reverberating through the sound stage, the tyrant bell shattered Norma Talmadge's wistful description of a Hollywood of days long gone by—just as all that the bell stood for had shattered the Hollywood she had been describing. A Hollywood of yellow poppies, spacious fields, delightful expanses of orange groves with their gift of the exquisite perfume of orange blossoms, and everywhere the soft-leaved peppers that had made each path a sylvan glade.

"A change has come over the spirit of our dream," Director George Fitzmaurice added hastily, and then we all stopped talking abruptly; the bell is the Mussolini of a studio sound stage.

"Perhaps it is this harsh mechanical age that has changed Hollywood," Norma continued when it was again possible to speak above a whisper. "The regiments of automobiles—the myriad metallic birds in the air—the swift living. This is an age of terrifying uncertainty."

Terrifying, perhaps, but not to Norma—if one might judge by the spirit of quiet confidence that pervaded her every word and gesture. Trust Norma to realize the problem—and then coolly, competently and unwaveringly, wring its neck!

THE talkies, symbolizing progress, have placed new and formidable obstacles in the path of the older cinema stars. They must begin again. Mary Pickford, the Gish sisters, Norma Talmadge, and other veterans must all face this new development in their profession. Mabel Normand has the spirit. She will conquer this sound problem, too, if her health permits. Small wonder, though, that many of the older stars have diverted their lives into new channels, forsaking the profession in which they won fame. It's a changed profession—and ow! But Norma, of course, has no thought of leaving the films; she's in this fight to win.

Gilbert Roland and Norma Talmadge in a charming love scene from Camille. With the coming of the talkies, Norma's voice will make such scenes still more realistic.

Norma's sense of humor is no whit disturbed.

"It all began when Hollywood bought its first motorized fire engine," she laughed. "They covered it with flowers and it was the sensation of the 1909 Pasadena Tournament of Roses. This was the mechanical ogre that scared all the mocking birds out of Hollywood. And now these new mechanical ogres are coming to send stars the way of the mocking birds!"

NORMA grew positively sentimental over the memory of her early days in Hollywood.

"Mother said I could go out West and work in a picture for Smiling Billy Parsons if he'd let us take the 'long lanky Dutch' with us. That was Constance.

"We were crazy over Hollywood. It was a garden and a fruit orchard. No rent was so low that it didn't include fig and orange trees, and a flower garden. Why, even the jail in those days was a cunning redwood bungalow half-hidden by roses! There were more horses hitched around the center of town than there were autos. (In our first car, Constance, Natalie and I drove in first gear all the way down to the Venice Speedway. We never shifted because we didn't know cars had another gear. Then the gas gave out and it stopped. We concluded we had a lemon, so we left it down at the beach and came home on a street car.) And it hadn't been so many years before that Hollywood passed an ordinance prohibiting bands of more than 2,000 sheep to be driven down the main boulevard at one time."

Norma, gazing intently into the flames of her hearth fire, sees a reflected vision of the Talmadge trio (Natalie, Constance and Norma) as they were in carefree babyhood.

At that time it was the custom that if the producer couldn't pay salaries for two weeks, the players walked out, regardless of the unfinished state of the picture. So, when Smiling Billy couldn't pay Norma Talmadge she went over to Mr. Griffith where the Gish sisters, Mae and Margaret Marsh, Mabel Normand, Fay Tincher, Bobbie Harron and Marjorie Wilson were already working.

CONSTANCE was cast for Intolerance and was unbearable at home, rehearsing, as she was, for that famous onion eating street scene that was a highmark of a great picture that first brought the "long lean Dutch" to fame. Norma played a part for Griffith opposite Bobbie Harron in an opus called Missing Links and they went to the then tiny town of Anaheim on location and for amusement took possession of the town bowling alley of an evening.

"And to look at Anaheim now," exclaimed Norma, "I rode through there the other day and it's a city of smart shops—it reminds one of Paris and New York!

"We often took scenes in the old days down at Hollywood's famous lily pond where the stems and big flat leaves of the water lilies were so firm that mothers could set their little ones on the floating leaves and they'd never be submerged. Where the glass stages of the Fox company now stand, they used to grow a fancy crop of winter cucumbers, to the stupefaction of tourists accustomed to winters forty below.

"Busch's Gardens over in Pasadena was the really elegant location. If the studio sent a cheap car to convey us to Pasadena, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Natalie and I hid ourselves under the seats, but if the studio Pierce Arrow wasn't busy in stories about the idle rich, they would send us in that, and we sat up very tall and preened ourselves like peacocks."

THE clanging bell again. Bringing us from the past to the present, with a jerk. Between scenes, Norma mumbles her lines; everyone is mumbling lines on the sets these days. Picture actors used to be camera-conscious and think particularly about their eyes. Now they are line-conscious and those little veins on the forehead stand out as they strive to remember what they are going to say. Great pains they are taking these days. Norma will rehearse and study six weeks before they record a single sequence in her first talkie.

Can it be new enthusiasm that makes her look younger than she did five years ago? How youthful she looks in her girlish sport dresses! That soft light in her large brown eyes and the beauty of her face have not changed. With admiration and excitement I watched her rehearse a tensely dramatic scene—a scene in Tin Pan Alley, Norma's first talkie, taken from the famous stage play of the same name.

This particular scene takes place in a kitchen. Norma has the role of a chorus girl who supports her lazy husband; the part of the husband is played by Gilbert Roland.

The husband lounges in from the street, tossing his hat and newspaper to one side.

At this point a telephoned report comes down to the stage from the glass-fronted signal tower where the electrical experts hold forth.

"That newspaper made altogether too much noise, Roland."

Several sections of the paper are promptly relegated to an ash can. Just the sport section is thrown; the sound reaction is satisfactory, and the scene progresses.

"Hello, mama," says the hubby. Roland is very interesting in this lazy character role—a part similar to the fascinating bum John Gilbert played in The Show. Roland's voice is deep and clear; he is going to be a huge success in the talkies.

The wife, played by Norma, doesn't answer. During hubby's absence, a girl friend has called and told the wife of his infidelity to her.

"What's the matter?" hubby asks.

"Did you stay all night with

An alluring Norma Talmadge as she appeared in The Song of Love, draped in all the conventional trappings of a seductive vamp.

So-and-so?" asks the wife. Norma speaks distinctly; her voice is rich.

HUBBY stalls. Jingles money in his pocket. There is a shout from the sound man above that the small change sounds like the rattling of tin pans. Roland empties his pockets, shifting loose matches around instead.

Hubby continues to stall regarding the accusation. But his wife has the goods on him this time, so he blurts out the truth. "I was drunk—she made me go upstairs and the cops came and made us put our clothes on—"

"Then you stayed with her—"

The modern frankness of the New York stage has crept into the new Hollywood talkie productions. They are going to tell it right out loud now, in spoken lines.

"And me like a darn fool staying home and freezing in a $15.00 coat for virtue while the other girls are wearing sables," screams the wife, almost hysterically. "Well, I won't do that any longer. Laugh that off on the other side of your face!"

Norma has an excellent memory for lines; she doesn't forget her cues. She has never done a stage production, but hopes to, later. Laura Hope Crews, the famous stage actress, is training the star to use her voice correctly. Like the good trouper she is, Norma takes the instruction avidly.

PATIENTLY the scene is done. Norma is careful to get the intonation of her words just right. It's no small task to speak them to please Director Fitzmaurice, with inflection according to Miss Crews, and with volume to suit the sound boxes of the signal tower experts above.

When the report from the glass box above says that the rehearsal was pretty good, they do it again and "put the sound on the wax."

They don't have to send film over to the developing room as in the case of the old picture rushes. The players can go into a sound projection room immediately following a scene, and hear the lines they have just spoken.

Suddenly, a tapping noise is heard. Where is it? The stage crew run hither and thither but can't locate or stop the sound. Someone opens an outside door and sees a dog's tail protruding from beneath the sound stage. Fido has a bone and as he chews, the bone taps.

It is such trivial, everyday happenings as this that cost the producers a lot of money, not to say anything about how the consequently necessary retakes try the players' souls. Yes, times have certainly changed from the days when a director at the megaphone sounded like the roar of the Century Limited.

Two famous sisters, Norma and Constance Talmadge, enjoy a week-end away from the studio at Norma's home in Santa Monica.

A demure Norma, as she appeared in the chic riding habit costume of one of her early roles.

AFTER a while, Norma joined me again and turned her attention to the present situation.

"Will I give up my career and retire, because of the advent of talking pictures? Just because I am up against a new problem? No! By this time, work and creative accomplishments have become an enjoyable habit. A diversity of interests puts one outside oneself. The dissatisfied, unhappy women, I have found, are those who do nothing.

"I think the radical change made by the talkies is the best thing that ever happened during my career. When we were kids in the beginning in pictures, we played too much. We finally learned that making good pictures requires ability, and takes work and patience if one is ever to get anywhere. Now we established stars are being stirred out of our ruts and are competing with stage players familiar with the art of learning lines and using the voice. We've always put in long hours in the studios, but now we must add new study and intensity of purpose. The transition in motion pictures may tax our strength and our ability, but the test will bring out the best that is in us.

"Adaptability! We must learn that to realize stardom doesn't mean you've got the world permanently by the tail. Mary Pickford's first talkie, Coquette, is a great personal success for her, but she worked hard to make it so. The rest of us are learning to adapt ourselves to the new changes. The adaptable will survive, and the others won't, and that's that!"

What has gone before:

CAREFREE Billie Brown, ultra-modern daughter of B. Bickering Brown, millionaire motor magnate, is engaged to Gilbert Johns, an attractive young member of her own gay set. To enable Gil to obtain a desired position in the diplomatic corps, Billie cultivates the friendship of Glenn Abbott, an older man of immense political power. Kentucky, a less sophisticated member of Billie's set, is secretly in love with Gil.

Billie invites Abbott to her birthday party. To gain her own selfish ends she carries on a flirtation with him and in spite of herself she is swept off her feet by the first real love of her life. Meanwhile, Kentucky, who is unable to suppress her love for Gil, draws him away from the others and the two find love in a burst of youthful passion.

After persuading Abbott to aid Gil in securing the diplomatic post, Billie announces her engagement to the latter with characteristic heartlessness. Abbott becomes embittered and ruthless. He takes Billie to his mountain cabin and in a burst of hatred attempts to take his vengeance by humiliating her. She realizes her cheapness and begs forgiveness. Abbott, however, resolutely thrusts her aside.

On the morning of her wedding day, Billie faces marriage with Gil, knowing that she really loves Glenn Abbott. Kentucky discovers that she is about to have a child and the three are caught in what seems a hopeless love tangle.

Now conclude the story:

PART IV

IT WAS Billie's wedding day. The gorgeous drawing room of B. Bickering Brown's millionaire establishment was a breath-taking example of what a highly paid decorator could do with a few thousand dollars' worth of flowers and streamers of satin and tulle.

Just off the drawing room the bridegroom and his best man waited nervously.

"Better have a drink, Gil."

"No, thanks," he answered shortly, taking another turn about the room. His eyes strayed absently to the window, beyond which gleamed the lake with its fringe of swaying pampas grass. He remembered with sudden poignancy that moonlight night when two young figures ran breathlessly into the darkness and fell, laughing, into each other's eager arms. He remembered Kentucky's eyes looking adoringly into his, her lips seeking his own, her arms tightening convulsively about him. Kentucky, who loved him as a woman loves the one man . . . .

BILLIE, in her boudoir, had donned her wedding gown of lustrous satin. From her sitting room came the giggles of the bridesmaids. Downstairs people were coming to her wedding.

She turned toward the window like a captive animal, and gazed toward the tree-covered hills that sheltered Glenn Abbott's cabin. He had returned to the Andes a day or two after that memorable day when he took her to his cabin and there revealed to her the cheapness of her code. He had gone without so much as a word of farewell; and Billie knew in her heart that he was the only man whose love had ever thrilled her into responsiveness—the only man who had ever made her want to be something finer than a jazz-mad modern maiden.

Two maids brought in the wedding veil. Silently Billie allowed them to adjust it on her sleek dark head. It would not be long now! Within an hour she would be married to Gil Johns, and Glenn Abbott would be but a secret memory.

NOBODY had noticed Kentucky's absence. Nobody saw her now as she slipped into the house by a seldom-used piazza entrance from some mysterious errand of her own. As she crossed the threshold she heard the first strains of the wedding march. Suddenly she realized for the first time what Billie's marriage to Gil—her Gil—was going to cost her. For a moment she sank against the wall, too weak to stand —Posed by Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Joan Crawford.

The sight of the room crowded with all the best people and members of the press recalled her to her senses. Like an actress playing a difficult role, she took her place at the altar beside Gil.

alone. To her overwrought spirit it seemed as if the orchestra were playing an old familiar lullaby. A little sob rose to her lips. She fought to conquer it. She could not break now. She must go on!

Somehow she summoned the courage to go upstairs. As she opened the door into the sitting room, Billie emerged from her boudoir, her satin gown clinging to her slender young body, the wedding veil framing her face softly. Kentucky caught her breath sharply.

"Why, Kentucky! You aren't dressed yet! Where have you been?" exclaimed Billie in mild consternation.

The child smiled up at her, fighting back the tears. "I remembered you had nothing 'blue.' You know, Billie—'something old, something new, something borrowed, something blue,' to make a happy bride. You must be happy, Billie!" she cried passionately.

"Of course, romantic child!"

SOUND and SILENT

By CHARLES DARNTON,

CHILDREN OF THE RITZ (Sound)

THIS is a story which should appeal mostly to women, because of the beautiful clothes worn by the star.

Dorothy Mackaill is the attractive society girl who falls in love with the family's good-looking chauffeur. He wins a fortune on a horse race, just as her dad loses all his money. They marry. Her extravagance leads to quarrels and they separate, but she sees her error and returns to become a thrifty housewife. Jack Mulhall plays the faithful chauffeur-husband.

SHOW BOAT (Talkie)

THIS is as good as a circus on water. The quaint picturesqueness of this big film spectacle gives it novelty and old-time attractiveness. Joseph Schildkraut plays the gambler-actor with just the right dashing, romantic air.

Laura La Plante makes the wife comfortably human and appealing.

Otis Harlan, as the easy-going show boat owner; Emily Fitzroy, as his sterner half; and Alma Rubens and Jane La Verne aid the principals in carrying this splendid picture to deserved success.

High spot: The show boat in all its glory.—Universal.

COQUETTE (Talkie)

MARY PICKFORD steps from silent to talking pictures in Coquette.

It is the story of a Southern girl whose father, thinking a certain youth has caused his daughter's ruin, kills the boy; later, discovering his mistake, he kills himself.

Henry Kolker, as prosecutor, helps Mary reach her biggest moments. John Mack Brown plays the luckless boy and John Sainpolis is the father.

High spot: Coquette sobbing in lap of negro nurse.—United Artists.

THIS IS HEAVEN (Talkie)

WE MUST believe that a poor immigrant can marry a rich American the moment she learns to bake pancakes, for such is heaven as revealed to us here.

Vilma Banky at the outset talks Hungarian freely. Later, she goes into her accent, which occasionally lapses into verbal goulash. She first flips flapjacks in a Child's restaurant on New York's Fifth Avenue, then goes out to a suburb for a day's work and lands a young millionaire.

High spot: Immigrant girl shedding wads of petticoats. —Sam Goldwyn.

SCREEN REVIEWS

SCREEN SECRETS' CRITIC

ETERNAL LOVE (Silent)

JOHN BARRYMORE in his final silent picture. This is an inane story and requires all that Barrymore can muster to put it over. It is a tale about life in the Swiss Alps, with Barrymore drunk again, and consequently glum and dull through parts of the picture. John loves a good girl, but a bad girl comes to his cabin and takes advantage of his drunkenness. He marries her.

Camilla Horn is pretty in the bloodless role of the good girl, and a little Mexican, Mona Rico, gets all there is out of the role of the bad one. Ernst Lubitsch directs.

High spot: Avalanche sweeping lovers to eternity.—United Artists.

THE DESERT SONG (Talkie)

SPLENDID, surprising, startling! The clear, full tonal quality of The Desert Song brought out by vitaphone opens one's ears to the fact that no form of musical production, not even grand opera, is impossible to the screen.

John Boles has a splendid baritone and Carlotta King sings charmingly. Myrna Loy, incredibly slender and fascinating, leaves no doubt that desert sands are hot. Johnny Arthur and Louise Fazenda offer rather old-fashioned comic relief.

High spot: Singing Riffs galloping over the desert.—Warner Brothers.

CLOSE HARMONY (Talkie)

CHARLES "BUDDY" ROGERS not only talks but sings, and does both well, in Close Harmony with Nancy Carroll, the girl with the open heart and the wide open purse. Money means nothing to her, for she's a vaudeville headliner and she believes in Buddy.

He is engagingly youthful and entertaining and what's more, he plays most of the instruments in a jazz band. Nancy gets Buddy and his band into vaudeville and everybody's happy.

High spot: Buddy piling himself and all the musical instruments into his kind-hearted girl's taxi.—Paramount.

THE LETTER (Talkie)

IN THE LETTER, we find the disturbing intelligence that a man may live with a woman twenty years without knowing her at all. Also, this is the most technically expert talking picture to mark the passing of the experimental stage.

Powerful of plot, The Letter contains lies, deceit, murder, love—strong melodrama. Jeanne Eagel's contributes the finest acting since the screen found its voice.

High spot: Gradual approach through the trees to the lighted house of impending doom.—Paramount.

JOY STREET (Talkie)

LOIS MORAN has gone whoopee. Yes, our own sweet Lois. She is the old time Lois at the beginning of Joy Street, an innocent little girl in a Swiss convent.

Then someone obligingly dies and leaves her a fortune and an estate in California. She immediately becomes the center of a rollicking rowdy set of carefree youngsters, and decides that it is more fun being a passion flower than a wall flower.

Lois does the best acting of her career. Nick Stuart has the male lead, although Rex Bell runs away with the honors.

High spot: The wild auto race down a mountainside. —Fox.

THE HOTTENTOT (Talkie)

BY THIS time you are probably aware that this isn't an African jungle picture, because if you missed the silent version of the funniest farce ever written, with Douglas MacLean, surely your Aunt Hattie has told you about seeing Willie Collier in the original stage play.

Edward Everett Horton is a young man who suffers from a mortal fear of horses and who is forced by a combination of circumstances to ride The Hottentot, a horse that has killed three men, in the steeplechase, to please his sweetheart, Patsy Ruth Miller.

High spot: Horton being catapulted onto the back of The Hottentot from an automobile when it goes over a bump.—Warner Brothers.

MADAME X (Talkie)

RUTH CHATTERTON has followed The Doctor's Secret with another remarkable characterization in Madame X and Lionel Barrymore has won his spurs as a director.

Ruth Chatterton is Jacqueline, once a lady of quality who slides down into the gutter, leaving behind her a baby boy. She finally commits murder and is defended by her son, unknown to either of them. At last she recognizes the boy's father, and knowing who he is, she wages a bitter battle to keep him from knowing her past.

High spot: Madame X coming face to face with her husband and son in her prison cell.—M-G-M.

INNOCENTS OF PARIS (Talkie)

OH! AH! Oo la la! Ce Monsieur Chevalier! He'll make you wish you knew more French. When you have seen him sing and dance his nonchalant way through Innocents of Paris, you'll understand why he was the idol of the Folies Bergere.

The story is a very slight affair about a happy-go-lucky junk dealer of the picturesque flea market district of Paris who aspires to the stage. This would be well enough were it not for the incredible complications brought about by the conventional irate father of the girl he loves.

High spot: M. Chevalier singing to a crying urchin until he makes him smile.—Paramount.

THE DONOVAN AFFAIR (Talkie)

THIS picture is a fast moving comedy-drama, with a series of triangles and two cold-blooded murders, which keeps the audience at the highest pitch.

There is no inkling as to the identity of the perpetrators of the crimes, both of which occur around a banquet table; until the murderer is captured by a clever ruse, in the dynamic climax.

Columbia has assembled an able cast for this company's first talking picture: Jack Holt, Agnes Ayres, William Collier, Jr., Dorothy Revier, John Roche, Ethel Wales and Virginia Brown Faire.

High spot: The smashing climax which reveals the murderer to the audience.—Columbia.

HOT STUFF (Talkie)

ALICE WHITE gets a hotsy totsy role that takes her from dishing out gas at a service station to college, via cash which auntie receives as an accident settlement. Parties follow and Alice gets the reputation of being "hot stuff."

She tries to live up to this reputation, but William Bakewell, her college sweetheart, sees through her pose and persists in showing her how much he cares. She finally accepts his frat pin and the flappers are happy at the departure from their ranks of their most serious competitor.

High spot: Alice and William taking shelter from a storm in a deserted cabin.—First National.

TIMES SQUARE (Talkie)

THIS 11-reel feature, Gotham's first talkie, well deserves a place among the highly interesting short features which have been attracting favorable comment.

Times Square is the story of life, love, struggle and achievement in New York's Tin Pan Alley, that district wherein so many of America's melodies are composed. With force and directness it tells the story of a discouraged young song writer, Arthur Lubin, engulfed by despair over his inability to ring the cash register with his tunes.

How he rises from his despairing failure through the aid and love of a woman, Alice Day, is beautifully and forcefully told.—Gotham.

THE TRIAL OF MARY DUGAN (Talkie)

THERE is just one discovery which you can be sure of making at The Trial of Mary Dugan and that is that Norma Shearer is an emotional actress of ability.

In fact, by the time she leaves the witness stand at the end of the big scene, you will very likely be pulling the stuffing out of the plush seats.

Mary is a chorus girl who is careless enough to have her sugar daddy found dead in her apartment. From then on, the picture is concerned with finding out whether Mary was goose enough to kill the Golden Egg.

High spot: Mary's confession to her brother from the witness stand.—M-G-M.

Hobnobbing with

By GRACE KINGSLEY

IF A dog bites a man, that isn't news, but if a man bites a dog, that's news."

Every newspaper reporter knows that old yarn about the editor's rebuke to the cub reporter.

Eugene O'Neill, playwright, qualified for the news column, we have just learned, from Humphrey Pearson, who wrote On With the Show for Warners.

O'Neill is a genial and humorous soul, despite his sad plays.

One night he came home in a gay and festive mood. He had a dog with whom he used to wrestle. That night, in a playful mood, the dog bit him and then dashed out of the house. O'Neill chased the dog till he caught him.

"Then, as he had no arms to hit me," O'Neill is quoted as saying, "and no stick to beat me with, or pistol to shoot me, I retaliated in kind. I bit the dog."

What will the wild waves be saying when Dorothy Sebastian appears on her sea horse?

Anita Page is showing George Hill, director, the key to the situation in case he should tumble out of his plane.

Another Screen Romance

SHARON LYNN and Paul Page are engaged, or on the verge of it.

When I pinned Sharon down, after seeing the pair together after a party, she got out of it by saying that Paul was serious, but she wasn't. All the same I'm keeping an eye on the third finger of Sharon's left hand.

Romance and Difficulties

MARY BRIAN and Buddy Rogers are seen everywhere together, and one wonders whether the undeniable hold which Claire Windsor had on Buddy's heart is completely broken.

Religion may play some part in the affair between Mary and Buddy, however, Mary being a good Catholic.

Religion, by the way, does play a part very often in these screen romances. For instance, George O'Brien and Olive Borden really are deeply devoted to each other, but Olive, we hear, has been married and divorced. George is a good Catholic—and so it is quite possible the two will never marry.

And Then There's Dorothy

ONE means Dorothy Sebastian, of course, who is engaged to Clarence Brown.

Miss Sebastian tells me that the reason she and Mr. Brown have not wed is because they never find time to be—that is, without hurrying right back to work.

"And that's not my idea of a honeymoon," said Miss Sebastian. However, she admitted that both hoped to find time for marriage and a honeymoon in May, after he finishes Anna Christie.

the Film Folk

Then another reason came out.

"I want to make good in some big production before I marry, in order that people won't say I was successful because I married a big director."

Tom Moore, Hero

TOM MOORE has been playing heroes so long that maybe he just can't stop even in real life.

At any rate, I witnessed an act of real heroism on Tom's part the other day out at the polo grounds of the Uplifters Club at Santa Monica.

Tom was riding in a steeplechase and was approaching the last hurdle, when another rider lost his balance and was about to fall. Tom was in a fair way to win the race, but we saw him swerve to one side as he pulled his horse that way, and the two went down just to one side of the hurdle. Neither was injured.

Chaplin's Kids Visit Him

BECAUSE Charlie Chaplin's children visit him at the studio, it has been rumored that Charlie and Lita Grey will be reconciled.

This, I am sure, is erroneous. There has been too much bitterness and there is too little in common between them in an intellectual way Charlie likes impromptu entertainment, as when he gathers two or three friends together in informal manner for dinner at his house, when there is chatter and talk of books and music, with Charlie perhaps unraveling a new puzzle of some sort, which he is fond of doing. He runs away from society life, while Lita loves a gang with "whoopee" tendencies.

The children have always visited him at his home. One day while I was up there, he pointed out a spot under some big trees on the side of the hill, hedged in with rose bushes and vines, where he said the children loved to play. As mute testimonial their playthings were scattered about there.

Polly Not Funny to Son

EVERYBODY thinks of Polly Moran as a cut-up, but to her adopted son, John Michael Joseph, she isn't always funny by any means.

"Why, she goes to church and she's awful serious," he said the other day.

"She's cross sometimes, too. Gee, I wish you could see her when I come in with dirt on my

A Dowling Success

Redheads have their day—a real Joy comes to Broadway—D'Arcy explains—Babe Ruth makes another contract—Rudy Vallee's bid for saxcess—Estelle Taylor returns to Hollywood—opera stars sign for the talkies—and other news from New York.

By ERNEST HAYNES, SCREEN SECRETS' New York Correspondent

THE night that the big talkie hit, The Rainbow Man, opened here at the Selwyn Theatre, Eddie Dowling, its star, producer and author, threw a party on the nineteenth floor of the Biltmore Hotel that had the whole town talking.

Everybody was there. Al Smith, Jimmie Walker, Jesse Lasky, Sam Katz, and so on—far into the night. Politicians, financiers, movie folk, and first and foremost, Eddie himself. Eddie's one of the toasts of Broadway. Successful star of Broadway musical hits such as Sally, Irene and Mary and Honeymoon Lane, he jumped into the movie game with a vengeance and plenty of nerve. The firm of Dowling, Weeks and Goebel organized a film company called Sono-Art Corporation and produced its first talkie, The Rainbow Man. It took New York by storm and most of the guests at the send-off party that night left just in time for breakfast.

Eddie Dowling's next picture is going to be made in New York. By the time it appears, The Rainbow Man will have made Eddie's fame nationwide and there'll be no excuse for the Dumb Dora who, when asked how she likes Dowling, answers, "I dunno. How do you dowl?"

Just Dyeing For a Pass

HERE'S a hot one. The Rialto theatre announced one day that they'd pass in free the first hundred red-haired lassies who appeared at the box office before midnight, that night, and give 'em all a chance to see and hear Clara Bow do her stuff in The Wild Party.

Along the main stem they're guffawing about the mam'selle who paid ten berries to have her hair hennaed so she'd save the buck for admission. She was the hundred and first to arrive!

Oh, Joy! This Is Rich!

A COUPLE of popular film actresses arrived in New York to appear in vodvil. Leatrice Joy came to town not so long ago and started her act up at the Riverside, the big Keith playhouse up town. While Leatrice was headlining at the far-famed Palace, Irene Rich arrived in town to do her stuff over the footlights.

As for Leatrice, I can just picture some hardboiled film producer trying to decide whether the star

Estelle Taylor club members have flocked to her standard loyally, with the result that today more than four hundred belong. Here she is shown busily signing a stack of her latest photographs, to be mailed to her ardent followers.

Fan Club Department

The columns of this department are devoted to the latest fan club news. Information about the clubs may be obtained by writing to Grace Simpson, conductor of this department, in care of SCREEN SECRETS.

The David Rollins Club

THE David Rollins Fan Club wishes announcement. Dues are twenty-five cents per year and each member gets an autographed photo of David, a news-sheet called A Rollins' Stone Gathers No Moss, and a membership card. After young Rollins' work in The Air Circus, he should have loads of fans who'd like to pay him tribute. There's no better way than by joining one of his fan clubs. Elizabeth Maynard is the president of this one.

President of George O'Brien Club Speaks

RALPH A. SAVY, President of the George O'Brien Athletic Club, writes in to say that he would like all movie admirers who are planning to form or have already formed a Fan Club to write to him as he has an interesting plan to lay out to them. He will be grateful, too, he says, if all letters are accompanied with four cents in stamps to cover postage.

Club for Norma and Connie

THE Norma Talmadge Correspondence Club, which Marie Leslie is now handling, is running once more in full swing. Dues are fifty cents yearly. Club pins may be had for sixty cents, and also club stationery. The club's main attraction is its photo exchange—anyone who sends in photos of Norma will be sent in exchange photos of any other player. They exchange magazines and newspaper pictures, besides post-card size, five by seven and eight by ten regular photographs—or, in fact, all kinds of photos and pictures. The club helps those who do not collect photos to collect anything they want if they send in whatever photos they do have to be exchanged. Connected with the Norma Talmadge Club, or rather a branch of it, is the Constance Talmadge Club. Miss Leslie writes that anyone interested in either of these two clubs will receive a prompt reply from her if they will enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Boosting Hugh Allen and David Rollins

A BRAND new club is the Wolverine Fan Club, formed chiefly in honor of those two rising young actors, Hugh Allen and David Rollins. Wayne Warrin is the President of this club and already has two hundred local members in Detroit, where club headquarters are located. Their greatest ambition is to produce an amateur motion picture sometime within the next six months, with members being used in every capacity. A story has even been selected and the cost of renting equipment and other necessary paraphernalia is now being considered. A monthly club bulletin will shortly make its bow and will be free, of course, to all members. Upon receipt of membership fee, each new fan will receive a large autographed photo of his or her favorite star and also a photo of Hugh and David. Mr. Warrin asks everyone interested in these two players to communicate with him as soon as possible.

Nick's News Parade

YOU are invited to join the Nick Stuart Fan Club by its genial President, Katheryne Berry. The way this club has been skyrocketing to success is due to the interest of its honorary President, Nick Stuart and the hard work and enthusiasm of the Berry girls. The first issue of The News Parade, the official club publication, recently came out and deserves a good deal of praise. If future issues are as good, other club editors will have to be looking to their laurels. The idea of having a full page index is a good one. Miss Berry is to be complimented on her originality. Personally, I think that The News Parade and its twin sister We, (official Sue Carol Club paper) rank well at the top where fan club papers are concerned.

in Hollywood, you know, are for three-month periods usually.

Spaghetti Rivalry

EVEN fun can originate on a sound stage. During the filming of The Green Ghost at M-G-M, Lionel Barrymore mentioned some spaghetti he had eaten in Italy. George Cooper promptly declared he knew how to make it. Richard Travers said he knew more about it.

The upshot was a spaghetti contest, with both men cooking it by their own methods. The contest was held at the home of Dorothy Sebastian, leading lady in the picture, with members of the cast present.

The contest was voted a tie. Twelve pounds of spaghetti were eaten.

Lon Chaney, Carpenter

WHEN Lon Chaney moved into his new home, Mrs. Chaney suggested that he build a bird bungalow in the back yard. Lon promised, but kept saying "manana," meaning tomorrow.

His pal, Clinton Lyle, the actor, visited them one day and reminded Mrs. Chaney about the idea. In fact he visited often and spurred Mrs. Chaney on.

"Don't remind her any more," Chaney pleaded.

Lyle got a great kick out of it all and kept on.

He dropped in on the Chaneys one Sunday. And behold, there was Lon in the back yard just putting on the finishing touches. Lyle has promised not to suggest anything more to Mrs. Chaney.

Not a Bark in a Carload

OUT at M-G-M, they've been holding an informal dog show every day among the members of the cast of The Green Ghost. The dog show takes place in Director Rupert Julian's quarters.

Richard Travers has six Scottish terriers that he won't leave home alone; while Julian himself is a dog fancier and has several pets he must take to work with him every day.

Chic and decorative atmosphere noted in the trend of fashion for the coming summer will allow American women to exercise their creative ingenuity to the fullest extent in selecting smart and fashionable gowns.

However hard it is to tell them, women should know of this new process which ends odor in this sanitary pad—a product already superior in comfort and ease of disposability.

ACROSS the counter, in offices, in drawing rooms, in country clubs—wherever women meet the world, they are in danger of offending others at times. The unhappy self-consciousness which used to follow the realization is now ended. Kotex scientists have found (and patented*) a way to neutralize all odor in sanitary pads. This cause for worry is entirely dismissed. Women can meet any social emergency with a new light-heartedness.

Fear of self-consciousness gone, too

A certain bulkiness associated with old-fashioned methods has been overcome, too. Each pad is rounded and tapered in such a way as to leave no evidence of sanitary protection.

Kotex is easy to adjust to suit your individual needs. Cellucotton absorbent wadding is 5 times more absorbent than cotton itself. There is a new softness, because both filler and gauze have been specially treated. Finally, Kotex is so easy to dispose of.

EARLE LIEDERMAN—The Muscle Builder
Author of "Muscle Building," "Science of Wrestling," "Secrets of Strength," "Here's Health," "Endurance," Etc.

What Do Women Want Most?

Women want he-men for their husbands and sweethearts. None of this chorus-man stuff for the real girl. She wants to be proud of his physical make-up, proud of his figure in a bathing suit. She knows that it's the fellow that is full of pep and vitality that gets ahead in this world. He's got the physical backbone to back-up the mental decisions he makes. He'll win out every time.

Look Yourself Over!

How do you shape up? Are you giving yourself a square deal? Have you got those big rolling muscles that mean health and strength inside and out? The vitality that gives you the ambition to win out at everything you start. Make that girl admire you first and foremost for a real he-man and the hardest part in winning her is over.

I Can Give It To You In 30 Days

In 30 days I can do you over so that she will hardly know you. I'll put a whole inch of solid muscle on each arm in 30 days, and two whole inches of rippling strength across your chest. I've done it for over a hundred thousand others, and I can do it for you. I don't care how weak and puny you are. I like to get them weak and puny, because it's the hopeless cases that I work with best. It gives me a lot of real joy just to see them develop and the surprised look in their eyes when they step before the mirror at the end of 30 days and see what a miracle I have worked for them.

You'll Be a He-Man From Now On!

And it's no temporary layer of muscle I put on you. It's there to stay! With those newly broadened shoulders; that perfect neck and great, manly chest, you can maintain your self respect in any society. Every woman will know that you are what every man should be—a forceful, red-blooded he-man.

I Want You For 90 Days

If at the end of 30 days you think you have improved, wait till you see yourself at the end of 90 days. Then the friends you thought were strong will seem like children by comparison. I'm not called the Muscle Builder for nothing. My system scientifically builds real muscle faster than you ever imagined.

Watch Them Turn Around

Notice how every woman prefers the fellow who carries himself with head up. Notice how the broad shouldered man always gets their eye. They want a dependable he-man when they make their choice—one who can protect them. And you can be that man. Remember, I not only promise it. I GUARANTEE IT.

Now don't put it off a minute. Get going to new happiness and real manhood today.

once in a while. When I worked with him, he abandoned his career as a director as least three times a week.

You could no more keep that bird from directing pictures than you could keep a pet bull terrier out of a fight. He will go on to the end of his life—making great pictures and having trouble making them—periodically announcing his retirement from the career of director.

Von is a great chap—but a little tumultuous in the emotional part of his astute and subtle nature.

Evangeline's Grave

THE beauteous Dolores Del Rio has been the means of saving the grave of Evangeline, somewhere down in the bayous.

Personally, I don't believe there ever was an Evangeline—except in the imagination of the poet, Longfellow; but I am for the project. By all means let us preserve her grave.

By the time Dolores gets through with that tough-luck picture, by the way, it will cost enough to buy Canada and give it back to France.

Extra!

WITH burning excitement, I am inspired to pass on the news to a fevered and burning world.

Some of the movie girls have found a new kind of stocking that makes their legs look bare!

I am sure that there is some compelling and very important reason why this is better than wearing bare legs. I am not perfectly sure; but that is just the way I feel about it.

Louise Writes

LOUISE FAZENDA is, I understand, strongly tempted to take on a career of authorship as a side line. Several contracts have been poked in her direction.

Louise could write or do anything else that requires brains. And like most people with plenty of gray matter, she has eccentricities. Her's is a mild mania for going to "Get-Acquainted Clubs" for lonely people, and those urged to matrimony. About once a month, Louise ambles down to one of the clubs and gets proposed to by eligible bachelors of a mere 70 years or so.

Two Rounds

I REMEMBER one time Louise invited me to dinner. We both wanted to eat a lot and yet appear perfectly refined; so we ate for a while at one café; then moved over to another café to eat a while.

Doug and Joan

IT IS high time that Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., was getting married. He is beginning to play Hamlet at little theater performances under the auspices of society dames. When he is under control of sensible little Joan Crawford, there will not be many Hamlet performances. They don't get you anything.

I have insisted for a long time that Doug., Jr., and Joan were already married. "Well," said Doug at last, "there is no use arguing with you, but you are going to get a shock when the wedding comes off."

So the least I can do is to be shocked.

Mae Comes Back

MAE MURRAY, after being given up as a screen star, has just signed a long contract with John Stahl for the talkies.

She has a fascinating voice with queer, little choked cadences. You will see that she will knock 'em over as of old. There was no reason for shuffling off Miss Murray anyhow. Any more than there was for shuffling off Mabel Normand.

Cruel Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD is a cruel place. There are always people looking for a chance to pass the buck. Something goes wrong with a picture, or a studio's yearly balance turns up red, and what they do then is to look for a victim to blame it on. Somebody always has to be the goat. There is a strong practical reason why they like to pick some one who has been getting big money, to be the goat.

I have kidded Mae Murray much in the public prints for the same reason that one likes to heave mud pies at the shining sides of limousines. But she has an alluring and interesting personality. She will again be one of the big stars of the screen.

New Stars

AFTER all, the older stars still hold the stage.

A year ago, it was announced that the decks were to be cleared, the old face cards torn up. A new layout of genius was to be taken out of the hat.

But I don't see that this has happened. There have been about four new stars within the year who have made places for themselves. Foremost of them all is Lupe Velez, who is one of the greatest personalities who has ever come to either stage or screen. The others are Anita Page, Joan Crawford and Alice White.

Charles Eaton, blond, 17-year-old brother of Mary Eaton, was a big shot on Broadway. Whenever he walked into a cafe the band went brassy to make proper welcome. He was brought out here to play the lead in The Ghost Talks. Then he was transferred to another Fox picture as a mere extra. I've seen him in many public places and no one seemed to know him.

My Life Among the Stars

put a big box of clean sand in the yard for the children. I talked so long and so persistently about children needing something clean that they finally did it. I was thrilled and I felt superior.

BOYS! By this time I was nine and met boys of my own age rather than men years my senior. There were four in particular. They ran in pairs and were entirely different in their treatment of me. Charles and Harold Sackett were cousins; Johnny and Arthur Ellison brothers. I hated the latter. They were lovesick idiots. They'd stand in the hall and watch me put on my tam-o-shanter. I'd pose and primp and give them a good look over my shoulder but I'd go home with Charles and Harold. Harold was gallant. He didn't care if the other fellows did laugh at him—he'd bring me a big, red apple and put on my rubbers for me. And although he and Charles were rivals for me, they were pals and I was a pal with them. They'd say naughty things and I thought I was getting in on something!

The main thing I learned from these kid love affairs was to be one girl to one boy and one girl to another. If they wanted a pal—I was a pal to them; if they wanted to be lovesick, I encouraged their lovesick propensities. Arthur and Charles were bright. I felt I must be bright and keep up in my studies, so they would admire me. Love is either an inspiration or a hurt to a woman. She should make it an inspiration. I laid the basis for all my relations with men during this period in Frisco.

MY AMBITION and faith in my ability to become an actress was born at this time, largely through the influence of Clara Hall, my school teacher. She was only 18, but she understood me. She liked to show me off. I'd do long recitations, acting out the meaning without thought of self—just to make her more proud of me. Down on my knees when the poem was pleading—up on my tiptoes with arms outstretched when it was appealing to a Higher Order. And her praise, her words, repeated over and over, "You are a born actress, Betty," made me feel that I was born to be an actress and must become one to fulfill the destiny life had laid out for me.

Mother and daddy realized by this time that Frisco was no place to raise a growing daughter. I showed some musical talent and they felt that they must move where I could have advantages. Salt Lake City was the nearest place that was large enough, so Salt Lake was chosen.

Ah, the cruelty of youth! I could not realize the sacrifice this meant for my parents. Father had an excellent position in Frisco—in Salt Lake City he could get nothing worthy of his talents. For a few months we lived on a nice street and I went to the finest school with all the nice children. But soon father took the last of his savings and bought a grocery store in another part of the city. I was between 10 and 11 and I did not want to be a groceryman's daughter!

The day that we moved! Will I ever forget it? My life was wrecked—my heart permanently broken. No thought of my father with his Cornell degree behind him. No thought of my mother, who loved luxury like all other women. No understanding, whatever, that their ambitions for me had forced this fate upon them. There is no such thing as failure to youth. And I was young and my father—my father—had failed. He had lost his own fine profession and turned to a common groceryman and was dragging me to that walk of life with him.

MY FATHER took ill. Tuberculosis of the most virulent description. He was an out-of-door man accustomed to the rugged life of a miner. Measuring out sugar that his daughter might have violin lessons—ah, that was what did it.

We sent him to a sanitarium and mother tried running the business. But she couldn't understand the money end of it. She sold it for an insignificant few hundred dollars and rented a big house for roomers and boarders. It was a lovely house and in a lovely district but that sign—"Furnished Rooms and Board!" My God, how I hated it! When the boys began coming over evenings—it was in 1911, and I was a high school freshman—I'd drop the sign out the window. No customers could see it at night, anyway!

Mother cooked and washed and ironed and made beds from morning until night. And then the boarders beat her out of the rent! I wanted to help, but she wouldn't let me. "Keep yourself beautiful!" she would tell me. "You probably will never finish high school," she predicted. "Just take the things which will help your appearance and your general knowledge. Take what you want; perhaps it will be your only opportunity."

WHEN I was 15 father came home from the sanitarium. There hadn't been enough money to keep him there. We built a tent for him in the yard. There he lay—dying by inches. I didn't go to see him as often as I should have. I was afraid of contracting tuberculosis. Perhaps it was wrong. I would go if it were today. But then—didn't my whole future depend upon my physical condition? But one memory stands out vividly: I would stand in my bedroom window and play my violin for him. Over and over again—hour upon hour. It was the only thing which

HERE, GIRLS,

Is a Hint from Hollywood

We've gone to the casting directors of the musical shows and to the men at Hollywood who weed out the movie hopefuls—and they all say the same thing. A girl must have lustrous hair—live-looking hair—"peppy" hair—before she can be really beautiful.

Lustrous hair is a flattering frame for every face—whether its features are good or bad. And lustrous hair is possible to everyone—thanks to Hennafoam.

The secret is the tiny pinch of henna in every bottle of this marvelous shampoo. It doesn't change the color. Oh, no. There's not nearly enough for that. But it does light the natural fires in your hair in a truly marvelous way.

You'll be delighted with Hennafoam merely as a shampoo. But it's after the last rinse that lustre comes—and what a difference! At dealers everywhere—or we will mail a sample on receipt of 10c. Just write Dept. 7-P, 511 West 42nd Street, New York City.

Fifteen years ago, Charlie Chaplin's famous trick make-up and funny smile had not yet been recognized as the mark of genius which sets him apart today. Edna Purviance is smiling archly over her fan, in this scene from The Adventurer. The big man at the left is Eric Campbell, Chaplin's "heavy," who was killed in an automobile accident in 1917.

Backtrailing Movie History

Movie personalities and developments of a decade or so ago.

ADOLPHE MENJOU, a penniless extra, decided that he was the elegant homme, so marched suavely into the most exclusive tailor shop in Hollywood and blithely ordered six expensive made-to-measure suits—on credit. The appearance of prosperity brought in $10 a day bits with gratifying regularity. His first real opportunity came when he was offered the role of the king in Douglas Fairbanks', The Three Musketeers. Chaplin later gave him the leading male role in A Woman of Paris, opposite Edna Purviance. In this picture he introduced to the screen the sophisticated, polished man of the world whose nature still included a sense of humor and human understanding.

Fourteen years ago James Cruze, who had for two years struggled in the extra ranks, was given his first big dramatic opportunity in The Million Dollar Mystery, a serial that proved astoundingly popular. The leading lady was Marguerite Snow, who later became his bride. After a successful career as an actor, Cruze decided to direct. He was allowed to try his luck with a picture featuring a delightful young juvenile, quite new to the screen—Wallace Reid. Today Cruze receives $7,000 a week at the very studios that once considered it a favor to hire him at $5.00 a day.

Before Mary Pickford's famous curls had established themselves in a stellar role, D. W. Griffith was casting her for red-skinned maids or young squaws in his early Indian thrillers. A smear of brown grease paint, a wig of coarse black hair, and her own high cheek bones make Mary a most convincing Minnehaha.

In 1922, Mary Miles Minter, then at the height of her career after Anne of Green Gables, ranked in popularity above Mary Pickford . . . Ten years ago Eugene O'Brien and Pearl White were box office bets of the highest magnitude . . . Theda Bara had just appeared in Salome . . . . John Gilbert was playing in The Yellow Stain and Arabian Love . . . Priscilla Dean had just leapt into fame in her first big role, The Virgin of Stamboul.

Back when it cost a nickel to go to the movies at most theatres and a dime in the de luxe places, a young exhibitor in Jersey City came near to landing in jail because he tried to put on a news reel. After a few weeks of showing prominent citizens shaking hands with each other, and others not so prominent doing things that might entertain their friends, Harry Fischbeck, now a Paramount cameraman, found himself in court. At that time the General Film company controlled all patents for the making and showing of pictures. Fischbeck experimented with his projection machine and found that he could not only project pictures, but make them. The court finally ruled that Harry had bought the machine for showing pictures, and couldn't use it for anything else. So he built his own camera and continued entertaining his home-towners with spicy bits of pictorial news that laid the foundation for modern news reels.

Those of you who can remember back to the good old Ince days when A Prince for a Night was a mean heart-throb, will recall its famous star, Henry Woodruff. At the height of his career, he was engaged to Anna Gould of the famous Gould family. Her parents, objecting to Woodruff's theatrical connections, indignantly packed off the fair Anna as the bride of an Italian Prince, leaving Henry to assuage his grief in strong drink. He never married.

Mal St. Clair was directing The Small Town Idol. There was a young man sent to him from the Belcher School of Dancing to do an exotic interpretive dance in it. His name was Ramon Samaniego. Today it is Ramon Novarro.

My Life Among the Stars

seemed to bring him much comfort. And one day as I stood there playing, thinking of life, what it meant—was there really anything to it?

MY mother was a wonderful cook! On Sundays, chicken and light, frothy dumplings, ice cream such as only mothers can freeze—all for 35 cents a dinner. That's something I've never been able to get over—the price of that dinner. You can see it couldn't bring enough to support us, that I realized I had to do something.

All that I knew, really, was my violin playing. My teacher was now giving me lessons for nothing. I turned to him and he sent me to the manager of the local theatre. "Because you are a pupil, I can give you only $15.00 a week, but you can have a place in the orchestra!" he told me.

Fifteen dollars a week was a life-saver for both me and mother. I played there for six months. It was exceptional experience. Playing for three vaudeville acts is no joke. You must pick up your cues, know what is going on back stage. It lays a splendid foundation for small-time stage knowledge.

During this six months, my father died. No! I didn't cry. I knew it was time for his passing. Mother and I couldn't have held out much longer. Having an invalid on your hands, even though he is your own father is pretty terrible. My mother was almost suffocated with sorrow. He was the only love of her life and even to have him near as an invalid brought inspiration. But she realized, too, he was better for him just at is happened. We sold the furniture and mother went to the Hotel Utah as assistant in the linen room.

To tell the truth, the death of my father meant freedom! As long as he lived I could never leave. I must always be the groceryman's—rooming house keeper's daughter. But now! vistas of doing something big and getting out of Salt Lake City loomed before me. I knew that the time had come—that in six months I would be out of high school, headed for fame and fortune. Just how it would come I could not imagine, but some way, some how—for now there was nothing, nothing whatever to hold to me. In a year two years—

In two years Miss Compson was in Hollywood and in pictures. In two years she had been in love with three men and nearly married each one in succession. How did she do it? Read it in the second installment of her life story in the next issue of Screen Secrets.

"They Snickered When I Got Up To Speak"

—But from the First Word, I Held Them Spellbound

THE banquet hall was crowded. Suddenly I heard the chairman's voice say—"We will now have a few words from Mr. Byron Munn." It came like a flash of lightning! He was unexpectedly calling on me for a speech!

As I started to get up, I heard a titter run around the table.

"Watch him make a fool of himself," I overheard someone whisper. "He's so bashful he's afraid of his own voice."

I knew they were expecting me to make myself ridiculous, but I only grinned inside.

I stood squarely on my two feet and started in!

"But When I Commenced to Speak"—

Almost from the first word, the smiles and derision faded from their faces. They were incredulous—amazed! Instantly the atmosphere became so tense that you could have heard a pin drop! No snickers nor sneers now! My voice, clear as a bell—strong, forceful, unfaltering—rang out through the banquet hall as I hammered home each point of my message with telling strokes! I let myself go—soaring to a smashing finale that almost brought them to their feet!

When I finished, there was an instant of dead silence! And then it came—a deafening wave of applause rolling up from one hundred pairs of hands—spontaneous, excited, thrilling.

Was Once a "Human Clam"

After it was all over, Jack Hartray fell into step beside me as I left the hall. "Gee, that was a great speech!" he said enthusiastically. "You certainly raised yourself about 100% in the eyes of every person in that place tonight . . . And yet they used to call you 'a human clam'—and the quietest man in the office!"

It was true, too. All my life I had been handicapped with a shy, timid, and retiring nature. With only a limited education, I never could express my ideas in a coherent, forceful way. As a result I saw dozens of men with less ability pass me by simply because they were good talkers and knew how to create the right impression. It was maddening.

What 20 Minutes a Day Will Show You

How to talk before your club or lodge.
How to address board meetings.
How to propose and respond to toasts.
How to make a political speech.
How to tell entertaining stories.
How to make after-dinner speeches.
How to converse interestingly.
How to write letters.
How to sell more goods.
How to train your memory.
How to enlarge your vocabulary.
How to overcome stage fright.
How to develop self-confidence.
How to acquire a winning personality.
How to be the master of any situation.

A Lucky Accident

At last I accidentally ran across a little book entitled How to Work Wonders With Words. Between its covers I discovered certain facts and secrets I had never dreamed of. Difficulties were swept away as I found a simple way to overcome timidity, stage-fright and self-consciousness—and how to win advancement, popularity and success.

Today I hold the sort of position that I had always envied. My salary has been increased! I am not only in constant demand as a speaker in public but I am asked to more social affairs than I have time to attend. To sum it all up, I am meeting worthwhile people, earning more than I ever dared expect and enjoying life to the fullest possible degree! And furthermore, the sheer power of convincing speech has been the big secret of my success!"

The experience of Byron Munn is typical. Not only men who have made millions, but thousands of others have found success after learning the secrets of powerful, effective speech. Being able to say the right thing in the right way at the right time has perhaps been responsible for more brilliant success than any other one thing under the sun!

¶ The Postal Pouch editor will answer your questions on this page. For a personal answer, enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

HELEN J.: The most popular and beautiful girl in Hollywood? Tut, tut, Helen! I'm not Mr. Ziegfeld! Conrad Nagel is very happily married—but not to Clara Bow. She is Scotch-Irish and single. Sure, Pola Negri is still an actress, though she is making pictures in Paris at present. Alice White is twenty-three, and Anita Page eighteen. Neither is married.

MARY ASTOR FAN: Your favorite was christened Lucille Langhanke, weighs one hundred and fifteen pounds, and is under contract to Fox Films, Hollywood. Clara Bow weighs one hundred and ten pounds. William Collier, Jr., has been appearing in Tiffany-Stahl productions lately, while Sally O'Neill can be reached at the R K O Studios, formerly known as F. B. O. Sally is just five feet tall, weighs one hundred and five, and was known in her pinafore days as Chotsy Noonan—with the shamrock as her personal emblem.

J. R. T.: Yes, Greta Garbo commits suicide in A Woman of Affairs. While you may see her and John Gilbert in other films sometime, it is understood that she and Nils Asther are to be screen lovers—screen, I said—henceforth. Also, the Asther-Garbo films are going to be printed on asbestos so they won't burn up the town.

BETTY H.: What sized shoes does Buddy Rogers wear? Aw gwan! I've never counted his teeth, either; but he was born on August 13, just twenty-four years ago. Write to our Fan Club Editor about his club. You wish you were Mary Brian? Well—maybe. She's a sweet youngster.

RUBY F.: You bet I remember you. We especially like old friends at the Postal Pouch. Clara Bow is twenty-three years old, five feet three and one-half inches tall, has red hair and agate eyes. No, the stars aren't too proud to write to their fans personally, they simply haven't time after working at least eight hours a day. Honestly, now, Ruby, could you work all day long, then go home every night and answer hundreds of letters from people you've never heard of? Since you must correspond with somebody "far away," try Santa Claus. Otherwise Clara is at Paramount, Hollywood.

Who Will Be Next?

Each month some star will send a personal reply to one of the letters of inquiry received by Postal Pouch. Ramon Novarro answered one of the letters this month and sent an attractive, large-sized autographed photograph of himself to Vera B. of Toronto, Ontario, Canada. Vera's letter and Ramon's reply appear below.

Dear Postal Pouch Man:

Thank you very much for the kind information I received. The weather is fine up here in "the cold lands" of Canada, as you say, and we have a swell time.

Can you give me some information about Ramon Novarro? Will you tell me his age, nationality, color of hair and eyes, height, or anything about him?

I'm coming back with more questions when I receive a reply to this one.

Wishing you loads of luck,

VERA B.
Toronto, Canada.

Dear Miss B:

Many thanks for your kind letter, and I will be very happy to give you the information you request.

I am a native of Mexico, my birthplace being Durango, and I was born February 6, 1900. My height is five feet, eight inches, and I have black hair and brown eyes.

May I take this means of expressing my appreciation of your interest in me and my work? It is indeed a pleasure to have someone interested in your pictures, and to know that you please them.

Sincerely,
RAMON NOVARRO

M. E. H.: Buck Jones is married and has a delightful eleven-year-old daughter, Maxine. William Haines is still single. Write to him at M-G-M, Culver City. Buck is not making pictures at present. It would be impossible for one of the big stars to write to you personally, but maybe some of the newest actors who get very little fan mail could manage to squeeze in an answer themselves.

SUE M.: Try Greta Nissen at First National, Burbank, where she made The Butter and Egg Man. Janet Gaynor is engaged to Lydell Peck, a young San Francisco lawyer, but she and Charles Farrell are screen lovers. Their most recent picture has not yet been permanently titled, but I think it has a Holland setting. Can't you just see our Janet in a quaint little white Dutch cap?

ELOISE B.: Yes, I am a Sir, Miss, or Mrs. However did you guess? I'm quite sure William Haines mails out photographs—but don't forget the twenty-five cents. I don't happen to have ever seen Lois Hardwick's comedies; but maybe she will grow up into a big star some day, then you can say, "I knew her when—"

A RAMON NOVARRO FAN: Yes, he lives in Los Angeles, and has two sisters if I'm not mistaken. He is going to appear in talkies from now on, and you'll no doubt hear his gorgeous operatic singing voice—rendering the Suds Song from Lux, maybe. Renee Adoree and Dorothy Janis were in The Pagan with him. Any time Clara Bow is a dead one, just come to Hollywood and tell me all about it. Can't the poor girl have a cold in the head without everybody's wanting to send her crepe and lilies? Ruth Taylor is twenty-one years old and weighs one hundred and five pounds. Marion Davies and William Haines are both twenty-nine years old—just two days difference in ages!

Love Killed Him!

¶ Prince, Rudolph Valentino's German police dog, dies of a broken heart.

STARRED by Fate in one of the cruelest life dramas in which a dog was ever cast, Prince, the magnificent German police dog and boon companion of the late Rudolph Valentino, is dead in San Leandro, California.

The dog died of a broken heart after playing out his role to the bitter end, the role of a "one-man" dog whose inborn instinct of loyalty was the powerful element of tragedy.

Valentino, struck down in a New York City hospital nearly three years ago, in the prime of health and at the height of his much idolized screen career, was mourned by millions who soon forgot.

But Prince, in Hollywood at the time, never forgot. He waited for his master to come, and when Valentino never came, Prince suddenly disappeared from the star's home in Beverly Hills.

How the dog reached San Leandro is still a mystery.

ANYWAY, four months after Valentino had been buried, Prince walked into an office in San Leandro where Miss Mildred Pacheaco, pretty brunette, was employed as a stenographer. Footsore, shrunken from hunger and exposure, his once glossy coat a snarl of hair, the big animal mutely appealed to the young lady for the comforts that had once been his.

Not then knowing she was being kind to the famous comrade and bodyguard of her movie idol, Miss Pacheaco fed and bathed the uncouth "tramp" and took him to her home. Prince still wore the collar Valentino had placed about his neck. It bore his identification.

Miss Pacheaco was permitted to keep Prince. She immediately fell in love with the gaunt-framed, shaggy-haired dog, although her tender ministrations could not appease the animal's grief. Valentino's death had left a void in the mighty breast of the police dog, which none could fill. Far away from the glamour and excitement of bustling Hollywood, under the benign sun of quiet San Leandro, Prince waited in vain for the master who would never return. None but the hands of his new mistress were allowed to stroke his shaggy coat.

The big dog was given every comfort, yet only the dead Valentino was ever to know his affection. Through the long summer days, Prince dozed beneath the sun in the yard of the Pacheaco home, his head between his paws, his eyes blinking listlessly. He never played. Sometimes he would start up, sniff at some scent in the air and trot into the street as if expecting someone. But that someone never came.

So Prince died of a broken heart.

To Those Who Do Not Know

... THIS NEW MODE OF FEMININE HYGIENE ...

THE modern American woman is envied by the other women of the world today because of her independence. She is eager to take care of herself ... anxious to preserve far beyond the allotted years the bloom and buoyancy of youth. The modern American woman is fast learning that this depends largely upon a subject too often ignored ... upon feminine hygiene.

Heretofore, feminine hygiene has been achieved at great discomfort. Seldom convenient ... under some conditions it was impossible.

No Water - No Accessories

Now, however, through the use of a harmless antiseptic in tablet form, which requires no water or accessories, American women are fast learning the convenience of feminine hygiene. Among women who know, among nurses especially, you will hear enthusiastic recommendation of this antiseptic.

These tablets are known as Pariogen tablets. For a long time prescribed by the medical profession, Pariogen is not a poison, contains no carbolic acid, cresol or bichloride of mercury, yet destroys the most pernicious germs in a few seconds.

May Be Carried in a Purse

Pariogen tablets come twelve to the tube - a tube about the size of a fountain pen. The price at any drug store is $1.00. Pariogen tablets may be carried anywhere in a purse, making hygienic measures possible almost anywhere, no other accessories or water being required.

Sent Anywhere by Mail

If your druggist is unable to supply you, or if you prefer to send direct, the coupon below and a dollar bill will bring you a full size tube of Pariogen tablets together with full directions for their use.

FAT WOMEN!

HERE IS SPLENDID NEWS

Take Fat Off Any Part of Your Body

No Drugs to Take.

No Foolish Dieting.

Amazing Discovery.

5 to 10 Pounds Off in Two Weeks!

A new discovery now makes it possible for overstout people to quickly reduce double chin, or fat bust, arms, abdomen, hips, legs or ankles at home. It's so easy and harmless that thousands who failed through other means are now getting amazing results in a few days' time.

This new external product is a white, dainty paste which you rub into any fat part you wish to reduce, at night, as you would cream. But it is not a cream and does not contain a drop of water. And the effects are almost magic-like. The parts treated with this new scientific creation, called "COLLIPASTE," are quickly reduced in size and weight, because the paste penetrates and brings about a physiological reaction, heating the surplus fat layers under the skin, the excess fat then actually oozes out through the opened pores with excreted moisture, like perspiration.

Slenderizing the figure this new, easy way is meeting with hearty approval by physicians who warn against dangerous drugs and starvation diets. The success of COLLIPASTE will surely revolutionize methods of reducing, because it is pleasant and healthful to use at night, and works while you sleep. Get a jar now and take away those ugly, fatty, burdensome parts.

Send no money, simply mail Coupon below to Dermolav Laboratories, Dept. 41-D, No. 1700 Broadway, New York, N. Y., for jar costing only $1.95. On arrival pay postman. If you are not more than pleased with reduction, your money will be refunded. Print address plainly.

How Director Howard Pulls the Strings

with her. But at the end of the third, even though I did agree with her, I said, "It may still be lousy, but we aren't going to spend the rest of our lives in a graveyard—" and that sequence was finished.

"Rod La Rocque? Ah! The swashbuckler of the cinema. He should be in the 18th century, scaling walls and riding over moats. He is terribly effective as an actor. And he's inclined to be just an actor in a character of which he is not fond. He was superb in Gigolo. But Rod had Gigolo long before he came into the picture. We merely took from him everything that he had and blended it with the other characters. He is a thorough student and very helpful. He depends upon no one to tell him about it. You may say, 'Rod, you are going to play an aviator in the Lafayette Escadrille,' and when he is called for the first day he comes in just like an aviator to the last detail of makeup and costume.

JETTA!" he smiled, rose and paced the floor, a bit hurriedly, unevenly.

"Well, she's the kind of a girl, who, if she were the greatest star in the world and were looking at one of her own pictures over the plaudits of a large and enthusiastic audience, would shrug her shoulders and say, 'The picture is wonderful, but it should have been much longer.'

"She is an amazing creature, that Goudal woman. She is the most brilliant woman in pictures. She knows more about a story than any director who directs her. Every story has its weaknesses and because Goudal is keenly aware of them she is constantly in a state of turmoil.

"Did you ever meet a woman whom you could kill at times and yet who fascinates you? She will leave the set on Tuesday evening gracious and kindly and on Wednesday morning walk in and speak to no one. She will pout and sulk and be tactful and beguiling and after you put all her moods together you will find she has given you a picture which is splendidly acted and intelligently perfect.

"I directed her in White Gold. The morning she came in and refused to speak when she had left the evening before in perfect good humor, I went over to her and said, quietly, 'If you're feeling badly, I'm sorry. Perhaps you'd rather not work today.'

"A shrug was my answer.

"We did another scene. She was perfectly indifferent. My patience was exhausted. I went over and said, 'You're no help to me here or no help to the picture. Please go home. When you feel better, come back, and not until then."

SHE looked around like a surprised child for a moment, but finally went home. She came back in a few days and resumed work as though nothing had happened. But there is certainly no set way to handle this woman. She's the kind I'd like to number among my interesting frineds, but the kind with whom I'd never want to make another picture.

"Schildkraut and Dresser? They are removed from the usual run of Hollywood players. Their characters are mellow, rounded out on the stage and screen of life as well as make-believe. They have reached the point where their viewpoint is solid and sweet and lovely and they make work a joy for the director.

"Janet Gaynor!" William K. Howard paused, rose, started pacing the floor again, but in different strides from when he had discussed Jetta. Now they were firm and assured. And his long, indrawn "Ah" was a cross between a sigh and an exclamation point.

"She is the greatest feminine personality in pictures, and she hasn't even started! When they stop making her suffer and she is permitted to show her talents as a comedienne, as well as an emotional actress, she will reach a peak surpassing even Seventh Heaven.

"A director has only to explain. He doesn't even rehearse. It is wonderful how she gives to the screen more than you have thought of yourself. Her frailty is her one great hazard. She gives so much of herself that 12 weeks on a picture is likely to leave her in bad shape physically.

"She's like a little mouse, with all the emotional qualities of Gish, but where Gish is ethereal, Gaynor is womanly. You can imagine her married to someone—the mother of little children.

"She absorbs a scene with one telling—and then she gives it something that just telling could never give her. Her acting is a gift, like the voice of Caruso or John McCormack!"

In forthcoming issues other directors will tell you how they handle the stars whom they direct.

SOME Paramount guests were being entertained in Buddy Rogers' dressing room. Buddy was strumming away on his miniature piano. Mary Brian was there too, listening intently. One of the guests spoke up:

"Miss Brian, do you play?"

Mary smiled and nodded.

"A little," she said.

"How's your Chopin?"

Before Mary had time to answer, Buddy whirled around on the bench and said, "Show pan? Great! Didn't you ever see her on the screen?"

"Yep."

Wilhelm ever assembled at Potsdam. Special spurs that tinkled as we walked. Jack boots, white buckskin breeches, a red jacket, a hat with a plume.

BY the time nine months was up, I was still a kid, but I knew something of the rudiments of soldiering. I knew the sort of horseplay to expect in the barracks and the pranks that were played. I also knew that some day I was going to get the big plate of meat that "Daddy" Cooper dished up for himself every meal at the mess table. Cooper was the official mess master. The plates were always lined up for his filling. First the meat went on them, then the "gob-stick" slapped down the vegetables. And every time Cooper, himself, got the biggest hunk of meat by calling "Time!" and grabbing his plate before anyone else had a chance at it. I made a plan to outwit him.

This day they had turnips. I hated turnips, anyway. So when Cooper was ladling them out, and just before he came to his plate, I yelled: "I don't want turnips," and grabbed the plate. The "gob-stick" of turnips landed full in my face. And my fist landed in "Daddy" Cooper's eye. It developed into a beautiful "shiner." But I got the plateful of meat.

There was an official investigation. We were brought up before Colonel Bingham, who is now General Sir Cecil Bingham. He asked for an explanation.

"He was a-chewin' the fat to me while I was a-dishin' out the mess," Cooper told him.

"We can't have our men going around the barracks with black eyes," the Colonel told me, seriously, with a grin lurking behind his eyes. "Your leaves will be curtailed until Trooper Cooper's eye returns to normal."

Every day, then, I'd cautiously examine Cooper's eye. We weren't on speaking terms, but I would manage to see its progress. Finally it was but faintly yellow, with a tinge of green. I went to Colonel Bingham. "Trooper Cooper's eye is about well, sir. It's just about as good as new. Could I have my leave now, sir?"

THAT night Tom Elborn and myself, in red jackets, skin-tight trousers, gloves, sticks and tinkling spurs, paid a social visit to a neighboring pub. We walked up to the bar, three shillings jingling in our pockets, and ordered "two ales and two bitters."

Down the bar a distance was a corporal of the Royal horse artillery. Between the Life Guards and the Royal Horse was terrific rivalry, particularly because the latter rode to the right of the line on parade. The corporal ordered a whiskey and soda and moved down toward us. He raised his glass and in tones that could be heard all

The Stockingless Style

—the infallible test of a woman's daintiness

Imported along with other chic fashions from France, the stockingless style is sponsored by America's smartest younger set. But—it is a style you can only enjoy when you know that your legs are absolutely free of superfluous hair.

Before you go without stockings, or even before you put on your lovely, sheer, all-revealing hose, use Del-a-tone Cream.

Snowy-white, faintly fragrant, it will quickly and completely remove every trace of offending hair from your legs—leaving your skin soft and velvety smooth.

Dainty women find Del-a-tone indispensable, too, in removing hair from under-arm, forearm, back of neck and face.

One trial will convince you that it has advantages to be found in no other product of its kind. Send coupon today for trial package.

Del-a-tone Cream or Powder—at drug and department stores or sent prepaid in plain wrapper, $1. Money back if not satisfied. Address Miss Mildred Hadley, The Delatone Co. (Established 1908), Department 97, 233 E. Ontario Street, Chicago.

Hard to Get

She had heard Marty speak a hundred times of Jerry Dillon who was day floor man in the garage where Marty worked. But she'd never dreamed that Jerry Dillon could be the interesting young man in the Rolls-Royce who didn't seem to think that a drive downtown rated anything more than a thank you and a smile.

"Well," Jerry remarked, "I didn't know you were the sister of any such lowbrow as Marty."

"You never can tell," she replied, which is true enough.

BOBBIE was afraid that Dexter would come and when something was said about riding out to a roadhouse she was ready in a minute.

The car at the door had caused a stir in the neighborhood but it wasn't the Rolls-Royce. That had been a car he was tinkering up for somebody. But this one had Rolls-Royce parts in it, he said, and parts of almost all the other makes you could think of off hand.

They ditched Marty and made an evening of it, such an evening as Bobbie hadn't had in a pale blue moon. And yet, after all, Bobbie thought, what was the difference between this and a hundred other evenings?

Only this, perhaps, that Jerry's iron hard arm thrilled her and Jerry's line brought easy smiles and Jerry's dancing feet played a merry little game of tag with hers till he told her she'd forgot how to loosen up and dance as though she enjoyed it.

She was a little glad that Jerry didn't buy her drinks, and didn't take anything himself, in fact. And she, when they rambled on to a midnight spread, ordered chicken a la king instead of lobster a la Newburgh.

Oh, it was a different evening and mostly so that she didn't have to think about being the hard-to-get kind. He didn't even kiss her much when he said good-night. Not enough, to be exact.

She slipped into the dingy flat earlier that night than she had in weeks and shed in the dark of her room the dainty finery that had always meant so much to her without really thinking about it at all.

Suddenly in the dark she stood motionless for a moment remembering not only that he hadn't lingered, hadn't put any hidden meanings in his goodbyes, but that he hadn't said anything at all about seeing her again.

Her thoughts were winging now to the telephone book, to the call she would put through some time to the garage where he worked or to the house where Marty had told her he lived with his mother, not at all the kind of mother she had met once so casually with Dexter Courtland.

IT DIDN'T help any in the morning for Marty to tell her that she needn't go chasing Jerry Dillon. He had enough girls after him already. And was he hard to get!

"Well," she snapped, "if I chase anybody it will be the first time. Mr. Jerry Dillon needn't think he is a little tin god on wheels."

In this mood she accepted Dex Courtland's apologies with his roses that day and promised to show him a peach of a new dancing place.

And so, without an idea in the world that Jerry Dillon was peering under the hood of his car a few blocks down the street where it had played him false on the way to her house, Bobbie Martin piloted Dex Courtland and his Rolls to the new little dancing place and wondered what had happened to it in twenty-four hours.

When Marty and Jerry reached the spot an hour or so afterward with a couple of girls they had "picked up" there was the making of minor drama, and for no reason at all Bobbie wouldn't look at Jerry across the crowded dance floor, nor would Jerry look at her.

TO make matters worse, Bobbie paid no attention to Dex and presently he lost a little of his high social polish and marched her out of the place and into the big car.

"Where do you think you're going?" Bobbie asked him as he ran the needle up to seventy in a straight bit of road headed away from home.

"I don't know and I don't care," Courtland growled. "But I know this, you aren't going to play me anymore. I've had about enough."

Bobbie froze into silence and wondered what Jerry would say if she jumped out and killed herself.

The car lurched into a side road presently and when it rode to a stop the young lady who knew her way around and who could take care of herself found that she was fighting breathlessly in the arms of a man she despised.

He threatened first that he would make her walk back and then he tried to apologize to the empty night but his temper was gone at last and he jammed the clutch in viciously and found another way back while Bobbie Martin marched head up and with flaming cheeks along the pavement back to town.

IT WASN'T many miles before she stumbled upon a crazy machine with a young man's head beneath its hood. The tears in her eyes hadn't blinded her to the fact that it was Jerry's car and that it must be Jerry's head under the lifted panel.

Her heart sang for she knew that Jerry had ditched the other girl and gone in quest of her, but when she spoke to him his face frightened her.

He looked at her steadily for a moment and then turned back to the troublesome mechanism of the car.

A little sob escaped her but he paid her no heed.

She dropped down upon the running board, her face in her hands.

She heard him talking to himself, talking terrible things to the car that had failed him, talking garage profanity that made her heart leap with a wondering joy because she knew he had cared, because she knew that he had tried to find her—tried to save her.

He spoke to her for the first time, as he carefully closed the hood of the car.

"Where," he demanded in tones that chilled her heart, "is your boy friend? Is he through with you, too?"

She sprang up with eyes that flamed. She sought to speak but couldn't trust her voice. Then she swung about and, head high again, strode as proudly as she could down the moonlit pavement.

"Hey," his voice boomed in the night.

She stopped but did not turn. With all her will she sought to take another step forward but couldn't. She stood there and swayed, wondering if she were going to faint.

COME back here," he ordered as rudely as any man might speak to —that kind of woman.

Her proud heart told her that she wouldn't hear him, wouldn't heed his command but her aching feet played her false and led her, trembling, back.

She felt his gaze, deliberately avoiding hers, fall to her broken slippers. Then he turned away and strode into the circle of light before the head-lamps of his car.

"Come here," he commanded again and, fighting against the command with her weakening will, she followed him into the glare.

Now her eyes turned from him. Her cheeks grew warmer, flamed with chagrin if not with shame. But she knew his eyes were still upon her feet.

Those broken little slippers told their own story. Without her knowing it they pleaded for her. He knelt down in the road before her.

"I guess," he said slowly, "I guess—your slippers—tell the story. I'm a damned fool."

And now she was in his arms there in the gleam of the headlights and forever after she forgot about being—hard to get.

Her Own Secret

DURING the filming of The Doctor's Secret, at the Paramount studios, the microphone picked up a peculiar swish-tock, swish-tock, swish-tock sound which technicians with the sound devices could not trace. The noise was distinctly audible in a sequence wherein an English maid entered a room in response to a call from Ruth Chattreton. The electrical system was checked for flaws, but none were found. And then a keen-eyed technician discovered that the peculiar sounds synchronized perfectly with the maid's steps as she walked.

The girl was knock-kneed.

over the pub, he said: 'Here's to the right of the line, and the pride of the British Army—the Royal Horse artillery!"

He repeated it three times, so I went over and knocked him through the glass door. It was after that I met Colonel Bingham for the second time, and it was decided that the cost of the new door would come out of my pay.

I SHOULD have learned by the time kit inspection came again not to throw my fists around promiscuously, but fighting was second if not first nature to me. I had already won first prize as the champion boxer of the regiment, along with a prize for rifle marksmanship, sword competition on horseback, lance jousting in the field, and had dueled before the President of France and Prince Edward at the Agricultural hall. But, no, I had to fight.

This time I had my kit all laid out for inspection. Socks, shoes, underwear, uniform, all spread out on my bed. I turned my head and turned it back to find my socks gone. There was only one person who would have taken them. "Did you take my socks, you blinking fool?" I asked. We had to pay for our uniforms and accessories out of our salary. He didn't deny it.

"Well, you can meet me in back of the dunghill at three o'clock and bring your second."

And so, after the dunghill incident, I met Colonel Bingham in an official capacity for the third time. This time he said, "What you need is a damned good hiding."

I was about six feet two by that time and few could administer it. Least of all did I expect my father to. But he did. When I was seventeen and a half, my family, by parental right, had me released from the army. In so doing my father didn't give me a physical beating, but it was far worse, to my way of thinking. I was no longer a soldier. I was a veteran without a battle. I went home to Kent, but I still had an itching heel.

NOW then, it wasn't long before I was restless. I read, eagerly, the glowing advertisements of the Golden West, of Canada where a Briton should go. I read again the accounts of my father's work in South Africa, when he trained troups in Madagascar; of his adventures in Mauritius. I wanted to be on my way to carve out a future of my own. My father felt my impatience and advanced me funds to go West.

When I was 18, I was aboard the Lake Champlain, steerage, bound for a new world. Across from me at the mess table sat a big burly fellow with hands like huge mutton chops. His arms, even down on his wrists, were tattooed. He Coogan's Crown for Sonny Boy?

Moulded in the same stamp as Jackie Coogan of earlier film fame, Davey gives promise of leading a successful life on the screen and has already in a large measure taken the place of his youthful contemporary. He remains, for all the attention given him, just Davey Lee, a little four-year-old boy who would rather play in the sand pile than be a star.

True to Type

time. That was my first camera work. At night I did a number on the Century Roof."

The lead that brought her to Hollywood, from Mr. Ziegfeld's shows where she had done her bit to glorify the Follies, was opposite Monte Blue. The picture was called A Perfect Crime.

"And I am afraid it was as far as my acting was concerned," said Jackie, lips a little crescent of mirth, tapping her cigarette in a small brass tray. "I should have done bits and minor parts, lots of them, before I attempted anything as pretentious as a lead. But I didn't. That was one mistake."

JACKIE was so bad, if you'll believe her, that she was immediately given another lead. And another and another and another. Figure it out for yourself. The producers did, and kept on giving her bigger and better parts. They knew a good bet when they saw it, even if Jackie thought she was a total loss.

"My second experience as leading woman was about as bad as the first. And it was all my fault. Tom Meighan had always been my favorite actor and when I was cast to play opposite him, all I did was stand around and gape. I was all awe and adoration. When I should have been acting, I was watching Tommie. And even when I wasn't supposed to be acting, I was watching Tom. 'My performance was frightful."

But Jackie's star was as much in the ascendency as was great-grand-uncle John's when he formed the Thirty-first Regiment of Illinois Volunteers and marched forth as Colonel to help free the slaves. She acquired a Paramount contract and it was only when she signed with the Thomas H. Ince Company that trouble frowned. With Mr. Ince's death, the company went to pieces. All of Jackie's high hopes were shattered. Like all other players under contract to Ince, she was out in the cold.

"What was there to do? You can't sit and fold your hands. You have to keep going. There were no contracts forthcoming from other big companies. I made some small independent pictures. 'Quickies,' you know."

In those days of five years ago, "quickies" were pariah dogs, skirting the edge of Hollywood, obliged to show their wares at small, shabby theatres. Unhonored and unsung, they were beyond the pale. But times and "quickies," like women, have changed. However, it was with no less bravery than the other Logan showed at Fort Donelson that Jackie went into the independent field. And won.

THINGS went well for a time. As well as Sherman's triumphant march through Georgia with General Logan in the vanguard. Our modern Jackie signed a Fox contract. But met with other difficulties.

"I was put in parts to which I was utterly unsuited. Plays that had already been bought and, therefore, must be produced. It was a very unhappy circumstance."

It was all part of the gaff. When Jackie finally signed a contract with Cecil B. De Mille to play the part of the repentant Magdalene in The King of Kings, she breathed a sigh of relief and thought her troubles were over. They were—for a while. But only for a while.

IT WAS not only that. She was having troubles outside of pictures. A certain dashing Ralph Gillespie had laid seige to her heart and in a month had won it. He was something of a broker. A very charming fellow. But he didn't work at his craft, and things were all wrong. It ended by divorce, after a year.

That being dispensed with, the course seemed perfect for clear sailing. But not so. The De Mille organization was absorbed by Pathe, Cecil B., himself, transferred his artistic talents to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, and all those pretty gelatins that Jackie had made with Bill Boyd and Alan Hale—Power and The Cop and the rest—were things of the past.

It was enough to make anyone commit early matrimony at Agua Caliente, the Mexican resort. Which was exactly what Jackie did. A tentative marriage to Larry Winston, which to become valid, would have to be repeated on this side of the border after the Gillespie divorce was a year old.

But there's still the grand old Logan pluck and luck and valor. Free-lancing and doing well, thank you, which would cause the twinkling eyes of General John Alexander to beam.

Meet Mrs. John Gilbert!

screen. Many have been the rumors of romance to link Gilbert's name with fair Hollywood stars. Even a few months ago we heard of his long distance telephone calls to Greta Garbo during her visit to Sweden. Once they were nearly wed. Others, too, have figured in these stories of romance, and for years the matchmakers hoped for something to come of Gilbert's affection for Renee Adoree. They failed to realize that this was a brother-siser attraction; that these two would never be sweethearts.

John has written his own surprise ending to all these surmises. May the last words be: "They lived happily ever after!"

Tourists who found it hard to get into the studios are up against a still harder obstacle now. No one can go on sound stages, least of all, those outside the profession.

McLaglen—Soldier of Fortune

was about 30. A rugged sort of chap, full of energy. I liked him. We struck up an acquaintance. He told me he had been 10 years in the British Navy. His name was Jack.

Here was the kind of man, I thought, who would be good on a homestead. The government offered 160 acres to everyone who would improve them. By the time we landed on the coast of New Brunswick, Jack and I were pals. We made our way to a little town near Montreal, and sat down to figure out a way to earn enough to stake ourselves on our homestead. There was food and bedding and clothes to buy.

A farmer named Grove needed two men, we heard, and soon we were trudging down the road to his house. But he wanted only one. I got the job and Jack walked on six miles to a friend of Grove's who also wanted a hired hand.

At meal time I could have eaten a whole joint of beef myself. They ladled out a small portion. Once I gathered enough courage to ask for another helping. Grove, a big hulking man who ate with his knife, looked at me and said, reproachfully, "You're hungry tonight!"

I WOULD have stayed there longer, because at least it was a place to lay my head, but one day, Grove ordered me to take a pig to town and while I was chinning with the man with whom I was to transact business, he told me I was too smart a boy to waste my time there, when they were picking silver nuggets off the ground in Cobalt, up near Lake Timiskaming in Northern Ontario.

That night I bundled up my few possessions and walked the six miles to where Jack worked. I got there at supper time, to see Jack seated at the head of the table with his employer's 11 daughters waiting on him and the old man asleep upstairs. Jack joined me in the hayloft and I told him Grove and I were at quits; that I wanted to be on my way to Cobalt and silver. Jack debated a moment, a stealthy moon picking up the scars on his chest where an open shirt revealed them. They were scars inflicted by Chinese during the Boxer Rebellion, he told me. He was thinking, probably, of the 11 daughters, the old man's health, which was none too good, and of his natural succession to head of the house, and then he put his hand in mine: "Kid, I'm with you." We slid out of the haymow and in half an hour we were on the road, bound for Ottawa to board a train that would take us as far as our money would permit.

The money wouldn't have taken us very far, and we were prepared to walk, but we met up with a crew of Italian road workers bound for Bird's Creek. One of the foremen asked us if we didn't want to go along as crew leaders, and we did. We soon eased our way out, however, and shoved toward North Bay, on the road to Cobalt. North Bay, then, was a rough and ready little town, full of miners. We struck an inn that night and Jack won over the miners with his ballads. He sang Brave Robert Emmett and The Song of the Thrush, while the tears streamed freely and one old miner got up and passed his hat until it was full of clinking coins. Enough to send us to our destination.

ON THE train to Colbalt, we met a little Russian-Jew named Silverman. He promised me a job at $2.50 a day, when we arrived in Cobalt. It was a squatter's town, built on the left of the railroad track. There were no hotels. We stopped at a Syrian's place. Twelve bunks in a room. A blazing stove. Outside were men in moccasins, knitted caps, whiskers. It was a typical Northwoods town.

All that night Jack lay in his bunk staring at me out of strange, glassy, unseeing eyes. "Jack!" I called, peering down into the dark at him. "Jack, old fellow! Come out of it." He only stared, unhearing, unheeding. That was an eerie night, with that maniac staring through the dim room at me.

I have had frights. Nothing, to this day, will make me walk down a dark stairway without a flashlight in hand. Once, in England, I stepped on a woman, a woman of the streets, as I walked down a dark stairway. I shall never forget the feel of soft flesh beneath my foot. Nothing can induce me to walk backwards, because I received a terrific blow from a lamp post once when doing that. Those are the only two things that I, now, have any definite fear of. But I shall never forget that strange night with Jack crouching in his bunk, his eyes gleaming at me.

In the morning, I went out to get some grub, and while I was gone, Jack went completely mad and they had to restrain him. They took him away.

THERE I was, a kid of 19, with $40 accumulated, sick to death of the Syrian's place, craving to get into the open. I went about two miles out of Cobalt into the tamarack woods, smelling of pine, agleam with cedars and maples, and hewed me some logs. I built a sizeable cabin and, funds exhausted, sat wondering about a roof.

DRAMA

ALIBI—A cabaret and a murder, with Regis Toomey doing the dying in Harry Stubbs' palatial night-life haunt. The work of Mae Busch and Irma Harrison helps to swing this picture into the first rank of the talkies and it may be counted on to give The Broadway Melody a run for its money.—United Artists.

WILD ORCHIDS—A gorgeous story of life in Java, with Greta Garbo falling for the fatal charms of Nils Asther, who plays a Javanese prince in this opus. But Greta's married to Lewis Stone, who, in a fit of anger, exposes Nils to a tiger, only to later relent and prove himself a gentleman.—M-G-M.

THE IRON MASK—Douglas Fairbanks and Marguerite de la Motte race through a picture alive with romance and as thrilling as only Douglas can make motion pictures. It proves that although well along in his forties, Doug still remains the most romantic figure in the world.—United Artists.

THE MAN AND THE MOMENT—Billie Dove and Rod LaRocque make a good picture out of Elinor Glyn's story. It deals with Madame Glyn's favorite plot of marrying the girl and then having her torn away from her husband on the eve of their honeymoon. Airplanes add a snappy touch to the picture and the minutes fairly fly!—First National.

THE LEATHERNECKS—William Boyd, Alan Hale and Robert Armstrong are buddies in the Marine Corps, who get into beaucoup trouble when the scenes shift from France to Russia to China. There is plenty of excitement and red-blooded action in this film. —Pathe.

WOLF SONG—Lupe Velez and Gary Cooper go through numerous love scenes which look for all the world like the real thing. Lupe sings industriously throughout the picture and does a good job of it, too.—Paramount.

THE FLYING FLEET—Ramon Novarro has the whole U. S. Navy supporting him in this production. Anita Page and Ralph Graves contribute enough of their personalities to rate a good word. The most effective aerial photography since Wings, will greet you here. There is a lost plane and a thrilling rescue, with Ramon providing the hero's tricks. —M-G-M.

THE BROADWAY MELODY—Bessie Love stands out in this splendid story of the Great White Way. Anita Page is her attractive sister. They play a vaudeville act and the unstable affections of a song writer do much to complicate matters. A new high mark in talking pictures.—M-G-M.

THE DIVINE LADY—Corinne Griffith and Victor Varconi play Lady Hamilton and Lord Nelson in a glamorous account of the historic romance. The climax, of course, occurs at Trafalgar, with impressive naval scenes.—First National.

LADY OF THE PAVEMENTS—Lupe Velez contributes effective work in just a fair picture. Love and lechery in diplomatic circles and a demonstration of love's triumph over social obstacles keeps the opus in the mediocre class. —United Artists.

THE CANARY MURDER CASE—S. S. Van Dine intrigues picture house audiences with a clever mystery story talkie. Clever stuff—Paramount.

DESERT NIGHTS—One of those stories with a light plot, but John Gilbert's presence, together with the charming personality of Mary Nolan, helps to keep the picture from obscurity.—M-G-M.

THE DOCTOR'S SECRET — Ruth Chatterton, H. B. Warner and John Loder make a good talkie out of Barrie's Half An Hour. For adults only.—Paramount.

IN OLD ARIZONA—Actual sounds from God's great outdoors help make a genuine wow, although the story, by O. Henry, is a wow to begin with. Warner Baxter and Edmund Lowe are excellent.—Fox.

SHOPWORN ANGEL—Gary Cooper's innocence and Nancy Carroll's inky past combine with tortures of war-time heartbreak to make this film.—Paramount.

COMEDY

THE DUKE STEPS OUT — Bill Haines in another of his inimitable sketches. Gwen Lee and Joan Crawford help speed up the action and manage to keep pace with Bill in a rollicking story of college, the prize ring and love.—M-G-M.

SPITE MARRIAGE—Buster Keaton flashes his poker face in this side-splitter. Dorothy Sebastian furnishes the romance, but leaves Buster flat and marries another.—M-G-M.

WHY BE GOOD?—Colleen Moore and Neil Hamilton play the shop girl and the son of the store owner, respectively. How can Neil help but fall in love with Colleen? He does and everybody's happy—First National.

THE GHOST TALKS—Helen Twelvetrees, a film newcomer, but an accomplished stage actress, acquits herself well in this mystery farce.—Fox.

SHOW PEOPLE—Marion Davies has Bill Haines to speed along this highly entertaining comedy, which shows a background of other movie celebrities. —M-G-M.

The WOMEN who fascinate MEN

what is their dangerous power?

THE siren type—the woman who fascinates men at will. One woman in a hundred possesses this dangerous power. She is envied, hated, feared—by other women. And she has always been a mystery. You study her—and are amazed, bewildered. For you can truthfully say "I don't understand what men see in her."
But you want to know the secret—with all your heart. You want the "dangerous power." It is not that you desire to be the siren type. If you could fascinate men at will, you would use your power within reason. Well, then, you may; for at last the secret is known. Lucille Young, the world's foremost beauty expert, will give you the "dangerous power"—give it to you free.

Nature's Greatest Mystery Unveiled

All your unavailing study of fascinating women, your failure to succeed by like methods is easily explained. Nature has never desired a race of women, all fascinating. Her plan is for limited charm. She has said, "I'll give women just enough attraction to marry, and mate." But to a few women she has said, "I'll give the dangerous power of complete fascination."
You know that this is nature's plan—though you may never have thought of it in just this way. Instead, you have been puzzled. You have seen fascinating women possessed of no more than average looks—some that you may have considered homely. You have seen women with poor figures outshine women with perfect figures. You have seen women of refinement cast into the shadow by coarser women. You have heard of "sex appeal," yet you know that thousands of women have resorted to physical charms as the main reliance—with inevitable failure.
Strangest of all, you may have known some dangerously fascinating woman as a friend—known that she was willing to give you her secrets. But she could not. For Nature, most cleverly, has made her natural sirens blind to their own methods.

One Woman in All the World Can Tell You

Amazing, perhaps, but—so far as it is known—Lucille Young is the one woman in all the world who knows the complete secret of fascination. A certain amount of beauty is indispensable. This beauty Lucille Young gives you through her methods—admittedly the most effective in the world—used by scores of thousands of women.
But more than beauty is absolutely necessary. Countless beautiful women are not fascinating—hardly attractive—as every woman knows.
So Lucille Young gives you also the very inmost of Nature's secrets of fascination. These secrets have been disclosed by nearly twenty years of study, by gleaning from countless patrons the hidden ways of fascination, by analyzing and putting together. The revelations are startling, mysterious, strange—things you would never discover yourself.
Women are thrilled as never before—because they instantly recognize that all the secrets they have longed to know are revealed—that an amazing new life has been opened up to them. No woman who reads will again fear the siren type. She will meet her on her own ground—be as irresistible as any woman living. And remember, whatever your present appearance, Lucille Young Methods will give the necessary beauty.
Find Out Free of All Cost or Obligation. So marvelous are the promises of complete fascination, that Lucille Young is willing to convince you at her own risk. Simply mail the coupon for her booklet—the most amazing thing you have ever read—and it will be sent free and without the slightest obligation.

Our Modern Maidens

Kentucky gravely pinned on Billie's shoulder a tiny enameled forget-me-not, then pressed her cheek against it.

"Silly baby!" laughed Billie tenderly, kissing Kentucky. "You are more nervous than I! Cheer up—this isn't your funeral! Now run along and jump into your pretty gown."

AT LAST the procession moved slowly down the wide stairs toward the altar where Gil nervously waited with his best man. Billie, on the arm of her father, seemed to see Glenn Abbott's grim, set face before her. For a moment she wondered if she could go through with the ceremony. But the sight of the room crowded with all the best people and members of the press recalled her to her senses. Like an actress playing a difficult role, she took her place at the altar beside Gil.

Above the bowed heads of Billie and Gil the clergyman's voice solemnly intoned, "if there be one among you that knows any reason why this man and woman should not be joined in holy wedlock, let him speak now or forever after hold his peace."

Kentucky looked up suddenly, her lips parted as if in answer to this challenge; but no words came. Her stricken eyes fell once more to the flowers held tightly in her shaking hands.

For an instant Gil, too, looked up quickly; then, like Kentucky, he silently dropped his eyes again.

The ceremony was over. Confusion reigned. Toasts were drunk to the bride as she strolled gaily from group to group, the life of the party as always.

"It's time to go," B. B. B. reminded her at last; and under his breath he added anxiously, "Remember to face the cameras!"

Gil seized Billie's arm and ran her to the steps. For an instant she paused, laughing down at the upturned faces of her bridesmaids.

Kentucky, her very heart in her eyes as she looked up at Billie and Gil, did not know that the bridal bouquet fell at her feet. She was not even aware of the other girls scrambling wildly for it.

BILLIE, dressed in her travelling suit, paused beside the window of her boudoir, lost in desperate thoughts of her own. Nervously she twisted the wedding ring on her finger, her eyes straying involuntarily toward the hills. With an effort she recalled herself and looked about the familiar room she was about to leave behind her, and with it, all that reminded her of her happy, carefree girlhood. Reluctantly she crossed the room and opened the door.

Gil was going downstairs, blithely whistling a syncopated version of the wedding march. From Billie's sitting room, Kentucky watched him. As he passed from sight, she sagged limply against the wall.

In a bewildered flash, Billie read the passionate love mirrored in Kentucky's eyes. She stepped over to her and slipped an arm about her waist. Kentucky, tragic and broken, did not move. She did not even seem aware of Billie's eyes anxiously looking into hers.

"'Tuck—'Tuck, honey!" cried Billie, shaking her gently. "What is it, baby?" Kentucky stared ahead, apparently deaf to Billie's alarmed questions.

DOWNSTAIRS the girls were pelting Gil with rice and shouting wisecracks. Through the tumult came Blondie's cry, "Get the bride!"

As the youngsters crowded toward the stairs Billie led—almost carried—Kentucky into her room and gently forced her to the edge of the bed. Billie had just time enough to run to her boudoir for a glass of champagne, and return to Kentucky before the crowd of young people swarmed upstairs in search of her.

"Nobody home!" announced Reg from Billie's boudoir. "Let's lock the groom in here until we find his bride. They're not going to make a sneak on us!"

"Aw, have a heart!" protested Gil good-naturedly; but his pleas fell on deaf ears.

Locked alone in Billie's room, his uneasiness returned full force.

Billie was urging Kentucky to drink the champagne to steady her nerves. Suddenly the girl snatched up the glass and, recklessly crying, "Bottoms up!" drained the contents. Billie watched her puzzledly.

Gil, in the adjoining room, heard with a growing sense of foreboding Kentucky's wild toast. Dimly he linked it with that memorable moonlit night when the two of them had carelessly drunk "bottoms up" together. He wanted to go into the room; yet something restrained him.

Billie, anxiously wondering how to bring up the subject of Gil in the kindest manner, absently picked up a bottle of cologne, and with her other hand reached into a drawer for a handkerchief. As she touched the purse, Kentucky screamed and snatched it to her breast, spilling half the contents to the floor.

There in plain sight lay the professional card of a noted obstetrician, and beside it a narrow wedding ring.

Kentucky sank to the bed. "I didn't want you to know, Billie! I didn't want you to know!" she cried brokenly.

Gradually the horror of the situation crept upon Billie, who drew Kentucky into her arms, seeking in vain for words with which to comfort her.

Gil, unable to remain alone any longer, opened the door between their rooms. He stopped short at the sight of Kentucky huddled in a pathetic heap against the dazed Billie. It was 'Tuck who saw him first.

"Oh, Gil!" she sobbed. "I was trying to be so brave. I didn't want Billie and you to know. I so much wanted you to be happy!"

Gil's eyes dropped to the card now held loosely in Billie's fingers. Silently he crossed to Kentucky and took her in his arms protectingly. She shrank away from him.

BILLIE, standing apart from the stricken boy and girl, desperately searched for a solution to the tragedy. From the drawing room downstairs came the blare of instruments playing The Big Brass Band, B. B. B.'s song—his creed. Play with the devil and pay in hell—if you must! For years she had played carelessly without thought of payment. Now the debt must be scored. Well, she would pay. Kentucky must be spared at all cost.

Swiftly she stepped up beside them. "Stay here, and don't talk," she commanded, trying to summon her old gay smile. "No matter what anyone says or asks, don't talk! Everything will be all right."

"But Billie, what—?"

"Never mind, Gil. It's for the best. Stay here with Kentucky, who needs you." She gathered the girl into her arms for a fleeting moment, whispering words of encouragement and love. Tenderly, then, she kissed Gil; and in another moment she was gone.

Outside the door she prayed, for the first time in her life that she could remember. "Oh, God, give me an inspiration."

B. Bickering Brown burst into her sitting room, excited and hilarious. "Hurry, darling. The cameramen are complaining it's getting too dark for the pictures. Where's Gil? 'Mustn't keep the boys downstairs waiting!"

Silently Billie slipped into her father's arms and dropped her head against his breast. He would understand and help her.

"Dad," she said slowly, "I'm leaving without Gil. I must. I—"

"Leaving without—? Are you mad?" he shouted, thrusting her from him.

Roughly he shook her. "What sort of damned nonsense is this, Billie? You can't cause any scandal now! Why, every newspaper in the country would shout the story from the housetops! It would make me the laughing stock of the world!"

"Dad, darling, forget people, papers, scandal! I need you, dear—I need you!" Completely broken now, she sobbed.

B. Bickering Brown shook the girl again, believing her tears a sign of surrender. "I don't care what reason you think you have," he said sternly. "You'll walk out of this house with Gil, laughing and gay, with your face toward the cameras! You are my daughter!"

He looked about for Gil, then stepped to the door of the bedroom. With a cry Billie prevented him from entering. He turned in relief, believing that at last she had come to her senses.

Recklessly she laughed, choking back the sob in her throat. "It's no use, Dad, Gil wouldn't claim me as his wife—now."

B. B. B. stepped back as if he had been struck. Intently he searched her face, suspicion growing stronger every moment. "You mean you've disgraced yourself, and he has found it out!" he asserted grimly. Billie looked stoically away, unable to meet the furious denunciation in her father's face.

SLOWLY Billie adjusted her hat and gathered up her bag and gloves. Her hands were shaking; but her lips smiled courageously.

"You've brought this on yourself," announced her father with cruel finality. "And you'll stand it—alone!" For an instant her smile faded. Determinedly she summoned it back. Gil must be freed—for Kentucky. With head held high, she left the room.

The hall was filled with agitated guests and excited members of the press. "Focus on the bride!" reporters ordered the cameramen in flurried undertones. "Big story's about to break!"

Now all eyes turned greedily toward the stairway. Billie, her smile still fixed, head insolently high, stood surveying them coolly. "A modern maiden's version of a honeymoon!" she announced gaily at last. "The bride enjoys it—alone!"

Impudently she addressed a reporter. "What's the best pose for a runaway bride? This—or this?"

BRAVELY Billie sauntered out to the festively decorated bridal car into which inquisitive camera lenses were thrust. Through her wracked imagination there flashed the banner lines the newspapers would scream to the world within a few hours. A million eyes seemed to be leering at her; a million mouths whispering slyly to a million eager ears . . . .

The car began to move slowly away. As the last curious eyes were left behind, Billie's bravado failed her and she sagged limply against the cushions, her pride and heart both breaking . . . .

BILLIE tried to forget her tragedy in New York. Surrounded all her life by friends, she found the solitude of the the next few weeks oppressive. Sometimes as she looked from the dizzy height of her hotel bedroom, she thought how easy it would be to find death. Yet courageously she faced the future, feeling somehow, without quite knowing why, that happiness such as she had never known before lay just ahead. She had done what seemed right to her. Kentucky loved Gil with all her heart, and he would be kind to her. After all, she, Billie, had always dominated him; but Kentucky would worship him as a god, and he would gain in strength because of her belief in him. But what of Billie? What would become of her now that she had sacrificed her name, position—even, perhaps, happiness itself? Always she was hounded by reporters who would not let her forget—who never seemed to weary of her as a source of newspaper copy.

A sharp knock sounded at the door.

Glorifying the Talkies

ual with trombones; those adorable young harmonists, the Brox Sisters, leading the intricate parade which weaves up and down and swarms on and off the grand staircase—for all the world like one of those sumptuous scenes at the New Amsterdam or Earl Carroll's.

THE show's a real revue, too—the pioneer of its kind, since William Fox Movietone Follies (scheduled for release in June) has decided to incorporate a thread of story.

This one's a fun free-for-all with most everybody on the Culver City stamping ground doing some specialty, from Lon Chaney and his fellow gorillas grabbing reluctant maidens to Buster Keaton's funny actions and dead "pan," and from Marion Davies' or Conrad Nagel's high comedy to the antics of Haines, Dane, Arthur, Joan Crawford and Polly Moran; the cast likewise including Charles King, Bessie Love and Anita Page, of Broadway Melody fame; Marie Dressler, Gus Edwards and Cliff Edwards, Ukulele Ike; Jack Benny, Joyce Murray and many other favorites.

As in the case of the New York eye-and-ear shows, the merit of it is up to three different kinds of genius—"acts," music and ensemble ideas. It has to be the best, otherwise it will not go at all. Hence Harry Rapf's board of strategy, inventors in each and every department; a musical bungalow of fifteen—count 'em—fifteen song writers, segregated off the lot "where they won't annoy the carpenters;" a girly-girly stock company of near 100 voices to try out the stuff—and Sammy Lee, ex-chief of Ziegfeld choristers.

Though it usually takes Ziggy, Earl Carroll or George White nearly three months to get their shows ready for dress rehearsal, Sammy avers he can train the coryphees for the sound recorder and sound-proof camera in four weeks. "Most of the girls are from around here," he said. Jazz education on America's western marge must be moving fast! Run-of-stock gets from $45 to $60 weekly. The hours are from nine to five, instead of from eight p. m. to midnight or after. Some of the girls are so young the California judges out here have to appoint guardians to collect their pay. A little peach of seventeen, Ruth Jennings, told me she'd covered New York and Los Angeles professionally in her brief span—"I was one of the eight California girls sent from the Mayan to dance in The New Moon, at the Imperial, New York, and now I'm back here as the end girl of Mr. Lee's chorus!" She was proud of it, too.

HOW'S this differ from ole Broadway?" I asked another of the few ex-Broadwayites, Joan Dixon, who used to traipse in Geroge White's Scandals of 1928.

"Well, it was pretty crowded there," she confessed. "Forty-eight of us girls dressed in the one room. Rates of pay about the same. Solid, steady work here, and a contract—I think I like it!"

"What about dressing accommodations?"

"Just at present, 12 of us dress in the monitor room—"

"Should think the young fellows who mind the monitors would be glad to work without pay—"

"Oh, they clear out before we come in," she said indifferently. "But, say, it's going to be great here—great for the girls, I mean. They're building seven new theatres on the lot, each with its complete chorus dressing rooms, make-up tables, mirrors, incandescents, wash-bowls, 'n everything! Big musical stuff came up so suddenly after the Broadway Melody hit that I guess they just had no place to put us."

Going from M-G-M to Warner rehearsal is like adjourning to a barn dance from a ballroom. The Warner boys and girls were having the liveliest kind of a time in a shack at Prospect and Talmadge Streets. One of Tin Pan Alley's most vigorous executants strummed the piano. Back in a corner Ann Pennington was trying out new dance steps. Hoofers were practicing on the side lines, and in the center a girl was obliging with a fast buck and wing. Out of the huddle of men around the athletic pianist, emerged the words:

"Now, girls, before Mr. Ceballos comes, we might try the theme song—" Shades of geishas, hetairae, and King Solomon's wives! This is what they sang—sang it lustily with effective little jazz tappings and motions keeping in mind the elaborate run-around they were to do for Ceballos later:

"Daughters of an ancient trade,
"Pick up, pick up your little spade,
"Gold diggers on parade, MARCH ON!

"'There is gold in them thar hills'
"—Yes, checks and yellow bills—
"Go get some, go get it 'fore it's gone!"

Interviewed a lot of the young ladies whilst still waiting for elusive Larry Ceballos. Didn't seem to be gold diggers, evidently were not; the ambition to chisel money from the male population being purely fictive. All I talked with were Warner chorines, trained in the brothers' Hollywood boulevard theatre, and alternating as flesh-and-blood prologue choristers and as film "stock." Seventy-five simoleons a week when they sound-record, and $37.50 to rehearse. So there you are—

TRANSPLANTING the chorus to the wide and almost bucolic spaces of East Hollywood has its advantages. Voices don't get husky in this clime. Athletic young ladies get their sleep. There are no Johns to be hot and bothered about. Problem of morale solves itself. Take for instance Warner Brothers' big musical, On With the Show, just completed. How could any extra be bored and un-peppy with Ann Pennington's cute comedy or Joe E. Brown's clowning to look at, Arthur Lake's eccentric dances, Sam Hardy's impersonations, Emperor Jones' harmony quartette harmonizing, Fairbanks Twins tweetering, Betty Compson and Louise Fazenda playing the tragi-comedy back-stage queens? Why, Harry Gribbon, one of the comedians, is a whole show in himself.

The arrival of the breezy, no longer elusive Larry Ceballos interrupted these reflections, and on my asking, "How can the films possibly can the greater musical productions?" he replied:

"We are learning to do pretty much everything that is done, even on the great New York spectacle stages. 'Twould take a day of your time and mine to explain it, but perhaps a couple of pointers would greatly interest your readers. First, the trick of handling spectacle and action in elevation, for the screen is about as high as it is wide, isn't it? We use its full altitude now, and show action on every part of it. Next, we dance against music-time instead of with it—a further development of jazz that will make the filmed girl-shows the catchiest hits of the theatre.

"For instance, we dance a three-four measure against a four-four tune, or going beyond that, vary our steps one-two-three, one-two-three, one-two-three-four, or even one-two-three-four-five—"

Well, well, well! The original Professor Einstein of the Higher Jazz! I'd been afraid Sammy Lee would pull a Sir Isaac Newton on me in this nebulous realm, and here was Ceballos realizing my worst fears and trying to convert SCREEN SECRETS into L'Etude. Weakly I protested, but he said he would have Ann Pennington and two boy steppers illustrate.

The athletic pianist cavorted into his amazing staccato, and the "hoofers" Billy Duthers and Lew Reed sandwiched redhead Ann between them. Most regularly irregular fellows I ever saw! Could write a piece about 'em, called "Feet That Stray." Lightning fast, too! Had to do it thrice over before I could lamp the hooves making double left-hand turns against rhythm-traffic signals, and game little Pennington (who had learned the routine only the day before) drew her traffic ticket likewise. I left the Warners' "barn dance" shack, well dazed by the professors.

THERE'S great dispute in Hollywood whether the natural-colors show's too great an eye-strain. I bet Warners hit the ball and rang the bell when they made On With the Show in all-color. The other companies are reserving it for special scenes or the last act of "musicals." But Main Street will never wholly glorify the American girl at home-town movie and give up spending New York car fare till Main Street can really see her in all her rosy beauty!

There's 500 feet of technicolor "Follies" in Paramount's Burlesque. It's a most gorgeous affair. The original stage Burlesque "lead," Hal Skelly, is in it with the delectable Nancy Carroll, Babe Kane, Dorothy Revier, May Boley and the Flippity Flop girls. They even revived Sliding Billy Watson's celebrated Beef Trust, and you "burlicue" hounds know what that means. Mavis Villiers and Margaret Andrus, billed as South Sea pages, looked more like Eve's Leaves. Rembrandt could have painted a new "Lesson in Anatomy" from some of the others.

Fox's nerve to run a non-story olla podrida "Follies" forsook him, so his minions cooked up a good back-stage yarn with Lola Lane and John Breeden in the roles of the lovers. Others in the big cast are: Sue Carol, Sharon Lynn, David Percy, David Rollins, Dixie Lee, Muriel Gardner, Arthur Stone, Warren Hymer, and the Fanchon and Marco girls. The William Fox Movietone Follies of 1929, with 10 special "acts," an undersea ballet in natural colors, an all-Harlem number including Stepin Fetchit, a beauty parade, Edward Royce ensembles and Conrad, Mitchell and Gottler songs, is going to be some wow.

Universal is in the running with Broadway, headed by Merna Kennedy and Glenn Tryon, and First National with Broadway Babies, starring Alice White. Admittedly, Merna Kennedy's a grand eyeful in the Universal concoction, and cute Alice White is backed up by a stunning bunch of First National "babies."

Pathe is following presently with full-length adaptations of "Pinafore" and "Mikado" and two-reel "tabs" of "Pagliacci," "Cavalleria," "Faust," "Aida," "Hoffman," "Carmen" and "Martha." Looks as if there were song numbers enough for everybody.

Rogers, Cantor, Jolson, Whiteman, most of the big funsters and players, have capitulated to the "soundies." Ziegfeld talks of putting the movieized Show Boat in Ziegfeld's theatre, and the canned Jolson winter-packed the Winter Garden. Yes, glorifying the American girl has gotten quite beyond the "one-man" job it used to be. Thanks to Will Hays' modesty complex in behalf of the "family time," there'll be no Follies displays or double entendre in this new medium which will spread her beauty and tunefulness to the ends of the earth!

THE gentle sigh that comes from the heart sounds like the exhaust of a boiler when carelessly microphoned. And a sneeze is liable to spoil the whole sound track by over-vibration. Don'ts for dramatists will doubtless ban sighs, sneezes and too-sibilant whispers.

GROW—

Yes, Grow Eyelashes and Eyebrows like this in 30 days

THE most marvelous discovery has been made—a way to make eyelashes and eyebrows actually grow. Now if you want long, curling, silken lashes, you can have them—and beautiful, wonderful eyebrows.

I say to you in plain English that no matter how scant the eyelashes and eyebrows, I will increase their length and thickness in 30 days—or not accept a single penny. No "ifs," "ands," or "maybes." It is new growth, startling results, or no pay. And you are the sole judge.

Proved Beyond the Shadow of a Doubt

Over ten thousand women have tried my amazing discovery, proved that eyes can now be fringed with long, curling natural lashes, and the eyebrows made intense, strong silken lines! Read what a few of them say. I have made oath before a notary public that these letters are voluntary and genuine. From Mlle. Hefflefinger, 240 W. "B" St., Carlisle, Pa.: "I certainly am delighted . . . I notice the greatest difference . . . people I come in contact with remark how long and silky my eyelashes appear." From Naomi Otstot, 5437 Westminster Ave., W. Phila., Pa.: "I am greatly pleased. My eyebrows and lashes are beautiful now." From Frances Raviart, R. D. No. 2, Box 179, Jeanette, Penn.: "Your eyelash and eyebrow beautifier is simply marvelous." From Pearl Provo, 2954 Taylor St., N. E., Minneapolis, Minn.: "I have been using your eyebrow and eyelash Method. It is surely wonderful." From Miss Flora J. Corriveau, 8 Pinette Ave., Biddeford, Me.: "I am more than pleased with your Method. My eyelashes are growing long and luxurious."

Results Noticeable in a Week

In one week—sometimes in a day or two—you notice the effect. The eyelashes become more beautiful—like a silken fringe. The darling little upward curl shows itself. The eyebrows become sleek and tractable—with a noticeable appearance of growth and thickness. You will have the thrill of a lifetime—know that you can have eyelashes and eyebrows as beautiful as any you ever saw.

Remember . . . in 30 days I guarantee results that will not only delight, but amaze. If you are not absolutely and entirely satisfied, your money will be returned promptly. I mean just that—no quibble, no strings. Introductory price $1.95. Later the price will be regularly $5.00.

The Cynical Miss Pringle

She never could stand it except on the installment plan. The longest she ever stuck it out at one time was nine months.

WHEN the war came, her husband put on his uniform and went to the front to make the world safe for democracy. Aileen went back to San Francisco. To occupy her mind, she and another girl took a special course in the University of California in scenario writing. She discovered she was pretty good at it.

Then the war came to an end.

"What are you going to do?" they asked her.

"I don't know; what does one do when one's husband comes home? Go back to five meals a day and riding around to visit sick farm hands."

"Why?"

The result of that "why" rolling and rolling around in Pringle's mind landed her in Hollywood. She kicked around from one studio to another until Elinor Glyn found her. Found her and put her in Three Weeks.

That was one of the funniest episodes I have ever known in Hollywood. I remember one day that a newspaper critic panned Pringle and she flew to the telephone to complain to her mentor.

"I said to her," Elinor Glyn explained, "Why, Pringy, I'm surprised. Is there a mirror in the room where you are? Good. Now I want you to go right to that mirror and look at your tall regal self in that glass and you are to say: 'I'm Elinor's Pringy—and what do I care what they say!'"

Not that I want to knock Mrs. Glyn. I like her. She's the best sport I know; and I imagine that she finds all this love stuff about as foolish as do the rest of us. Only she finds it and her tiger skins to be a paying line.

Pringle made one of the great hits of screen history in that picture. Did it again in His Hour. Then she passed out.

She says herself that the reason for her slump was that the producers rented her around Hollywood to this picture company and that like a livery stable horse.

The real trouble was something that she does not suspect. She never found another Elinor Glyn to take her up. Being taken up is about three-fourths of the battle in Hollywood.

And producers and directors are a little nervous about taking up a young lady with a withering tongue and known as the little playmate of all the highbrows in the land. All the Hollywoodites have books and first editions; but Pringle reads hers, which is entirely out of line.

A young lady who hands you a chemical analysis of her bootleg booze after

What Made Him PROPOSE?

Frankly, it was simply because she used her brains. Dorothy was prettier, more highly accomplished, and much wealthier; but Gladys understood those simple little points of man's psychology which make him like wax in the hands of a nice girl who knows how to manage him—and the young clubman chose her instead. She learned this important psychology in a wonderful book entitled FASCINATING WOMANHOOD. We have prepared a 28-page booklet outlining the contents of this wonderful book and in it telling much interesting information you would like to know. If you want it write name and address on margin and mail with 10 cents to THE PSYCHOLOGY PRESS 4865 Easton Ave., St. Louis, Mo., Dept. 15-G dinner is entirely too cynical for directors who like to call the striving young stars "Dear" and "Honey" and "Little One" on the sets. It is symptomatic that everyone calls this one "Pringle" . . . like a man or a college boy.

This is true about the chemical analysis. Instead of showing you the bottle, she hands you around a card with a chemist's correct analysis. One has formaldehyde; another wood alcohol and another furfural. One is guaranteed to be fatal after a certain number of drinks; another is harmful, but not necessarily fatal and another just burns up your stomach. I took formaldehyde. It sounded sanitary, anyhow.

It seems very likely that Pringle's real time is coming with the talkies. A good many fluffy young things are due to disappear from our midst with the advent of the talkies. Their little mousy squeaks are not convincing.

Girls like Pringle who have good, personable voices that sound like something, will find that their day has come. Pringle, without her voice, is only a half portion. This is true of all girls of real personality. It is only the baby dolls who did their best in silence.

THIS MONTH'S WINNING LETTER

Below is printed this month's winner of the prize of $5.00 offered each month for the best letter by a reader giving a frank opinion of the talkies.

288 Steinway Ave.,
Long Island City, N. Y.

The talkies to me are just the berries;
I love them just like a bunch of cherries.
Some of their voices do enchant,
They surely put me in a trance.

I like to hear the one star I love;
I refer to the beautiful Billie Dove.
I've heard the "It" girl, Clara Bow,
And believe me, boys, she is a wow.

Mary Pickford's perfect voice I've heard.
She chants just like a little bird;
A voice as sweet as the birds in June.
Give me more of Mary and let it be soon.

I've heard a great many and they all can talk,
But I think Ruth Chatterton's the cock of the walk,
With the exception of Miss Pickford and Clara Bow,
And Nancy Carroll, I must not forget, oh, no.

To finish this up, I must confess
The talkies I think a great success.
The silent drama is all right, too,
But to hear them talk makes it more real to you.

(MRS.) AGNES CURRAN.

I Knew I'd Forget Something!

As usual, I'd packed in a hurry. It was just a week-end trip with my husband, and there wasn't much room for those accessories of the toilet which every modern woman possesses for the practice of feminine hygiene.

Fortunately, I had a box of Dr. H. H. Warner's feminine cones with me, ready to supply instantly, without inconvenience, all the requirements of the most fastidious for cleanliness and prevention of infection.

You, too, can avoid embarrassment and discomfort by providing yourself with a box of Dr. H. H. Warner's celebrated cones. Sent in a plain wrapper, prepaid, these cones come fifteen in a box—a very generous supply. The price is $1 a box, or three boxes for $2.50, with full instructions for their use.

FREE Dr. H. H. Warner's booklet giving details, advice, prices, etc., of the many necessities to the personal hygiene of women and girls. Sent FREE upon request.

FOOT PAINS GONE in 10 minutes

OR COSTS YOU NOTHING

Burning, aching, tired feeling in the feet and legs—cramps in toes, foot calluses, pains in toes, instep, ball or heel—dull ache in the ankle, calf or knee—shooting pains from back of toes, spreading of the feet, or that broken-down feeling—all can now be quickly ended.

SCIENCE says 94% of all foot pains result from displaced bones pressing against sensitive nerves and blood vessels. Weakened muscles permit these bone displacements. Now a way is discovered to hold the bones in position and strengthen the muscles. Pains stop in 10 minutes when these amazing bands, Jung Arch Braces, are worn. Stand, walk, or dance for hours—you just don't get tired. Just slips on—results are almost immediate. One of the secrets is in the tension and stretch. It is highly elastic, amazingly light and thin, yet strong and durable. Worn with any kind of footwear. Nothing stiff to further weaken muscles and cause discomfort. The styles with exceedingly soft sponge rubber lift are urgently advised for severe cases.

Pain stops like magic. Soon bands may be discarded and feet are well to stay. Nearly 2,000,000 now in use. Specialists, amazed at results, urge them widely. Wear a pair ten days; if not delighted your money returned. Go to druggist, shoe store or chiropodist.

1 Trouble starts in weakened muscles. Tiny bones of forward arch are displaced. Pain follows.

2 A super-elastic band assists and strengthens weakened muscles, replaces bones. Pain stops instantly.

Marian Nixon—1929 Edition

didn't get far. I was five feet tall and weighed exactly ninety pounds and the boyish type wasn't in vogue in 1921. Finally after many trials, and more miles of weary walking, I secured a small bit with some lions in a Monte Banks comedy. I don't know why they picked on me for that part unless it was because they felt the lions would be merciful to so frail a looking creature.

"My work was all right and the photographer more than did justice to my face but people objected to little girls like me wrestling with big lions. That was a lot of bravery wasted.

"Later I tried Mack Sennett. I did a little work but I certainly wasn't the bathing beauty type. Figures, even in the full-dress bathing suit days were essential in securing a Mack Sennett contract. I wasn't, er—developed enough, they told me. Too frail, too small, too undeveloped! I determined right then and there to remedy that and, believe it or not, I did!" And she held a doll-like little arm up to prove it, perfectly moulded in spite of its size.

"About that time Mary Philbin was being featured in a picture called The Temple of Venus. It was a beautiful, mythical fairy tale using dozens of girls and fortunately for me, each girl had an individual bit to do in the picture. I put forth all my effort to make my own little bit stand out. And I guess it did. Any way, they chose me for the lead in Kentucky Days, which was Dustin Farnum's last picture for Fox. I played the sweet, shy country girl with the innocent eyes and the long curls, a particular type that was popular then.

"That lead led to a lead opposite the western star, Buck Jones, in Big Dan. It was funny about that picture. I didn't have much to do in it. Only one scene of mine stood out at all. I had to sew a button on Buck's shirt. That was easy after the Lamm Hotel days. Buck had the shirt on at the time. I looked up at him as I sewed simply because he was wise-cracking but that look seemed to put the scene over. Mr. Sol Wurtzel of the Fox Company saw it and sent for me. He gave me a year's contract.

"Was I thrilled? I thought, here I was, a great actress with a regular contract 'n everything. This was in 1924. Only three years in pictures, and a contract! That wasn't so bad for this little Minneapolis girl, so I thought and so thought my friends—but, sometimes contracts do more harm than good. They sometimes retard your progress rather than advance it.

"I continued to play leads for Buck Jones and for Tom Mix. Dear, sweet little country girls with fathers who had mortgages due. You know the type.

"Well, at the end of that year I was out. Westerns were rather passé with Fox and if they weren't making westerns they didn't need any little daughters with mortgage handicapped fathers.

"I went through the usual heart breaking nothing-to-do period and finally signed up for a western lead at Universal with Hoot Gibson. Then, a little later, Universal gave me a contract. The kind that every beginner longs for—a long term, leading roles and a sliding scale. I almost wore it out carrying it around and sleeping with it under my pillow at night. That was the beginning of my second picture career.

"Right here is where I changed from a Maude Muller to a city flapper and played rather sophisticated roles opposite Reginald Denny. I even went so far as to visit a barber and sever my connections with my curls. No more ginghams and spring water for Marian. No sir-ree, it was silk hose and champagne for mine. Universal even went so far as to borrow Buddy Rogers and let me lead him through some fancy paces in an ultra-modern version of Young America called Red Lips.

"About that time I married. Whether or not that had anything to do with my downfall I never fully determined but I do know that my long term contract died before it was full grown, and again I was out in the cold. 'Too bad'; 'She never had a chance' and such like conveyors of condolence drifted around, but no work. I just couldn't seem to get any at all. A few little parts here and there which did me more harm than good. My salary dropped to one-fifth of what it had been in 1926 and, well, there just didn't seem to be even a ray of hope.

"But you know, 'while there is life there is hope' and I was dead only as far as the screen was concerned. And as they say in the titles 'came the dawn' in the form of talkies. My weak little voice has always been a joke. My mind flashed back to the time when my weak little body was my handicap and I thought perhaps a voice, too, could be developed. I had a voice test but really didn't expect to ever hear from it. But a call for another test came almost before I had reached home. And that weak little voice registered into a contract for the feminine lead in Geraldine.

"This was the beginning of my third career in pictures. After Geraldine was completed I seemed to be again in demand, I played in a musical comedy opposite the stage star, Eddie Dowling; in Broadway Bound, another talkie; then I did Headlines for Warner Brothers. Then I was signed to do the lead opposite Al Jolson in Little Pal. And now—" Marian hesitated, almost as though the thought was too heavy for her, "now, this Barrymore lead. People say it's a gift but I say it's a charm—the dear old Charm of Three."

She smiled up at me like a sweet child who still believes in fairies and I quite agreed it was a charm—the Charm of Marian Nixon.

pants. It seems to me that she can see right through to the other side of me."

Fly at Their Noon Hour

THE handball and football games are all busted up over at the M-G-M studios.

Out on the lot, where directors, stars, assistants, cameramen and prop boys used to get together in a grand, democratic disregard for professional class, and toss the ball back and forth during the noon hour, it is as quiet as a Democratic convention hall the day after defeat.

Clarence Brown and a number of other directors, as well as Eddie Nugent, Billie Haines and some of the other stars, also assistant and property boys, are all up in the air for an hour or so. They chase over to the airplane field a few blocks away, hop into an airplane, and off they go for a short hop, returning to the studio full of zest for their work.

So far the actresses aren't taking to the air during the lunch hour, but I heard Anita Page and Mary Doran discussing it the other day, so I shouldn't be surprised to see them hop off any day.

Took Octavus Roy Seriously

OCTAVUS ROY COHEN, writer of those clever colored folk stories, is married to a very fair lady with whom he kids continually.

But Octavus doesn't realize that the world doesn't know this. He took a chance and got a calling, out at the Breakfast Club in Hollywood, one morning.

Rising to speak to the assembled breakfasteers and over the radio, he declared that his wife was sitting on one side of him and a picture star on the other, and he didn't see why they couldn't have put a film star on both sides of him.

Now Mrs. Cohen understood perfectly, but there was a man present who felt called on to fly gallantly to the defense of a fair lady. He declared feverishly over the mike that Mrs. Cohen was far prettier than most picture stars, and that her husband had no right to talk that way.

Mrs. Cohen always kids her husband unmercifully. He told me with glee, one night when I met him at James Gleason's house, how, when a sob sister in New Orleans called on him to interview him, but found only Mrs. Cohen at home, she had told the caller that in reality her Mr. Cohen was a plumber. And that's how the story came out in the paper next day!

Lionel Barrymore a Lamb

I DON'T mean a member of the Lamb's Club—I mean to work for.

So many stories have gone out about the temperamental Barrymore family, that it is only just to let the world in on something about Lionel.

As a matter of fact, Lionel says, he has never been happy before in his life. But he loves directing talking pictures, and he is as amiable as a little lamb when you meet him on the set. He is very successful and that must add to his amiability. His actors all adore him, and the technicians will do anything for him.

He has succeeded in getting a lot of new effects with the camera, too. Being a good bit of a mechanic, he knows about as much about a camera as the cameraman does. But he doesn't shout about that. He pretends ignorance. When the cameraman tells him, "Oh, you can't do that," to some suggestion of his, Barrymore says gently, "Say, don't tell me too much about this camera. Just let's try."

Chester Morris, who is making such a hit in Alibi just now, tells me Barrymore was wonderful to work with on the stage.

"One night I came to the theater after having a tooth out. My jaw was so swelled up I could hardly speak. The play was The Copperhead, which is pretty tricky and demands good teamwork. But Barrymore was serene. I told him through nearly closed jaws that I could never speak my lines that night. Barrymore said, 'I understand.' I went on and managed as many lines as I could. Barrymore picked up the rest of them and I don't think the audience ever knew."

However, he was a bit trying at times, because he would go off for a walk just before fifteen minutes was called. Sometimes he went on without make-up as the result.

Lionel never liked acting, and has always been trying to get away from it.

Eddie Quillan, Oil Man

EDDIE QUILLAN has just started an oil business, along with William J. Craft, the director. They own three or four oil wells and an oil station or two. Eddie loves nothing better than fooling about in an old greasy pair of overalls, climbing in and out around the oil wells.

He says that motoring is spoiled for him. He can't go out and look at a California hill without wondering, "Is there oil in them thar hills?"

Doug and Mary to Co-star

JUST as we prophesied last month, Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford will co-star in The Taming of the Shrew.

Mary says that she is going to love playing Kate, and one can imagine the fun that will be going on outside the stage between these two. Douglas always says that Mary is the mother of the whole family, and she knows that just as the jungle beast dashed against the side of the cage with a horrifying roar.

Where There's a Thrill There's a Way

TUI LORRAINE carries a scar on one of her pretty heels—the mark of a lion's cruel teeth. Miss Lorraine is a celebrated tight-wire walker and was performing in one of Universal's serials when the accident happened. The wire was stretched above two lions and their cub, the trainer assuring the young stunt artist that it was higher than lions could jump. Tui took his word and began her perilous walk. Papa Lion proved to be good enough for Olympic competition when, goaded to fury by the keeper's whip, he leaped at the girl—his vicious teeth just grazing her heel . . . .

DOROTHY SEBASTIAN became unconscious under even more hazardous circumstances. While making The Arizona Wildcat with Tom Mix, the action called for Tom to rescue Dorothy from a wrecked coach, caught on the crest of a waterfall. Tom had to swing down from a tree overhanging the fall by rope, seize Dorothy and climb back with her to safety. In dragging the girl through the window of the overturned coach, Tom inadvertently "crowned" her against the bar and so had a dead weight to carry on his perilous climb to the tree.

Tom is accustomed to rescuing damsels in distress. In Silver Valley, he had to hang from an airplane on a rope ladder, holding Dorothy Dwan in his free arm. Instead of rising into the air, the plane dragged Tom and Dorothy along the ground for several yards, bruising and scraping them. Nervous and shaken, Dorothy went back into the scene. This time they rose swiftly and went higher than had been expected. The ground looked so far away that she became hysterical and if Tom had not taken a firm grip of her, she would have jumped from the ladder and been killed.

"Water stuff" always elicits groans from the actor, and well it may. Sally O'Neill in The Girl on the Barge, had to fall into the water during a storm. It wasn't in the script that she should catch her foot in a barbed wire that was secured at the other end to something far below, but that's what happened.

"Swim to shore, Sally!" megaphoned the director.

Sally couldn't get away from her barbed wire anchor. Somehow she made her position clear and managed to tread water until a life guard could reach her and cut her free.

"Do I live through it?" asked Natalie Kingston, when told that she would ride the rapids without a boat for Pirate of Panama.

"Sure. It won't hurt you. Not afraid, are you?"

Natalie said she wasn't, but she had the scare of her life when she was actually in the water, being carried swiftly along in the churning deep. Rocks bruised her, brush scratched her, she sprained one arm and hurt her leg before the welcome "CUT" came to put an end to her misery.

AFTER what happened in Old Ironsides, when several people were killed or maimed in an explosion, the idea of things being blown up isn't greeted with loud cheers by ye movie actor.

They blew up a ship for The Rescue, Ronald Colman's starring picture, and the studio evidently felt that their handsome hero's life was to be risked, for they insured him for $500,000 for the making of one shot. The danger was due to the falling debris after the explosion. A bomb proof shelter had been built for cameras and director, and Ronald was told to dive into this as soon as the shot was made. He escaped the heavier timbers but several splinters lodged in his arm and made work difficult for some days.

Norman Kerry did not escape so easily when, in Merry Go Round, the tree under which he lay, presumably wounded, was blown to bits. The scenarist fondly hoped the dynamited tree would go straight up in the air. So it did. But even motion picture trees must come down and this one did that also, with some dynamite, burying Norman several feet under the earth, and sending him, when dug up, to a hospital for more weeks than he likes to remember.

BEBE DANIELS has had more accidents and narrow escapes than any other girl on the screen. Hot News included a scene in which Bebe rode over the water in a breeches buoy. Just before the unfortunate star completed her journey over the slender cable, the tug to which one end was fastened gave a lurch, slackening the rope, and down went Bebe into the Pacific, only to shoot skyward again when the cable tautened!

If Bebe is the jinx's favorite actress, then Monte Blue is its favorite actor. Everything that can happen has happened to Warner Brother's he-man. Among his thrills is this, occurring in No Defense.

Monte, as construction engineer, was stationed on a railroad bridge to signal the train to cross, also to wave back the hundred-odd extras who were employed. He gave the signal; the train moved forward, but the crowd stood still. Monte turned to wave them back, frantically, and his foot slipped through the ties. There he was dangling, 200 feet above the river, trains approaching and the dumb extras still helplessly standing. He raised himself from the ties, found his foot injured, and hobbled off, shooing the crowd before him, reaching safety just as the train thundered past.

These poor gals who are pursued by actress. As Helen gaily put it, "I invited everybody and they all accepted and Mother almost had hysterics because she didn't know where I was going to put them in my tiny apartment but here they are and isn't it fun?"

And fun it was, too. We all sat down on the floor or on the window sills or chair arms and in almost no time most of the delicious food cooked by our hostess herself was gone; not that anyone needed more, we were "too full for utterance."

Those asked to meet the two honor guests were Mesdames Al Christie, Chester Morris, Paul McAllister, Orville Caldwell and Al Boasberg and Misses Julia Dean, Rene Clifford and Margaret Smith.

Julia Dean is an old-timer from the stage enjoying our California sunshine. "And the movies!" she added, vivaciously, "I bet I'm one of the biggest fans in the world. Every Monday I go down to Los Angeles and with mere half-hours for lunch and dinner, take in six pictures from ten in the morning until midnight!"

REGINALD DENNY entertained the D'Oyle Carte Opera Company at a luncheon given in the Indian Room at Universal Cafe. Denny's father was one of the principals in the original cast of this company formed in London in 1875 and Reginald himself has known many of the company since childhood. The luncheon was one long happy reminiscence.

MOST of the bon voyage parties of this month have been given for Ona Brown who is contemplating another trip abroad. Ona, herself, admits to being a "party hound" and can go on day after day and night after night without feeling the least fatigued. But Pauline Starke, who has been invited to all these particular social events, admits to being a bit dazed. "I've eaten miles of sandwiches and gallons of salads and drunk quarts of tea, coffee and punch," she sighed, "and right now I have the awful feeling that I shall commit a faux pas by suddenly waking up and wondering just who my hostess is. One thing I'll never be in doubt, as to the guest of honor!" She gave Ona a happy little squeeze.

ONE of the largest farewell functions for Mrs. Brown was given by Mrs. Helen Wolfe with the Hotel Roosevelt as a setting. The guests included Dolores Del Rio, Billie Dove, Ruth Roland (home from her honeymoon and vaudeville tour), Jane Winton, Camilla Horn, Madge Bellamy, Pauline Starke, Louise Fazenda, Kathryn Carver, Alice and Marceline Day, Pauline Garon, Lily Damita, Laura La Plante and Mrs. Don Alvarado.

the villain! You don't know the half of it, dearie!

CARMEL MYERS came to grief in one of these pursuit agonies. In the Incoming Tide, she had to run across the glass skylight and through a heavy door. As she neared the door, her heel went through a pane of glass and she fell, striking her face against the door, But worse befell the heavy. He was that in both senses of the word. He tripped over Carmel, fell in another direction, going face downward through the glass, slitting his cheek from eye to mouth!

If anybody asked you to drive your coupe into the glass front of a store, you might hesitate, but any picture actress who hesitates is OUT. So Gladys McConnell, serial queen of Pathe, merely took a deep breath and obeyed.

After all, what was that to a girl who had been thrown into the ocean with her hands tied behind her for this same picture, The Fire Detective? Hugh Allen was to leap from a boat and rescue Gladys, but Gladys was pushed overboard before Hugh was ready and Gladys spent a bad few minutes trying to keep afloat with her feet doing the propelling.

Leaping from one building to another is just part of the day's work to Bill Cody, but one day Bill misjudged the distance and came out over thin air. Only a swift twist and a reach saved him and he landed with slight injuries to hands and knees.

All this and more can happen to your favorite star. He can fall from a horse, get tangled in the stirrup and be dragged, like Ken Maynard; he may have to endure the torture of a stream of water played on his bare body, like George Duryea in The Godless Girl, or play his scenes among blazing timbers and falling beams, as did this young actor and Lina Basquette in the same picture; he may be asked to swim in a lagoon with several sharks lurking in the water, as did Ramon Novarro in The Pagan.

It's a great life—if he doesn't lose it.

Another Gal Thrown to the Lions

But if Billy is a red-blooded lad who admires beauty, brains and commendable determination, he certainly won't change his mind!

Hobnobbing With Film Folk

Doug, to do his best work, must do a lot of kidding to get into a mood for comedy. She herself doubtless will play a hoydenish Kate, and it will be delightful to see what she does with the role.

De Mille as Reformer

EVEN as Charles Dickens did no end of good by his books on schools and prisons of England, so it looks as though Cecil B. De Mille is going to accomplish something for some of the girls' reform schools in this country, through his Godless Girl.

The Dean of Radcliffe College has written De Mille asking him concerning certain episodes in the picture, and whether such conditions really existed. De Mille not only investigated conditions through agents and through secret reports, but he personally met and questioned many inmates or ex-inmates of girls' reform schools. All and more than he shows are truths about many reform schools.

"There are many good institutions, however," he said the other day. "But I was amazed to find that the officers of these institutions did not know the conditions in the bad reform schools."

Lew Cody, Jokester

LEW CODY has been ill, but I saw him sitting up and acting cheerful, at Arrowhead Hot Springs, the other day.

I was up there at the Springs, resting over the week-end, and ran down to Lew's bungalow. Norman Kerry was there.

Lew told me about the time when, hearing a band over the radio at night, he got the idea that he wanted it to visit him. So he telephoned to the station, and the boys came out.

"It was too good a band to waste," explained Lew. "I wanted my friends to enjoy it. It was a negro band, so I blackened up my own face, and proposed to lead the musicians. We went over to Norman Kerry's, crawled in through a window, went up into his room, walked around his bed and serenaded him. Norman protested and we left. When I judged he had got back to sleep, we went again. By this time Norman had recognized me, and he sat up and we made a night of it."

But Norman it seems, got even.

"Fatty Arbuckle, Buster Keaton and I went over to Lew's house one morning," related Norman. "We got the cook on our side, and then we proceeded to put breakaway vases in place of all the expensive ones Lew had so long and carefully collected. We had had duplicates made, over at the studios.

"Then we sat down and waited for Lew. As he came in the door, Buster jumped up to greet him, and knocked a large vase off a table close at hand.

New Way to Magnetic Personality!

At last, the secret of a winning personality has been discovered! Psychologists have long agreed that personal attraction comes from expression, not beauty. And now, through a series of simple facial exercises, you can easily acquire that charm and radiance you have always longed for.

HAS NO COUGH or ASTHMA NOW

Death Seemed Certain. Tells How Health Was Soon Restored.

Despairing sufferers from asthma and bronchial trouble, will be glad to learn how Mrs. Myrtle Willett, 5900 Maxwell Ave., Detroit, Mich., was restored to health. She says:

"I had bronchial asthma 2 years. Last fall I grew worse, couldn't lie down at all, and slept only 3 hours a night. I was so near death they had to inject medicine in my arm, and I thought every night would be my last. After taking half a bottle of Nacor I began to sleep and eat, and improved every day. My cough soon disappeared, and my strength returned. Now I do not choke or cough at all, and feel perfectly well again."

Mrs. Willett is only one of hundreds of sufferers from asthma, bronchitis and severe chronic coughs who have told how their trouble disappeared and never returned. Their letters and a booklet full of vital information about these diseases will be sent free by Nacor Medicine Co., 696 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind. The more serious your case, the more valuable this free information may be to you. Write for it today.

It broke into a hundred pieces. Lew looked aghast, but smiled painfully. 'It's all right,' he said faintly.

"Then I rushed over close enough to the piano to knock off a vase of flowers, and that vase broke. Lew's eyes stuck out, and he looked awfully hurt, but like a good sport he said nothing. I pretended contrition, and he said, 'Oh, all right.'

"Next Fatty Arbuckle knocked over a big jardiniere and it went to pieces with a sound like thunder as it struck a chair. Lew tried not to mind, but the perspiration was starting out on his forehead. Fatty said he would make it good.

"Then we made a mistake. We broke a perfectly good vase. It was a rare one, too. The joke was on us. Lew's face had taken on a look of relief when he had discovered the joke that was being played on him, and he wouldn't believe we'd broken a real vase until he had a look at it. Say, we three spent the next weeks trying to find a priceless vase to replace that good one."

Louise and Harry Again

FOR the first time since the old Mack Sennett days, Louise Fazenda and Harry Gribbon are working together in a picture. Both are playing in Humphrey Pearson's On With the Show, which Warners are making.

Louise was sitting on a pony trunk on the set the other day, and Harry was awaiting call perched on a barrel. The set was a back-stage scene. We reminisced.

"The last time Louise and I played together," said Harry, "we were looking for a pet seal that had disappeared in the Pacific Ocean. Louise felt awfully responsible. She had recommended the trained seal to Mack Sennett, and the seal and its owner had got the job in the comedy.

"We were working at the seashore, and suddenly the seal decided not to mind his master, but to seek his old pals in the sea. Off he swam. His owner said he would come back. But he didn't.

"Louise and I sat up all night on the beach, with the seal's owner, watching for that seal. Sure enough, along about daylight we saw a black head bobbing about in the water, and a minute later Mr. Seal had plop-plopped to his master."

Nils Asther Builds House

NILS ASTHER is building a big house on the top of a Beverly Hills hill.

We wondered if he was intending to get married, but he said an emphatic no.

It appears that Nils was married when little more than a boy to a Swedish actress. He was not at all happy, and was divorced. Now he looks askance at matrimony.

He left his house in Hollywood, he said, when his dog died; just couldn't bear to be around the place after that.

News From Paramount

OUT at the Astoria Studios, Paramount's New York production center, The Lady Lies, is being produced under the direction of Hobard Henley with Claudette Colbert and Walter Huston in the leading roles. Claudette has already appeared in one talkie, The Hole in the Wall, with Edward G. Robinson, the best character actor around these parts—and Walter has been seen in a short talkie, The Carnival Man, which tried to cash in on his stage success in The Barker.

A Bad Record

YOU'VE got to watch your words out there at the sound studios. And your coughs, too. One well known actress carelessly indulged in some harmless profanity in the midst of a conversation the other day while the mike was working. A few minutes later when they ran off the reel she heard her naughty words floating out, right in the middle of the scene that was being taken at the time. "The worst part of it was," she explained, "everybody recognized my voice, so there was no denying I was the guilty one. Anyway, I put 'em all wise on what the well-dressed woman will swear."

Not So Bad

ROY D'ARCY, one of the screen's favorite naughty-naughty men, has been here at the Biltmore Hotel with his recent bride, a New Rochelle heiress whom he re-wed in Mexico at the end of March—a month after their divorce became final. Everybody was anxious to know the significance of Roy's rumored engagement to Lita Grey Chaplin.

"Lita is a nice girl," said he, "and we're good friends, but we never were engaged. Her announcements were purely for the purpose of securing publicity."

Roy's anxious to do big things on the legit before returning to Hollywood. He's sick and tired of being bad. He's been quoted as saying that he's so fed up with being wicked that he'd like to do Little Lord Fauntleroy for a change!

Say, d'ya suppose that when Roy left Hollywood the headline read, "D'ARCY BLOWS!"?

Early To Wed

AFTER all, Babe Ruth's recent wedding is news for the film world, too. Remember Babe in Babe Comes Home, which he made with Anna Q. Nilsson for First National?

Babe was welded to Claire Hodgson, former Follies girl, at five-thirty early in the morn at St. Gregory's Church. The same day Babe was knocking out home runs for the Yanks in their opening game at the stadium!

Babe and Claire had been pals for some time and they first planned a secret wedding because of the tragic death of Babe's first wife in a Boston fire. The wedding took place an hour earlier than announced, but reporters were on hand, expecting some such attempt to avoid publicity.

Now you know what's swat!

Speaking Of Estelle

NOT long after we saw Estelle Taylor, wife of Jack Dempsey, at the welcome luncheon for Lupe Velez here, she packed up and returned to Hollywood to start her next film venture.

Estelle's latest show is Where East is East, in which she appears with Lon Chaney and Lupe Velez.

And that reminds us, that a certain wise-cracker has dubbed Jack Dempsey a Taylor-made man.

Vallee Wows 'Em

GOD'S gift to the New York flapper is Rudy Vallee, the most talked of performer in these parts. It was recently announced that Rudy is to make a picture for R-K-O, featuring his gang of melody hounds, The Connecticut Yankees.

Rudy's history is a swell example of the proverbial "Local Lad Makes Good on Broadway" stuff. Not so long ago, he was playing the sax in a number three Ben Bernie orchestra. His radio announcing and singing put him over big. Now he's under contract to play at the Paramount Theatre for some weeks!

If you're looking for Rudy, remember that sax marks the spot . . .

Singers Are Sought

HERE'S quite a bit of vocal color, folks. Warner Brothers have signed the great German singer, Michael Bonin. This gent declares that the future of the opera is in the singies. None other than John McCormack said the same thing some time ago. And now he (the Irishman) has signed with Fox to receive a half million (believe it or not) for a Fox movietone feature to be made in Ireland. Fox has also signed the great Chaliapin and Tita Ruffo has a contract with Warners'. Mary Garden is also to make singies. So the opera stars are well represented. Say, Bill Shakespeare, shouldn't it have been "The Play's the Sing"?

Favorites Turn To Films

TWO of New York's musical comedy favorites have been snatched by the films. One of them is Irene Bordoni who will make an international talkie for First National. It's to be in French, German, Spanish, and English. And Marilyn Miller who's now risking her life in Chicago is to receive a mere one hundred thousand dollars for making Sally, her big stage success. She's to get the same for her next film and $150,000 for the third if she clicks with the movie public. Don't worry, Marilyn only has to do one of her snappy clog dances to click.

Tempering With Jeanne

THEY'RE giving Jeanne Eagels the razzberry for her fits of temperament out at the Paramount Astoria Studio. It seems that whenever Jeanne gets sore she develops a case of illness. She claimed she was sick while The Cardboard Lover was on tour, and as a result was suspended from the stage for a year and a half by the Actor's Equity Association. And it's happened at other times, too.

After her success in The Letter, it's rumored that her attitude during the making of Jealousy for Paramount has tried the patience of almost everyone on the lot. And after a squabble with Jean De Limur, the French director, Jeanne developed a bad case of "laryngitis" and didn't appear on the set for many days.

The bets are divided. Some say she'll go on with pictures. Others say that she'll carry out her plan of starring in the London performance of Congai. Anyway, ever since Jeanne has been flying off the handle out at Astoria, the favorite song around there is "The Eagels, they fly high . . ."

Colman Visits New York

SAMUEL GOLDWYN and his wife came to town with Ronald Colman and a couple of English bulldogs named Dust and Ashes and Just in Time. Ronald just finished the screen production of Bulldog Drummond in which he deviates from his usual romantic role.

The reason for Ronald's visit is to get a good taste of New York night life for a few weeks and then he plans to return to Hollywood for a good rest. New Yorkers expect to see Ronald in their favorite night clubs every morning in the week.

Two Arrivals From Hollywood

VICTOR VARCONI who played opposite Corinne Griffith in The Divine Lady came to New York to board the S. S. Olympic with Mrs. Varconi for a visit to Hungary, his home. He'll make two pictures abroad before returning. Another arrival in New York was Dr. Paul Fejos, who will direct Paul Whiteman in The King of Jazz, and who came East to discuss plans with the star. Say, who started this idea that nobody loves a fat man?

Peggy Brings Suit

PEGGY WOOD, wife of John V. A. Weaver, won a $36,000 suit against the Talka Phone Pictures in the Supreme Court here. Peggy declared that the picture company broke a contract to pay her $12,000 a week for three weeks to work on a film called Black Face.

Anyway, she's to appear in M-G-M's The Wonder of Women, with Lewis Stone. Incidentally, these directors are pretty persistent about casting the first Stone.

Jottings

PAT ROONEY and his wife, Marion Brent left Hollywood to celebrate their silver wedding here . . . Bryan Foy is all upset because of his brother's (Eddie's) recent-yen for Bessie Love . . . Mae Murray who just signed a long contract with Tiffany-Stahl is coming to New York with her hubby, Prince David Mdivani . . . Mary Duncan will be seen around these parts after a short vacation at Palm Springs . . . . . Dorothy Farnum, M-G-M scenario writer, passes through New York to embark on the Ile de France for a vacation in Yurp . . . New York is still laughing over Texas Guinan's twittings at the law . . . The A. M. P. A. ball reported here some time hence, cost the club five thousand berries . . . Mary Miles Minter, it is reported, lives with her hubby, a Navy man, near Central Park . . . Chester Morris, who wowed 'em in Alibi, was heard here over the radio . . . Camilla Horn and Thomas Meighan may be seen here again soon . . . .Albertina Rasch left for Hollywood to direct a ballet of twenty-four girls to be seen in Burlesque and to open a school of dancing there; would you say that the Rasch is breaking out in films? You wouldn't? Well, who asked you? . . . Stop.

Our Modern Maidens

Billie crossed to it and said, "I'm busy. I can't see anyone."

She was about to turn the key when the door was thrown open and Glenn Abbott stepped into the room. Billie fell back, unable to believe her eyes. In an instant he swept her into his arms.

"I've looked everywhere for you, dearest," he told her, holding her close. "I heard—you needed me. Billie, let me take care of you—always. I love you."

Gratefully she dropped her head against his breast. In the security of his love all the horror fled from the tragic weeks behind her. No longer need she battle for courage to face the future, for she was safely protected by the clean ardor of the only man she had ever truly loved.

Slowly she raised her eyes to his.

"Oh, Glenn," she whispered, smiling through the tears that filled her happy eyes, "take me away. Teach me to live your way, content with peace and beauty. Take me home with you."

His lips, against her own, held a world of promise . . . .

(THE END)

Buzzin' Around

HOW much buzz does one bee buzz? That's a talkie problem. To solve it, James Gleason, who writes dialogue for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has put a bee-hive into his home. Before he writes in a bee, he wants to know just how practical the bee will be in a talkie.

We wonder who will test out the lowly mosquito?

Light of Their Lives

KLIEG eyes, once the terror of every player in films, have met their doom with the coming of talking pictures.

Instead of facing powerful Kliegs, sun-arcs, mercury vapor and carbon are lights, actors and actresses now perform beneath huge banks of incandescents, counterparts of the lights used in the home, which do not have ill effects upon the eye.

The change is due to the necessity for absolute silence in filming talking pictures. Arc and mercury lights set up a slight hissing sound which is picked up by the microphones and recorded in the film with the players' voices, whereas, the incandescents are noiseless.

Specially constructed incandescent spotlights to take the place of the "baby" arc spotlights are in successful use.

Wise Cracker

EDDIE NUGENT, M-G-M, wise-cracking player, thinks Jimmy Cruze should re-do The Covered Wagon for the talkies. "The spokes of the wheels would be so effective!" he tells us.

Don't Smack Your Gum

CHEW gum in the talkies? Just try it! Wesley Ruggles spent several hours trying to train the microphone and Laura La Plante to get together on it so it wouldn't sound like a pop-gun in her latest picture, Scandal, then gave it up. Either Laura hadn't been trained right or they need another invention.

What They Are Doing

Richard Barthelmess is starring in Drag, heavy drama, for First National.

Lila Lee plays the vampire in the same picture.

Alice Day plays the clinging vine wife in the same picture.

Ben Lyon is working in The Flying Marine, a Navy-air picture for Columbia.

Shirley Mason is doing the same.

Mary Astor is the girl.

Charles Farrell is making The Lucky Star, melodrama, for Fox.

Janet Gaynor plays with Farrell.

Lon Chaney is making Thunder, for M-G-M.

Phyllis Haver plays opposite Chaney in her last screen appearance.

Harry Carey is in Africa playing Trader Horn, in a picture by the same title, for M-G-M.

Edwina Booth, newcomer, plays the girl.

Marion Davies is making Marienne, musical comedy, for M-G-M.

Greta Garbo is making The Single Standard, for M-G-M.

Josephine Dunn is making Black Magic, a mystery story, for Fox.

Henry B. Walthall plays opposite her.

Jacqueline Logan is working in The Bachelor Girl, a society drama for Columbia.

Buster Collier, Jr., is her leading man.

Dorothy Mackaill is starring in Hard to Get, comedy drama, for First National.

"He saves $100 a month"

"SEE that man at the receiving teller's window? That's 'Billy' King, Sales Manager for The Browning Co. Every month he comes in and adds $100 to his savings account.

"Three years ago he started at Browning's at $25 a week. Married, had one child, couldn't save a cent. One day he came in here desperate—wanted to borrow a hundred dollars—wife was sick.

"I said, 'Billy, I'm going to give you something worth more than a loan—some good advice—and if you'll follow it I'll let you have the hundred too. Take up a course with the International Correspondence Schools and put in some of your evenings getting special training. The schools will do wonders for you, I know. We've got several I. C. S. men right here in the bank.'

"That very night Billy wrote to Scranton, and a few days later he had started studying at home. Why, in a few months he had doubled his salary! Next thing I knew he was put in charge of his department and two months ago they made him Sales Manager."

Employers are begging for men with ambition—men who really want to get ahead in the world and are willing to prove it by training themselves in spare time to do some one thing well.

Prove that you are that kind of man! The International Correspondence Schools are ready and anxious to help you prepare for something better if you will only make the start.

LUMINOUS PAINT

Make Your Watches, Clocks, Etc., Visible by Night The very latest discovery in the scientific world. Hitherto, practically unobtainable except at an exorbitant price, we have at last succeeded in producing this remarkable LUMINOUS PAINT, which, applied to the surface of any article, emits rays of white light, rendering it perfectly visible in the dark. THE DARKER THE NIGHT, THE MORE BRILLIANT IT SHINES. Quite simple to use. Anyone—you can do it. A little applied to the dial of your watch or clock will enable you to tell the time by night. You can coat the push buttons or switch plates of your electric lights, match boxes, and innumerable other articles; make your own Luminous Crucifixes, Luminous Rosaries, etc. Small bottle, price 25c. Larger sizes, 50c and $1 postpaid. JOHNSON SMITH & CO. Dept. 907 RACINE, WIS.

CIGARETTE MAKER

Roll your own and save money. Better and quicker; saves more than half. Use your favorite brand of tobacco. Neat, useful, handy. Pocket size, weighs ½ oz. Made entirely of metal, nickel plated. 25c, 3 for 65c postpaid anywhere.

GOOD LUCK RING

Very striking, quaint and uncommon. Silver finish; skull and crossbones design; two brilliant, flashing gems sparkle out of the eyes. Said to bring good luck. Only 25c postpd.

Exploding Cigarettes

JUST LIKE ORDINARY CIGARETTES. BUT SUCH REAL STARTLERS! The box contains ten genuine cigarettes of excellent quality. They appear so real, but when each cigarette is about one-third smoked, the victim gets a very great surprise as it goes off with a loud BANG! A great practical joke, yet entirely harmless. Price 25c box.

NOVELTY BADGES

Kissing Permit 10c Garter Inspector 10c

Two very novel metal badges, nickel plated, that you can wear, giving you fun out of all proportion to their trifling cost. 10c, each badge, 3 for 25c, or 75c per doz. postpaid anywhere.

SURPRISE MATCHES

More fun than fighting with your wife. Look just like ordinary matches. Put up in boxes just like regular Safety Matches. As the victim tries to light one he gets quite a surprise. Price 10c per box, 3 boxes for 25c, 12 for 75 cents.

MIDGET BIBLE

GREAT CURIOSITY Smallest Bible in the World. Size of a postage stamp. 200 Pages. Said to bring good luck to the owner. A genuine work of art. Must be seen to be appreciated. Magnifying Glass for use with Midget Bible, 15c.

INVISIBLE INK

The most confidential messages can be written with this ink, for the writing makes no mark. Cannot be seen unless you know the secret. Invaluable for many reasons. Keep your postals and other private memorandums away from prying eyes. Great fun for playing practical jokes.

Only 15c a Bottle; 3 for 40c.

JOHNSON SMITH & CO. Dept. 907 RACINE, WIS.

STAGE MONEY

With a bunch of these bills, it is easy for each person of limited means to appear prosperous by flashing a roll of these bills at the proper time and peeling off a genuine bill or two from the outside of the roll, the effect created will be found to be all that can be desired. Prices, postpaid: 40 Bills 20c, 120 for 50c, or $3.50 thousand postpaid.

Wonderful X-Ray Tube

A wonderful little instrument producing optical illusions both surprising and startling. With it you can see what is apparently the bones of your fingers, the lead in a lead pencil, the interior opening in a pipe stem, and many other similar illusions. A mystery that no one has been able to satisfactorily explain. Price 10c, 3 for 25c, 1 dozen 75c. Johnson Smith & Co.

MAGIC NOSE FLUTE

Post Paid 10c

The Magic Nose Flute, or Humanstone, is a unique and novel musical instrument that is played with nose and mouth combined. There is just a little knack in playing it which, when once acquired after a little practice, will enable you to produce very sweet music that somewhat resembles a flute. There is no fingering, and once you have mastered it you can play all kinds of music with facility and ease. When played as an accompaniment to a piano or any other musical instrument, the effect is as charming as it is surprising.

Every Boy His Own Toy Maker

A great book for boys. It gives plain, practical instructions for making all manner of toys, machines and other articles, amusing and useful. The "Little Giant" Typewriter

A First Class Writing Machine For $1.50

A perfect little typewriter for $1.50. There are thousands of persons who would like to use a typewriter but whose needs and business do not warrant the expense attached to the purchase and use of a fifty or seventy-five dollar machine. We sole agents we confidently recommend our Little Giant. It is strongly made, but simple in construction, so that anyone can quickly learn to operate it, and write as rapidly as they would with pen and ink. The letters of the alphabet most frequently used are so grouped as to enable one to write quickly, the numerals 1 to 10, and the punctuation marks being together. With this machine you can send your best girl typewritten love letters, address envelopes, make out bills, and do almost any kind of work not requiring large, expensive machine. With each typewriter we send a tube of ink and full printed instructions for using the machine. Price complete $1.50 by mail postpaid to any address in the world.

MICROPHONE TRANSMITTER BUTTON

$1.00 Postpaid

You can easily make a highly sensitive detectophone by using this Transmitter Button to collect the sound waves. You can build your own outfit without buying expensive equipment. It is simple and inexpensive. You can install an outfit in your home and hear conversations being held all over the house. You can connect up different rooms of a hotel. This outfit was used by secret service operatives during the war. It is being used on the stage. It is ultra-sensitive and is the greatest invention in microphones. You can mount the button almost anywhere—card board boxes, stove pipes, sheet metal, on the wall behind a picture frame, etc. Button is so light and small it cannot be detected. Persons can be overheard without suspicion. You can listen in on conversations in another room. A deaf person in the audience can hear through the speaker. Connected to phonograph, piano or other musical instrument, music can be heard hundreds of feet away. Button may be used to renew telephone transmitters; often make twice as loud and clear "talk up" when nothing else will. The ideal microphone for radio use; carries heavy current and is extremely sensitive. Amplifies radio signals. Countless other similar uses will suggest themselves. Experimenters find the button useful for hundreds of experiments along the lines of telephones, amplifiers, loud speakers, etc. Many fascinating stunts may be devised, such as holding the button against the throat or chest to reproduce speech without sound waves. PRICE $1.00. JOHNSON SMITH & CO., DEPT. 907, RACINE, WIS.

MAGICIAN'S BOX OF TRICKS

Apparatus and Directions for a Number of Mysterious Tricks, Enough for an Entire Evening's Entertainment . . . $1.00

Anyone Can Do Them

It is great fun mystifying your friends. Get this Conjurer's Cabinet, and you will be the cleverest fellow in your district. It contains the apparatus for over 100 tricks, including The MAGIC BALL AND VASE TRICK (a wooden ball placed inside and upon replacing the lid has disappeared and is found in someone's pocket); The HINDOO TRICK CARDS (can be made to change completely no less than five times); DISAPPEARING COIN BOX (a coin, placed in the wooden box, vanishes entirely or changes into a coin of another denomination); The CAT AND COCKLET TRICK (a coin is dropped into a glass of water and when the water is poured out the coin has vanished and is found somewhere else); the RIBBON FACTORY (FROM THE ROOT TRICK, a seemingly endless supply of colored paper ribbons comes out of your mouth); the DISAPPEARING HANDKERCHIEF (a handkerchief held in the hand mysteriously vanishes); the WIZARD'S RING COIN TRICK; the ENCHANTED BOTTLE (no one but yourself is able to make it lay down); the GREAT HAT AND DICE TRICK (a number of dice, placed under one of a hat, disappears and is found underneath yet no one has touched the hat), and last, but not least, the GREAT PHANTOM CARD TRICK, or two from five leaves nothing. Full instructions are sent for performing each trick. In addition to the above, a number of other tests and illusions are fully explained for which you can easily make or procure the necessary apparatus. Price complete $1.00 postpaid.

DISSOLVING VIEWS 50c

You may have a lot of fun with this peep-show. Regular starter. Made entirely of metal, having a microscopic lens in the eyepiece. While the victim is absorbed in admiration of the pretty pictures and interesting stories the confident expectation of seeing something interesting, a spring syringe is brought into action, and the observer is sprinkled with water. 50 cents each postpaid. JOHNSON SMITH & CO.

Lover's Knot or Friendship Ring

Made of 4 strands of genuine 14k gold filled wire, woven into the True Lover's Knot, symbolic of love or friendship. Very pretty, yet not showy. Each ring is made by hand by gold wire expert. It looks good and it is good. Price 50c Postpaid

Johnson Smith & Co.

SEX Indicator 25c

Hold the MAGIC INDICATOR over a man's hand, instantly it moves in a straight line, backward and forward. Hold it over a woman's hand and it describes a complete and continuous circle. The same action can be obtained over a letter written by a man or woman, etc. It is fascinating! baffling. We have never been able to figure out how it's done, but we have never seen it fail. Many novel and entertaining feats may be performed with the Sex Indicator. For example, similar results can be obtained with animals, cats, dogs, rabbits, over birds, chickens, canaries, etc. Also used to predetermine the sex of chickens and birds, etc. In fact it is sold as a patented, egg tester in Europe. Price 25c, or 3 for 65c, postage prepaid. JOHNSON SMITH & CO.

BABY TANK 25 Cents

Most remarkable toy ever invented. By drawing the Tank backward, either with the hand over the floor or table and then placing it down it will crawl along, overcoming all obstacles, in the same life-like manner as the larger Tank that proved so deadly in the great war. What makes it go is somewhat of a mystery, for there is no mechanism to wind up as is usually understood with mechanical toys, yet this tank will keep plodding along ten times longer than the ordinary run of toys. It will perform dozens of the most wonderful stunts. 25c prepaid.

ITCHING Powder

This is another good practical joke; the intense discomfort of your victim to everyone, but themselves is thoroughly enjoyable. All that is necessary is to place the ball rolling is to deposit a little of the powder on a person's hand and the powder can be relied upon to do the rest. The result is a vigorous scratch, then some more scratch, and still some more. 10c box, 3 boxes for 25c or 1 doz. per dozen. Shipped by Express. Johnson Smith & Co., Dept. 907, Racine, Wis.

ANARCHIST BOMBS

One of these glass vials dropped in a room full of people will cause a commotion that is Anarchy personified. These sell entirely disappears in a short time. 10c a Box, 3 Boxes for 25c or 75c per dozen. Shipped by Express. JOHNSON SMITH & COMPANY

SNEEZING POWDER

Place a very small amount of this powder on the back of your hand and blow it into the air, and everyone in the room or car will begin to sneeze without knowing the reason why. It is most amazing to hear their remarks, as they never suspect the real source, but think they have caught it one from another. Between the laughing and sneezing yourself will be having the time of your life. For parties, political meetings, car rides, or any place at all where there is a gathering of people, it is the greatest joke out. Price 10c, 3 for 25c, 75c per dozen. Shipped by Express.

Johnson Smith & Co., Dept 907, Racine, Wis.

COMICAL MOTTO RINGS

Lots of harmless fun and amusement wearing these rings. Made of platinoid finish (to resemble platinum), with wording on enameled, as illustrated. Price 25c ea. Postpaid

Johnson Smith & Co., Dept. 907, Racine, Wis.

Rubber Chewing Gum

It is just like a regular package of chewing gum and looks so real that it fools everybody. And no one of course suspects it is not genuine until they start to chew it. There's a world of fun in this rubber chewing gum. 6 sticks to the package. Price 10c Package; 3 for 25c; 12 for 75c, Postpaid. Stamps taken.

MEN!

Place this Master Key Case Display on 20 Store Counters and Collect $20.00 a Day Profits

$20.00 EVERY DAY—$140.00 a week CLEAR PROFIT—that's what you or any other live wire can earn by simply placing these astonishing new "Automatic Salesmen" of newly patented MASTER KEY CASES on store counters. Here is a new way of raking in profits from AUTOMATIC SALES AT WHOLESALE, using our successful, tested selling plans. Profits 100% SELLING THROUGH dealers—over 200% selling direct to consumer in full or spare time. This amazingly clever Key Case—retails for only 25c, although it is better made and better designed than ordinary cases selling at a dollar, at five dollars, or even more. Notice that the Genuine Leather is beautifully colored—comes in Cowhide finish, Scotch Grains, Black and Brown, Pebble Stone and other attractive colors; then you will know why several are bought at a time in different colors for separate sets of Keys. It has no sharp edges or points to catch or tear the pockets. It cannot rattle or scratch when on the dashboard of an automobile. Holds six keys, always in the same position. Works like a jackknife. Opens and shuts in an instant, with snap fasteners. See all these selling features for yourself—and then you'll KNOW why it is a cinch to earn $20.00 a day—and more.

A $1.50 Investment Pays You $1.75 Clear

Here's a big business that pays you absolutely astounding profits. Yet you get in it with practically no investment—the cost of half a dozen good cigars starts you, and lets you see for yourself that THIS IS THE BUSINESS YOU HAVE BEEN LOOKING FOR! For an investment of $1.50 you get sales of $3.25—ABSOLUTE NET PROFIT OF $1.75. And when you have gotten started, and buy in big quantities like scores of my successful wholesalers, your profits are very much greater.

It Sells Everywhere—It's New!

When this key case was first put on the market, its instant popularity soon showed that the market for it was as big as the United States. You can place the Master Key Case Display with automobile and auto accessory dealers, drug stores, hardware stores, grocers, novelty shops, cigar stores, men's furnishings stores—hundreds of different places where the dealer is glad to accept your unusual offer.

A Lifetime Opportunity With This Automatic Profit Maker

Just walk into a store and say, "Mr. Smith, let me put this beautiful Automatic Salesman of genuine leather key cases on your counter. Doesn't cost you a cent. I'll be round in a few days to collect for the Key Cases that your customers buy. Not a cent of investment for you, no trouble, and you receive a mighty sweet profit into the bargain." Can that dealer refuse? You bet he won't—he'll grab at the chance—he won't let you get out of the store without leaving at least one Automatic Salesman. And when you come around again, it's a hundred-to-one shot that every Key Case is sold. WE PACKED 13 KEY CASES ON A CARD INSTEAD OF JUST A DOZEN. The 13 cases, at 25c each, bring the dealer $3.25, leaving him a clear profit of $1.25 on every card—and making YOU a clear profit of one dollar. You can EASILY place 20 cards with dealers every day—60 cards every 3 days. Your cost in lots of 60 is only $1 per card. Selling to dealers at $2.00 per card, you make 100% profit or $20 a day. And you don't even have to do all the placing yourself. You can easily employ other salesmen to place some of the cards for you, boosting your profits way up. And another thing—we haven't said a word about the repeat business. After dealers see what a whirlwind seller the Master Key Case is, they will want to buy from you outright, and will order again and again. Many retailers order from our wholesalers in six-dozen or gross lots. Believe me, that piles up the profits sky high!

THE IDEAL PREMIUM GIFT

You can also get orders in big quantities by calling on users of advertising gifts, as the Master Key Case can be imprinted in gold, at small cost, with the advertiser's name.

HAVE YOU THE COURAGE to get out of the rut and bul'd a BIG, PROFITABLE BUSINESS OF YOUR OWN? If you have, mail the coupon today—NOW—before you turn this page.

Holds Six Keys Compact and Secure.

I guarantee your sales—You just CAN'T lose!

I GUARANTEE that you will sell these Key Cases and make $20 a day. If you should fail to do so, return them and I will refund your money.

THE VOICE OF SOUND PICTURES

AUG. 25c

MARY PICKFORD'S FAVORITE PORTRAIT
by Edwin Bower Hesse

John Gilbert, My Real Life Lover

By INA CLAIRE

Miss Phyllis Haver—Lovely Pathe Star

Wherever beauty Congregates Maybelline tells its own Story

IN Hollywood there occur certain social events which bring celebrities of the screen together, to make the most striking panorama of feminine beauty the world is privileged to look upon.

Gorgeous jewels are in abundance and gowns are such as seem possible only in fairy tales. Yet the material glitter and grandeur of the spectacle is noticeably dominated by an exquisite note of charm—a charm which everyone feels—and which, quite obviously, emanates from the eyes of those present. For, every eye sparkles, and is vividly aflame with amazing expression as it casts melting glances thru dark, long, luxuriant lashes made so by Maybelline.

Such is the story of Maybelline and the fascinating eyes and lashes it makes—whether the setting be in Hollywood as typified by Miss Phyllis Haver, whose picture appears herewith, or whether it be any assemblage of smart society anywhere. For Maybelline is always in evidence where beauty is made more beautiful by eyelashes transformed from scantiness to dark, dense fringes of enchanting loveliness.

Have you tried genuine Maybelline?

"I find Maybelline ideal for darkening and beautifying eyelashes and eyebrows. It is so easy to use and gives such marvelous results.

I would not think of being without Maybelline for everyday use, as well as for best effects in my screen work." Sincerely yours,

Phyllis Haver

Solid Form

BOTH Solid and Waterproof Liquid Maybelline are made in Black and Brown from secret formulas and are widely imitated but never duplicated. Both forms are perfectly harmless. To be sure that you get the genuine, look for the Maybelline Girl on the package. Obtainable at all toilet goods counters—75c. MAYBELLINE CO., CHICAGO.

"Save me, Cyril!" Cried Susie the Sewing Machine Girl

You don't go to see magic lantern shows any more, do you? Then why waste time and money on ordinary talkies? M-G-M, in marvelous pictures like "The Broadway Melody" and "The Trial of Mary Dugan," has made the early talking pictures seem just as old fashioned today as the old stereoptican pictures of our grandfathers' day.

—and now

The NEWEST and GREATEST ALL-TALKING PICTURE

"Sinner? . . . Yes! . . . but in the eyes of humanity she is an angel!"

The world's most famous emotional drama now truly immortalized by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in the sensational all-talking picture—MADAME X. For power, pathos, and gripping humanity the screen has not had its equal. RUTH CHATTERTON, in the finest performance of her career, makes it one of the greatest attractions of all times. Lewis Stone, Raymond Hackett and a great supporting cast perform brilliantly under Lionel Barrymore's direction. Don't miss this truly remarkable drama. You'll never forgive yourself if you do!

Madame X

From the play by Alexandre Bisson. Dialogue by Willard Mack

Cast out from the luxury of her home. Torn from the side of her babe. And then that never-to-be-forgotten moment when her own son rises to defend her whom he knows only as "Madame X"!

She sinned, and the world exacted a heavy penalty. Follow the tragic, heartbreaking career of the mysterious woman known as "Madame X."

99 out of 100 people who see it proclaim it the most stirring picture they have ever experienced

Other M-G-M Successes Now Playing

"The Broadway Melody"—conceded to be the greatest all-talking, all-singing, all-dancing picture ever made.
"The Trial of Mary Dugan"—greater even than the sensational stage success.
"The Idle Rich"—based on the New York success, "White Collars."
"The Last of Mrs. Cheney"—the famed stage play. With Norma Shearer.
"Thunder"—Lon Chaney's greatest dramatic success.
"Marianne"—the new starring hit of Marion Davies.
"Wonder of Women"—Clarence Brown's sensational romantic drama.

Get into ELECTRICITY

Learn in 90 Days—Without Books

Don't spend your life waiting for $5 raises in a dull, hopeless job. Now . . . and forever . . . say good-bye to 25 and 35 dollars a week. Let me show you how to qualify for jobs leading to salaries of $50, $60 and up, a week, in Electricity—NOT by correspondence, but by an amazing way to teach, that makes you a practical expert in 90 days! Getting into Electricity is far easier than you imagine! Act now, today!

NEW—Quick Amazingly Easy Method!

Lack of experience—age or advanced education bars no one. I don't care if you are 16 years old or 40. It makes no difference. Don't let lack of money stop you. Most men at Coyne have no more money than you have.

Earn While Learning

If you should need part time work, I'll assist you in getting it. Then, in 12 brief weeks in the great roaring shops of Coyne, I'll train you as you never dreamed you could be trained.

No Books

You work on real live electrical machinery, building real batteries, winding real armatures, operating real motors, dynamos and generators, wiring real houses, etc., etc.—here in this world famous parent school, with its hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of new up-to-date electrical equipment.

Jobs—Pay—Future

Don't worry about a job. Coyne training settles the job question for life. Clyde F. Hart got a position as electrician with the Great Western Railroad at over $100.00 a week. That's not unusual. We can point to Coyne men making up to $600.00 a month. Easy to get jobs leading to $50 a week and up, while starting your own electrical business puts you in a position to become independent.

Prepare for Jobs Like These

Here are a few of hundreds of positions open to Coyne-trained men. Our free employment bureau gives you lifetime employment service.

Armature Expert — up to $100 a Week
Substation Operator — up to $65 a Week
Auto Electrician — $60 a Week and up
Inventor — Unlimited
Maintenance Engineer — up to $100 a Week

A Few Months Ago I Couldn't Play a Note

Now I Can Play Anything—Ballads, Classical Numbers and Jazz

I ALWAYS liked music.

I envied people who could sit down at the piano and play.

But I never considered taking piano lessons myself. I couldn't afford to pay a teacher and I didn't have much time for practice.

But a few months ago I heard about a system of learning music which didn't require a teacher—a system by which you could teach yourself to play the piano or the violin or any other musical instrument by note in half the usual time.

I made inquiries. I found out that this system was called the "Print and Picture" method—that it had been successfully used for 28 years by the U. S. School of Music in New York City—that it had taught over half a million people to play musical instruments. When I found out that the cost of the lessons averaged only a few cents a day, I decided to try the course in Piano Playing.

My Big Surprise

What a revelation that course was! Music isn't difficult. It doesn't take long to learn. The "Print and Picture" method makes it wonderfully easy—wonderfully simple!

I was amazed at my rapid progress! Before I knew it I was playing simple tunes. And now I can play anything I like—stirring marches that make the blood tingle—haunting melodies that hold folks spellbound—snappy, jazzy numbers that start feet shuffling and shoulders swaying.

What fun it is to play! And what good times I have playing at parties and dances! The minute I sit down at the piano I'm the center of a laughing, singing, jolly crowd. I've made scores of new friends. I'm sought after—invited everywhere! Honestly, I'm getting more fun out of life than I ever thought possible!

What Learning Music Does For You

This story is typical. Hundreds of thousands of people have learned to play musical instruments by the "Print and Picture" method. You can do the same.

There's real enjoyment in knowing how to play. You can entertain yourself for hours at a time—especially during evenings at home. You can entertain other folks—play at parties—make yourself popular.

You can play with friends in amateur bands. Or you can join a professional orchestra or band and make money. Good musicians earn $60 to $150 a week playing in orchestras. Always a demand for them. Many pupils of the U. S. School of Music now have good-paying positions.

How This Method Works

The "Print and Picture" method makes every step clear and simple. First you are told what to do—then a picture shows you what to do—then you do it yourself and hear it. No private teacher could make it clearer.

Children—some only 7 years old—have found this method easy as A. B. C. You don't have to know a thing about music to start This system makes the reading and playing of music almost as simple as reading aloud from a book.

Ovide Musin—head of the Musin Virtuoso School of Violin, in New York, said: "How can you teach violin through written lessons?" He was invited to visit the U. S. school of Music where he was shown the fully illustrated lessons for violin beginners.

"Ah!" exclaimed Musin, himself a marvelous Artist, "You have taught me something. I take the bow and the violin and show the pupil how to hold them and tell him to do the same. He has to go home and carry that in his mind until he comes for another lesson. But you give them a picture of the correct positions, and they have it before them all the time!"

One of the reasons for the quick results is that learning is such fun. Instead of waiting a year before playing tunes—you learn by playing tunes. You play simple, familiar melodies by note right from the start. No tiresome scales. No laborious exercises. You learn at home in your spare time and without a teacher. You study when you please—and as much or as little as you please. You learn twice as fast—three times as fast as those who study by old-time plodding methods.

Get This Free Book

A 64-page, illustrated book "Music Lessons in Your Own Home" will be gladly sent you on request. You will find it one of the most interesting books you ever read.

The book explains how the short-cut "Print and Picture" method works—why it gets such quick results. It contains a set of tests questions which show you whether or not you have musical ability.

It explains several ways in which the course enables you to make money even while taking the course. It tells how our courses qualify you to teach music—how to get a teacher's Certificate.

The booklet also contains dozens of letters from students telling what they think of the U. S. School of Music courses, and what these courses have done for them. Here are a few quotations from these letters:

"I would not take $1,000 for the knowledge I have gained from your lessons."

"My progress on the violin has been much faster than I had hoped for."

"I took piano lessons from you and am teaching music now."

"Since finishing the course, I have been teaching, playing in churches and at recitals, and am receiving a fine salary."

Free Demonstration Lesson

Just read the list of instruments in the panel. Decide which one you want to play. Then sign and send the convenient coupon. You will receive by return mail the free booklet, Music Lessons in Your Own Home."

You will also receive a Free Demonstration Lesson which shows you plainer than any description could, just how our system works. This Free Lesson tests your musical ability—shows you that you need no special talent—shows you how easy the "Print and Picture" method is, and how quickly you can learn—and proves to you that you really can learn to play a musical instrument without a teacher.

Don't let the fact that you can get this Booklet and Test Lesson easily and without cost or obligation, keep you from sending for them or make the mistake of undervaluing them. By showing you how easily and cheaply you can learn to play a musical instrument, this Booklet and Free Lesson may mean the difference between a whole lifetime enlightened by the joys of music and a lifetime also tell you about our amazing new Automatic Finger Control.

A New MAKE-UP SECRET

Known to the Screen Stars May Now be Yours

How Leading Stars Avoid Off-Color and Spotty Make-Up With Cosmetics in Color Harmony... the Amazing Beauty Discovery of Max Factor, Hollywood's Make-Up King.

TO PLEASE your fancy and the fancy of millions who marvel at the beauty of the stars of the screen, Max Factor, Filmland's genius of make-up, has developed make-up into beauty magic.

In the rare beauty of stars like Nancy Carroll, featured in wonderful productions like Paramount's "Burlesque", you, yourself, have seen how make-up may become a part of natural beauty to accentuate the fascination of personality.

And now you may learn this rare beauty secret of the stars.

Cosmetic Beauty Proved Under Blazing Lights

Make-Up, to blend with beauty naturally must be in color harmony. Cosmetics...powder, rouge, lipstick and other essentials must be in colorings to harmonize with the individual complexion. Otherwise, grotesque effects result and make-up appears off-color, loud or spotty. Max Factor discovered this, produced cosmetics in color harmony, and proved their beauty and lifelike realness under the blazing motion picture lights...beauty's severest test.

Make-Up for Every Woman—Every Day

Based on this same principle, proved so successful in pictures, Max Factor perfected Society Make-Up for every day and evening use. Universally the stars of Hollywood adopted it...Nancy Carroll, Mary Brian, Esther Ralston, and a host of others whose beauty has enraptured you, enthuse about the wonderful lifelike colorings, in the powder, rouge, lipstick and other essentials of Max Factor's Society Make-Up. And each star has her own color harmony, suggested by Max Factor, to blend with her complexion colorings and personality.

Now you, like the screen stars, may share this beauty discovery of the age. Max Factor will analyze your complexion and send you your make-up color harmony chart...free. Then you'll know—whether you're blonde, brunette or redhead, exactly the shades in powder, rouge, lipstick and other make-up essentials you should use to bring out your beauty; to enhance the alluring charm of personality.

And in Max Factor's book, "The New Art of Society Make-Up" you'll find invaluable beauty advice and make-up hints that will reveal to you the magic of make-up as it is used in Hollywood. A priceless beauty gift which Max Factor will send to you free...so mail the coupon to Hollywood and learn the precious make-up secret of the stars.

ESTHER RALSTON, Paramount star, in approving her make-up color harmony suggested by Max Factor, Hollywood's Make-Up Genius, remarks:
"Make-Up, when in correct color harmony, as in Max Factor's Society Make-Up, becomes a natural part of beauty...unnoticed, unseen"

JACQUELINE LOGAN is now Mrs. Lawrence Winston, bride of a socially prominent Los Angeles broker. This pair were married in Mexico some months ago, but because Miss Logan's final decree of divorce from Ralph Gillespie had not yet been issued, the marriage was declared illegal in California. Recently, however, the decree was issued and Jacqueline and Larry said "I do" all over again.

Marian Nixon has been signed to play opposite Richard Barthelmess in his next picture, Young Nowhere. Dick expressed his desire of having Miss Nixon play opposite him in his next production and First National moguls immediately closed the contract by wire.

•-•-•-•

Jason Robards has been signed by First National for a prominent role in support of Irene Bordoni in Paris, the star's stage vehicle. Jack Buchanan, the English revue star, has also been signed for an outstanding role. Production has been begun under direction of Clarence Badger.

-•-•-•-•-•-

Wallace Beery has gone over to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. He is now working in Magnolia, his last picture at the Paramount studio.

•-•

The Love Parade, an original talking picture operetta, has been announced by Jesse L. Lasky as being Maurice Chevalier's next picture. Jeannette MacDonald, Broadway star of Angels, has been signed to play opposite the fascinating Frenchman. Ernst Lubitsch will direct.

The Actors' Equity, which has theatre employment under control, is making a renewed drive to unionize actors in motion picture studios, issuing an ultimatum that none of its members can sign other than Equity standard contracts with producers hereafter. Actors are also being solicited to join Equity's motion picture branch. Most of the leading producers have taken a flat stand against Equity's entering the industry and have rejected all Equity proposals. A deadlock seems certain.

Edwin Carewe, noted director, has remarried Mary Akin. The couple were first married in 1926, and divorced in Mexico in July, 1928. The Carewes have two children. Mary Akin is a former Chicago girl and Sennett bathing beauty. Mr. Carewe, the discoverer of Dolores Del Rio, continues to direct the Mexican beauty in her pictures, also producing them.

•-•-•-•

Nina May, pretty colored heroine of King Vidor's Hallelujah, has been signed to a long term contract by M-G-M. Nina May was recruited from the New York stage production, Blackbirds of 1928.

Lenore Ulric herself, she who is almost a tradition in New York, has capitulated to the talkies. She has signed with Fox. Allan Dwan will direct her first picture, Frozen Justice, several scenes of which are to be filmed in Alaska.

-•-•-•-•-•-

Catherine Dale Owen, blonde stage beauty, has been chosen to supplant Greta Garbo as leading lady to John Gilbert in his first talkie, Olympia.

•-•

William S. Hart has signed a contract with Hal Roach to appear in a talking western. Lambert Hillyer, director of nearly 30 of Hart's successes, is slated to direct the new venture. The story is now in preparation at the Roach studios.

•-•

W. S. Van Dyke and his Trader Horn film expedition recently departed from the last outpost of civilization in Nairobi and are headed across Lake Albert to their first jungle location site. Commander Bockler, noted African guide, is leading the party. Filming is scheduled to begin on July 1.

•-•-•-•

The Big Shot, by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur, authors of The Front Page, has been purchased by Pathe and will be produced as a special, all-dialogue feature.

Ken Maynard and his wife have left Hollywood to spend what remains of the summer in the agreeably cool breezes of the Hawaiian Islands. He is said to be engaged in Honolulu in writing a story with Hawaiian background.

-•-•-•-•-•-

Pauline Starke has filed suit for breach of contract for $6,000 against James Cruze, director. She charges that she was summarily dismissed after four days' work, although she had been signed for four weeks to play a role in The Great Gabbo.

HERE'S A RECKLESS OFFER

I'M going to mail out, at my risk, 500,000 sample lots of records just to prove that I have developed an extremely low-priced record which is clearer and richer in tone than records costing seventy-five cents each or more.

Will you consent to be one of the half million persons to whom I am going to give a beautiful concert in your own home at MY RISK? Will you accept, without obligation, a shipment of ten superb records which may not cost you a single cent? They are in the standard ten-inch size and play on any phonograph. Just use the coupon below. Send no money.

When the records arrive, you can give yourself and your friends one of the pleasantest evenings you have ever had. Play each one of the ten records on both sides: twenty superb selections in all. Try the records as many times as you wish for ten days.

Then send them back to me at my expense UNLESS they are so good that you DO NOT WISH TO PART WITH THEM. Don't feel "sorry" for me," but shoot the records back unless they are positively better than records you have ever had at any price.

That's rather a reckless offer on my part, many people say. But I've already shipped out over seven million records on exactly these terms, and I know exactly how much risk I'm taking. I'm not afraid of any man's honest opinion.

All I ask is that you give me a fighting chance by going over carefully the list of records below and picking out the ten records that have the best chance of making good with you. Simply write the catalog numbers on the coupon and mail today. If they sell themselves to you on their own merits, and you want to keep them permanently, then they are yours at less than ten cents per musical selection. See terms on coupon below, and notice how I protect you against any possible loss or risk. Please act at once so you won't be too late to get this offer.

Some Voice in the Matter

LAURA HOPE CREWS prepared Norma Talmadge for the talkies. She did such a good job that Gloria Swanson is now learning her "A-E-I-O-U's" and "Hit the teeth with the tone" from the same source.

Oh! What a Lark

CATHERINE CRAWFORD, the bride, and Jean Hersholt, the father, stood on the steps of a cathedral.

"Camera," called Renaud Hoffman, directing The Climax for Universal. The extras and onlookers were silent.

The cameras began to grind.

Hersholt began his lines.—A donkey emitted a long-winded bray from a neighboring enclosure.

"Cut! Get rid of that donkey," bellowed Hoffman.

Ten minutes later, the donkey out of the way, Hoffman again called "camera."

The extras fell silent. Hersholt began his lines.—A bevy of meadow larks burst into loud welcome.

"Perfect!" cried Hoffman.

Speaks Well for Them

HURRAY, the girls get a break! After all that's been said about the superiority of the male voice in the microphone, along comes William J. Cowen, RKO director, with the following statement: "Girls with pleasing tones record more truly than masculine voices. I had to make hundreds of tests before finding the right recording for a boy whereas it took only a few minutes to select a girl."

Charlie's Talkie

CHARLIE CHAPLIN, who has declared to the world that he would never make a talkie, is going back on his word. He is, in fact, now writing and directing a two-reel dialogue picture to be produced to accompany City Lights, when it is realeased. Charlie is taking no chances on the quality of the short subject which will supplement his own effort. However, it is not his intention to appear before the camera in this short talkie—or in any other talking film. At least, that is what he says right at the moment.

SCREEN SECRETS Talkie Letter Contest comes to a conclusion in this issue. The final winning letter giving a frank opinion of the talkies appears on page 114.

Not So Worse

EDWARD DU PARR, a cameraman at Warner Brothers, invented a certain valuable camera device to aid in the taking of talkies and instead of registering the patent he sold it to the studio for the sum of one dollar! This gesture, however, isn't quite so foolish as it may seem. Out of gratitude, Warner Brothers have decided that as long as their organization exists, Du Parr will be working for it. A life-time job—with good pay—isn't to be sneezed at in the movies!

SILENCE GIVES CONSENT
Mean advantage taken of a talkie star by an assistant electrician.—The San Francisco Franciscan.

All Dialogue Serial

NOT all the "talkie beats" are scored by Warner Brothers and Fox. Universal is now making the first talking serial. It is to be called Ace of Scotland Yard, and there will be ten episodes of two reels each. Crawford Kent, whom many will recall as a prominent heavy in the old days of the movies, will play the detective hero. And every episode of the serial will be 100 per cent dialogue film.

Oh, These Censors

CENSORS in Kansas found a scene in a late Warner Brothers film objectionable and ordered a big cut in the picture. But—so far—American censorship has no control over dialogue and as the talking was recorded on disc, exhibitors found it necessary to have their screens dark for two minutes while the voices went merrily on!

In Montreal, with the Canadian censorship regulations differing from the American laws of control, the dialogue in one sequence of The Broadway Melody was cut while the film continued on the screen. The audience thought something had gone wrong with the projection machine until the fact that they were being saved from evil was discerned.

Talkies Predominate

WITH the production schedules of practically all the bigger studios completed for the season 1929-30, the number of talkies that will be made next year totals five hundred and four, of which three hundred and sixty will have silent versions. But the most significant phase of an analysis of the announced schedules is that only forty-three straight silent films will be made. Universal, with eight of that total, is the sole large studio to plan the production of any straight silents, and Fox, conforming with their announced plan, is the only one to make no silent versions at all of their talkies. M-G-M, controlled by Fox, will make thirty-five of their fifty dialogue pictures with silent versions. Altogether, it looks like the talkies are slowly but surely choking their silent foes to death!

START TONIGHT AND REDUCE WEIGHT!

Reduce 2 to 4 Pounds Tonight at Home and Feel Better Tomorrow Morning than You Have for Months

(Every Statement Certified From Actual Experience)

Send the Coupon for your first three Fayro Baths

Thousands of smart women have found this easy way to take off 2 to 4 pounds once or twice a week. These women take refreshing Fayro Baths in the privacy of their own homes.

Fayro is the concentrate of the same natural mineral salts that make effective the waters of twenty-two hot springs of America, England and Continental Europe. For years the spas and hot springs bathing resorts have been the retreat of fair women and well-groomed men.

Excess weight has been removed, skins have been made more lovely, bodies more shapely and minds brighter.

The Hot Springs are now Brought to You

A study of the analyses of the active ingredients of the waters from twenty-two of the most famous springs have taught us the secret of their effectiveness. You can now have all these benefits in your own bath. Merely put Fayro into your hot bath. It dissolves rapidly. You will notice and enjoy the pungent fragrance of its balsam, oils and clean salts.

Then, Fayro, by opening your pores and stimulating perspiration forces lazy body cells to sweat out surplus fat and bodily poisons. Add Fayro to your bath at night and immediately you will lose from 2 to 4 pounds in an easy, refreshing and absolutely harmless manner.

Your physician will tell you that Fayro is certain to do the work and that it is absolutely harmless.

Fayro will refresh you and help your body throw off worn out fat and bodily poisons. Your skin will be clearer and smoother. You will sleep better after your Fayro bath and awaken feeling as though you had enjoyed a week's vacation.

Lose Weight Where You Most Want to

Fayro reduces weight generally but you can also concentrate its effects on abdomen, hip, legs, ankles, chin or any part of the body you may wish.

Results Are Immediate

Weigh yourself before and after your Fayro bath. You will find you have lost from 2 to 4 pounds. And a few nights later when you again add Fayro to your bath, you will once more reduce your weight. Soon you will be the correct weight for your height. No need to deny yourself food you really want. No need for violent exercise. No need for drugs or medicines. Merely a refreshing Fayro bath in the privacy of your own home.

Try Fayro at Our Risk

The regular price of Fayro is $1.00 a package. With the coupon you get 3 full-size packages and an interesting booklet "Health and Open Pores" for $2.50 plus the necessary postage. Send no money. Pay the postman. Your money refunded instantly if you want it.

HERE'S PROOF

Read what Fayro Baths have done for others

"Three Fayro baths reduced my weight 11 pounds in 8 days. I feel better than I have felt for years."

"I weigh 16 pounds less and feel younger and sleep better. Fayro is wonderful."

"My double chin vanished in the magic of Fayro baths."

"My hips were always too prominent until I commenced Fayro baths. I have lost 12 pounds."

"Thank you for Fayro. I lost 14 pounds in three weeks; feel better and certainly look better."

"Since childhood my thick ankles have always been a source of embarrassment. Fayro baths have reduced them beautifully. Thank you very much.

For obvious reasons, names are not quoted, but every letter published has been authorized and name and address will be given on request.

More Than a Million Fayro Treatments Have Been Sold

Fayro, Inc. PFU-8-29
821 Locust St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

Send me three full-sized boxes of Fayro in plain package. I will pay the postman $2.50 plus the necessary postage. It is understood that if I do not get satisfactory results with the first package I use, I am to return the other two and you will refund all of my money at once.

What is the one great secret of a woman's charm?

WHAT makes a woman irresistible to men?

It cannot be beauty alone, for many women without beauty are charming.

It cannot be personality alone, for there are women with rich personalities who somehow do not charm us.

It cannot be dress alone, for even the best-dressed woman can look unattractive.

What is the subtle, elusive quality which makes a woman stand out sharply in contrast to others—which draws all eyes in her direction the moment she enters a room—which makes her attractive at all times, in any clothes, at any age?

Why Many Plain Women Are Appealing

According to Josephine Huddleston, famous expert on beauty and feminine appeal, any woman can be charming. "Even a homely woman can make herself attractive if she knows how to express feminine appeal," says Miss Huddleston. "Without that appeal, even the most beautiful woman has no charm."

For years Josephine Huddleston has conducted a charm and beauty column syndicated in many newspapers and reaching millions of women. Hundreds of thousands of these readers have written to her for intimate advice . . . and she has had an unusual opportunity to study individual needs. As a result, no one is better qualified than she to help women become more appealing.

"Secrets of Charm" By Josephine Huddleston

Because so many of her readers requested it, Miss Huddleston has written a book which she calls "Secrets of Charm." It is a complete outline of tested methods for expressing feminine appeal—based upon years of experience with women of every type.

No woman can afford to be without this gold mine of valuable information! Here are the secrets of famous stars and models—the specialized knowledge of the beauty salons—the scientific hints of the best physicians. It is one of the most important and significant books on feminine charm ever written.

Complete In One Volume Examine It FREE

Josephine Huddleston has shown hundreds of thousands of women how to be more attractive. She has helped them express personal beauty they never even dreamed they possessed. Her secrets of charm are never failing; they have been used successfully by stars, models, society women. Miss Huddleston herself is a celebrated beauty.

Whether you are tall or short, fat or thin, blonde or brunette—"Secrets of Charm" will show you how to make yourself more attractive! "I salute Miss Huddleston's volume!" says Florenz Ziegfeld.

Please examine it FREE. Try some of the "secrets"—judge for yourself. If you aren't thrilled and delighted, return the book within 5 days and it costs you nothing. Otherwise keep it as your own and send only $1.98 in full payment. Send off this coupon NOW!

Examine this remarkable book FREE

G. P. Putnam's Sons,

You may send me "Secrets of Charm" by Josephine Huddleston free for 5 days' examination. Within that time I will either return the book, or keep it as my own and send only $1.98 in full payment. I am the judge. I will keep "Secrets of Charm" only if I want to.

HELLO EVERYBODY

In my next picture, 'Smiling Irish Eyes', I'm actually going to— TALK to you—SING for you"

Folks you ain't heard nothin' yet! Wait—you have a big thrill coming.

Imagine the excitement when you HEAR the voice of the greatest of all screen stars—when you meet the real Colleen for the very first time.

That's the treat the next First National Vitaphone TALKING Picture—"Smiling Irish Eyes" has in store for you.

Colleen not only TALKS all through it, but SINGS four songs you'll whistle for days, and DANCES like only she can.

Watch for the date in your home town!

FIRST NATIONAL VITAPHONE TALKING PICTURES

The Editor's Opinion

MOVIE MUSIC—AND OTHER TALKIE DEVELOPMENTS.

Captain Roscoe Fawcett, Editor

ONE of the strange phenomena connected with sound pictures which we accept without surprise in this miraculous age is the growth of the theme song. A frantic producer cries, "We gotta have a tune!" A frenzied composer sits down at a piano, and in a few weeks, check girls in Palm Beach and garage men in Fargo are humming another song.

Al Jolson scribbled a few lines on the cardboard of a shirt which had just come back from the laundry as he put on his black-face make-up for The Singing Fool. In New York, Buddy De Silva moved the piano in his apartment to the telephone, and in a few minutes' time, over thousands of miles of long distance, Sonny Boy came into being.

Con Conrad, who wrote much of the music for the Fox Follies, sits down at the piano, without an idea in his head, works himself into a frenzy of rhythm and out of it comes a popular hit.

Music publishers tell me that before the advent of the theme song, it was most exceptional for a popular song to run into a million copies. Now it is a poor theme song indeed that doesn't sell that many.

Imagine the despair of a Beethoven if told he had to knock out another Sonata before quitting time to synchronize with that necking scene under the lilacs. Music, in the trend of modern times, is undergoing the change from an art to a business.

Fighting the Combines

AS MERGER follows merger, in the frantic film world, there are gradually coming to the fore certain lone wolf producers from whom we may expect great things. One of these is Jimmy Cruze, long an outstanding figure in the industry. Very quietly, without any fanfare of publicity, he has taken over a studio of his own, completely disregarding the mergers, and has two pictures under production which promise to be world-beaters. He isn't worrying about an outlet. Any releasing organization will be glad to show his pictures.

F. W. Murnau, the great German director, and Robert Flaherty, famous for his films of far places, will make pictures together at the Color Art studios as soon as they return from a trip to the South Seas.

Chaplin remains the mystery man among the artists who have walked alone, but it seems more than probable that following his split from United Artists, he too, will become a lone wolf and produce his pictures without benefit of supervisors.

The appearance of these solitary figures on the picture horizon is a healthy thing for the industry in this day of consolidation. Free from studio policies and politics, they will make pictures that will set a standard for the others.

Now—Color

OUT of a clear sky, Warner Bros. have dropped another bombshell into the industry almost as great as The Singing Fool, the first widely successful talkie, with the production of On With the Show, the first big picture to be made entirely in color. It will silence once and for all the critics who have said it is impossible to make a picture all in color because it is too hard on the eyes. There is nothing hard on the eyes about watching the twinkling legs of comely chorines filmed in their pleasant natural tints. Warner Brothers are wise enough to realize, however, that color can be used effectively in the reproduction of musical comedies, and they are going to confine it to this medium, at least until the public becomes accustomed to color as it has to sound. There are still too many obstacles in the way of color films to allow them to become universal yet, such as the high cost of production, involved by more expensive sets and costumes, and the lack of sufficient apparatus. But when we think back to the first color film, The Dhurbar of India, made some fifteen years ago, which looked like changing stop and go signals in a motorist's nightmare, we can realize that all things are possible.

Why Bring That Up?

THE screen career of little Davey Lee is in danger of being snuffed out as suddenly as it came into being. A few months ago he was taken from studio to studio as an extra, and it was a lucky day when he could get five dollars for his services. He was chosen from a group of extras for the role in The Singing Fool, which picture made him. Lately he has been making $650 a week. But when the Publix Theaters offered $3,500 a week for personal appearances, it made that sum look small. But there was a clause in his Warner Brothers contract forbidding personal appearances and now they are suing for termination of the agreement. If the suit is successful, he may of course, sign elsewhere, but smaller matters than that have terminated equally spectacular careers.

It all brings up the question whether the studio or the actor deserves the credit for these successes, and whether a career is an actor's own private property. But that can be argued ad infinitum, and, as Moran and Mack would say, I'd rather not talk about that.

DeLuxe First Nights

FOR some strange reason, talkie first nights in New York have acquired a standing among the intelligentsia and the world of celebrities, never attained by silent pictures. Famous names of the entire entertainment field that shunned silent picture openings are now as thick at talking picture openings as at any stage premiere. And prices have sky-rocketed accordingly. Eddie Dowling's Rainbow Man, far from a sensational picture, attracted great crowds of notables. And consider these names "among those present," at the opening of The Cocoanuts, with the Four Marx Brothers: Marilyn Miller, Claudette Colbert, Jesse Crawford, Paul Ash, Mary Eaton, etc., etc. Perhaps it is only loyalty, for many of them are already packing their bags to go to Snappy chorus ladies, as this group in a scene from Broadway Babies, starring Alice White, once sang and danced only for blasé Broadwayites. Now musical comedy entertainment has been brought within the range of every neighborhood theatre via the talkies.

Hollywood. However, I don't imagine producers care so much about the celebrities at openings as long as Pa and Ma and the family are there when the picture hits what Mr. Mencken is pleased to call the "Bible Belt."

Von Stroheim Returns

AMONG those who have found shelter with Cruze is none other than Eric Von Stroheim, the Peck's Bad Boy of directors. Von Stroheim, however, has returned to first role as an actor. He has finally surrendered. He says he will never direct again. It is a great tragedy, for he found the fullest expression of his weird genius behind the megaphone. But as regards his personal finances he is not suffering, for his salary as an actor is a high one—and he has no chance to spend any of it on the production.

Marian Reaches the Top

FOR all movie-struck girls who are thrilled by the prospect of fame overnight, I submit the case of Marian Nixon. At this writing she is working on the Warner Brothers lot, day and night, with John Barrymore as his leading woman in General Crack, in what will be her first overwhelming success as a recognized artist of the first rank. Five years ago she played her first part in Hollywood on that lot as an extra.

Those five years between have been filled with heartbreak and disappointment, alternated with success as a comedienne, but always with the chance to display her very real emotional talents denied her. Five years is a lifetime in Hollywood. But by sheer perserverance in the face of obstacles, Marian made the grade. Incidentally, she has one of the sweetest natures of any girl in pictures.

Not for a Steady Diet

YOU might as well make up your mind to like musical comedy, because in the next year or so, you are going to get lots of it. In music, producers have found a new toy. And until they tire of it, or unless the public tires of it first, the less recently found toy of talking pictures will take a second seat.

The trouble with musical comedies on the screen is that the plots are all so bad, and screen audiences have been trained to expect suspense, or at least, excitement. It will be a great thrill at first seeing and hearing all the celebrities you have heard about, but who have principally been available only to the privileged few who are able to see them in New York. We can only fold our hands and fervently pray that the producers will turn to something else before musical comedies get to be a frightful bore.

Extras Become Important

THE day of the star with a capital "S" upon whose shoulders rested the success or failure of a picture has passed with the silent picture. True, the big names still stand out. They receive the same billing at the box office as of old. But the wise ones now surround themselves with a strong supporting cast since the coming of spoken lines has changed drama to an exchange of emotions between persons, and eliminated the elaborate pantomime which could only be expressed in talkies by the obsolete soliloquy.

Plotting to Spoil the Plot

WHEN are they going to stop breaking in on the action of a picture in mid-career, with the fate of all the characters hanging in the balance, to hear some one warble a few golden notes? They stopped the action of The Pagan so that we could hear Ramon Novarro sing. In Careers, Billie Dove's new picture, we are worked up to a great pitch of anxiety as to what is going to happen to her and her husband, and then left to wait for what seems like an eternity while an imported tenor entertains a garden party in the picture. He may have entertained the garden party. But he failed to entertain me.

John Gilbert, My

Even the steady glare of the spotlight of public attention could not reveal the true character of the screen's greatest lover—but here is presented a picture of the real John Gilbert, as revealed to Bob Moak.

By INA CLAIRE

In Ina Claire, lovely luminary of the stage and screen, John Gilbert has found his dream girl. His cinema romances were public property, but his love for Ina is a sacred thing, not to be shared with the world.

HOW is it that I have found real love after an acquaintanceship of only three weeks? The answer is that when love comes to you, you do not have to wait months or years to find it out. When John asked me to become his wife, I knew at once that I had found that which had long eluded me—a truly great love. We are very, very happy. We shall continue to be so. Of that I am positive. That is all that matters in life.

"What impressed me most during the first few days I knew John Gilbert? His mentality. I can honestly say that he is one of the most brilliant and polished gentlemen I have ever known. He is an idealist and I discovered that we have many ideals in common.

"John Gilbert, the actor is no more like John Gilbert, the husband, than day is like night. They have but one thing in common, these two Gilberts, and that is their gallantry.

"The 'love them and leave them' attitude he assumes before the camera is only a pose for his public. Down in his heart he is convinced that woman's love is God's greatest gift to mankind.

"The dash to the altar in Nevada—some might call it an elopement—was as foreign to the real John Gilbert as are many of his screen characterizations. To John, love and marriage are two of the most sacred things in life—things not to be taken lightly. But when John proposed and I accepted him, we could see no reason for a long engagement. We are old enough and worldly enough to know our own minds. Each was positive that love had come to us.

"Under the California law, a couple must wait three days after applying for the license. It happened that John had two days off from the studio and I wasn't to start work for four days. That was the reason we made the overnight trip to Nevada.

"Some of our friends, when we told them of our plans, suggested that we go to Agua Caliente, Mexico, because it was nearer, but John refused to listen to that. Marriage meant more to him than merely a ceremony performed in the vicinity of a border gambling casino.

"In our wedding party were Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Glazer, whom I have long known and who are intimate friends of John. Arthur Richman, author of The Awful Truth, my first film story, was also in the party. So you see we were not running away."

THE dressing room phone rang sharply at this point, just as Ina Claire was about to unfold more intriguing facts about the real John Gilbert. I mentally cursed the instrument for interrupting us—it had been difficult enough to persuade Ina to talk about the biggest event in their lives. It is something sacred to them—something they believe they do not have to share with the universe. But a moment later, as Ina answered the phone I was thankful it had rung.

"Yes, darling, you know I do," I heard her say. It was John Gilbert inquiring as to whether she still loved him. Please remember that they had left home and gone their separate ways at 9:30 that morning. It now was 12:30. Parted for three long hours!

Then, from Ina:

"Jump in the car and run over. I'm entertaining a man in my dressing room."

The conversation was quickly concluded. But Ina, turning to me as she replaced the receiver, said:

"John will be here in a minute."

I got her back to her story by asking her what she meant when she said John had a dual personality.

"As I told you, I have seen him in only two films," she answered, "but I haven't yet found John in any way like the type he portrayed in Love, in which Miss Garbo was his leading woman.

"There he was the bold, sophisticated lover, and very gallant, I thought, in that he seemed to deliberately let Miss Garbo have the picture when it rightfully was his. The John Gilbert I know is not bold; rather he is bashful. He is not the hardened sophisticate he appears on the screen. Instead, he is a sweet, lovable boy. But he is as gallant off stage as he is on.

"There you have his dual personality. The world has seen one side of John Gilbert, and it is not the side that I know best."

Ina Claire is distinctly different from any feminine type that John has encountered on the screen. Her charms consist of an irresistable combination of beauty and brains.

THE new Mrs. Gilbert philosophized a bit.

"Sometimes, when persons are younger, they mistake infatuation for love," she said. "There is a vast difference in the two. The first is seldom lasting. The latter is."

And on the subject of the Gilbert kiss:

"John never has kissed me in the way he kisses his leading women. The screen kiss is the kiss of passion, not of affection. But as long as the public prefers the former, then I guess John will have to go on providing them in pictures. However, when he begins to bring them home, I will be sure that his love is on the wane. However, I am convinced that that time will never come."

"The John Gilbert I know is not bold—not the hardened sophisticate he appears on the screen. Instead, he is a sweet, lovable boy—as gallant off stage as he is on."

Miss Claire told me she had planned to make three pictures, then resume her stage work. But that was before she met John Gilbert.

"It is hard to give up something that you have labored to attain, but stage stardom passes into insignificance when placed alongside of a happy state of matrimony. I do not believe I would be satisfied to give up work entirely,

How to Break

EDITOR'S NOTE:

The talkies have revolutionized the situation for the newcomer in Hollywood, as well as for the star during the past few months. Almost overnight, conditions have undergone such a radical change that an entirely new type of girl is now in demand.

Realizing that girls who have movie aspirations would be interested in becoming informed as to these changing conditions, SCREEN SECRETS has persuaded Pearl Eaton, who is in charge of chorus production at RKO and who interviews hundreds of girls every week for extra jobs in the talkies, to give her version of requirements necessary for breaking into the movies under the talkie regime.

Miss Eaton has staged choruses for many of the leading New York stage shows, including Three Cheers, with Dorothy Stone and Will Rogers; Beatrice Lillie's shows; the revival of The Black Crook, and many other recent successes. She is also a member of a famous theatrical family and a sister of Mary Eaton.

GET out the tap shoes, girls! Roll up the carpet, turn on the victrola, and learn to make your feet behave to the tune of a syncopated clog or a buck-and-wing.

For if you want to break into the talkies in this year of our Lord 1929, and from now on, you must dance your way to Hollywood and you might as well get going on it now.

Many changes have come over this citadel of the cinema in the last few months and not the least of these changes is the re-routing of the road to stardom.

No longer is a pretty face of itself an entering wedge into the ranks of screen players. No use now for girls to come to Hollywood to take temporary jobs in shops or restaurants where they may flutter their eyelids and pout provocatively in hopes that a director not quite blind to feminine charm may some day come their way.

It is not what you look like now, so much as what you can do that counts. Beauty still is, and always will be, a considerable asset to a screen career.

No More Mobs

MOB scenes, affording thousands of lovely girls and stalwart young men a chance to mill about in the background and perhaps be recognized some day for bigger and better things, are out.

Which means that a popular pathway to fame and fortune is now closed. Those true life Horatio Alger stories of sudden discoveries among the ranks of extra girls, which lead to stardom overnight, are now a thing of the past. In its place a new road is opening up, the road to success through the talkies. It is a longer, harder road, which fewer will have the courage and the equipment to take, but it is a straighter, surer road, with fewer heartbreaks along the way. And it is a road that begins at home.

THE starting place for stars will be in the choruses of musical comedies on the screen. There is already a great demand for these synthetic versions of Broadway musical shows. And where there are musical shows, there is always a demand for chorus girls.

Here at RKO, as at other studios, the new regime is already in full swing. We are hard at work on the screen version of Rio Rita, Flo Ziegfeld's great success of two seasons ago. And there are many more to follow. For this picture alone, we will use about 100 girls. A small number compared to the mob scenes of silent pictures, perhaps, but every girl will have steady work for the duration of the picture, and a chance to show what she can do! And when you think of all the musical comedies in production at all the studios, it means that there will be a considerable demand for the girl who can make good.

Plain Girl Now Has Chance

THE plain girl with brains, with accomplishment, who has felt perhaps that pictures were closed to her because she did not have arresting beauty, is now to have her chance.

The girl who has beauty but no experience, had better learn — or settle down and be a housewife. It is no longer necessary to be an Olive Borden in looks to succeed in pictures. But it is necessary to know something—to be able to do something.

And the essence of that something is dancing. Singing is important, yes. And a pleasing, cultivated voice. But a girl will never get that necessary break in the chorus of a musical picture until she is able to dance.

PERFECTION in dancing is a matter of learning, of experience, of training, and of working—on the stage, before an audience. There is just one qualification that you must have at the start, without which it is useless to try to learn. That is a sense of rhythm. No one can teach it to you. You either have it or you haven't. That is easy enough to discover, however. If you can keep time to music, if you don't start to dance on the off beat, then you have it. It's as simple as that.

Granted that you have a sense of rhythm, first of all you

Merger!—Doug,

Although many fans are afraid that Mary can drama is an "expedition too rashly larity as a result, America's two greatest film with the Bard of Avon will produce

Old Bill Shakespeare beams with favor on his partnership with Mary and Doug in The Taming of the Shrew.

Imagine wistful Mary Pickford as Katharina, "as curst and shrewd as Socrates' Xantippe, or even worse." Vinegar changes to honey, however, and Mary is her own lovely self at the final fadeout in The Taming of the Shrew.

AND now it has really happened!

All these years people have been saying, "Why don't Doug and Mary make a picture together?"

Every year since they first decided to co-star in Hollywood's greatest off-screen domestic romance, they have toyed with the idea, discussed it, and finally filed it for future reference.

So often, in fact, has the subject come up for discussion that when they did announce recently that they actually were going to make a picture together, Hollywood was still incredulous. But matters have already progressed beyond the planning stage. They have had story conferences and they are now hard at work together before the same camera.

They would pick none other than William Shakespeare to write the original script for their first—and quite likely their only—co-starring appearance.

And they would find among that merrie gentleman's literary efforts the one piece that was ideally suited to them; a piece as riotous and fast-moving as a Sennett comedy, a piece that hasn't been spoiled for us by having it crammed down our throats as "literature" in high school, The Taming of the Shrew.

Bill Shakespeare was a fore-sighted old gent. He must have been gazing into his crystal ball, looking 300 years into the future, when he wrote that play. He must have written it with Doug and Mary in mind, for the two leading characters. Katharina and Petruchio are, in a way, a synthesis of all the characters for which Doug and Mary have been best known on the screen.

KATHARINA is not a shrew, as we usually think of the word—an ordinary, tiresome, fussy scold; she is a wilful, wayward, high-spirited, yet charming girl, who breaks heads and hearts with equal gusto for the purpose of exercising, in Bianca's words, "our sex's best prerogative, to wish, and have our will."

Petruchio is just the sort of swashbuckling, devil-may-care madcap which we will always think of as best typified by Doug Fairbanks on the screen. He is the tempestuous lover and blustering bridegroom, "the mad-brain rudesby full of spleen, who woo'd in haste and means to wed at leisure, who does everything under the name of the perfect love." And he tames Katharina by displaying higher spirits and tougher mettle than her own.

"The poorest service is repaid with thanks; and so shall mine, before you touch the meat," says Petruchio, pulling the sheet off the table, when Katharina remains obstinate.

Sam Taylor has finished the script for this first Shakespearean play to be made into a talkie, set designs have been approved, casting has been completed and rehearsals have begun.

Those who have seen the scenario say that it verges on slapstick throughout. At any and Doug's sally into the field of Shakespear-plotted" and that they may lose their popu-favorites are willing to gamble that their merger an epic that will make film history.

rate, audiences the country over should get many a hearty laugh over Petruchio's sorry wedding habiliments, which include: "a new hat and an old jerkin; a pair of boots that have been candle-cases, one buckled, another laced; an old rusty sword case ta'en out of the town armoury, with a broken hilt, and chapeless; with two broken points."

DOUG will ride a horse to his wedding "hipped with an old mothy saddle, and stirrups of no kindred." No horse like him has ever been in the movies, for Petruchio's beast is "full of wind-galls, sped with spavins, rayed with the yellows, past cure of the fives, stark spoiled with the staggers, begnawn with the bots, swayed in the back, and shoulder-shotten."

How Petruchio executes, step by step, his campaign to take the edge off Katharina's shrewish spirit and obstinacy, is a gem, which, translated into the talkies, should long endure in the annals of the motion picture industry. Petruchio craftily begins his design by treating Katharina with feigned frigidity, but with studied politeness, always reminding her that he loves her, while he sarcastically applies to her such adjectives as "sweet, loving, mild, meek and humble."

Bewildered somewhat at first, Katharina weeps when it appears as though Petruchio will fail to arrive for his wedding; and later, at the ceremony, when Petruchio swears violently in response to the priest's questions, causing the cleric to drop his book, Katharina trembles and shakes. As the priest stoops to pick up his book, Petruchio shoves him down, causing Katharina to pray —something she had never done before.

There are high moments of merriment in the honeymoon trip to Petruchio's country home, which should provide great scope for Mary and Doug's repertory of tricks. When Katharina's horse slips in the mud and falls on top of her, Petruchio goes blithely on his way; and when they reach his country home, he neither dines her nor lets her sleep, keeping her hungry with groundless fault-finding about the cook's work and keeping her awake all night with oaths and brawling.

SO THOROUGHLY tamed does Katharina become that on a visit from Petruchio's home to her father's town, Petruchio admires the moon, although it is broad daylight. Katharina calls it the sun, but on being mildly remonstrated with by her husband, she heartily agrees that it is the moon. He then tells her she lies—that it is really the sun—and again she concurs.

In the final act, Petruchio wagers 100 crowns with two other newly-married husbands that his wife is the most obedient of the three women and that she will come more quickly into his presence when he calls for her than they will respond to their husbands.

The priest let fall the book; and, as he stooped again to take it up, the mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff that down fell priest and book, and book and priest."—thus Shakespeare describes a sprightly scene in his famous story.

Mary Pickford is certain to shine in this scene, which is really the highlight and climax of the plot. Not only does Katharina win the bet for Petruchio, but she contributes a glowing speech on a wife's duties to her husband, a thorough victory for Petruchio in his taming of the shrew.

"We aren't going to pretend that we are ashamed of Shakespeare," said Doug, full of enthusiasm at the prospect of the play. "We aren't going to hide his name

SO THIS IS

BEING Charlie Chaplin's leading lady is not so bad, Virginia Cherrill will testify. Not that testifying is necessary, you know. There are luncheons in his dressing room, interpolated with exhibitions of the famous roll dance made famous in The Gold Rush, and tricky tangos performed by four agile Chaplin fingers to the accompaniment of a phonograph and the silvery peals of Virginia's laugh.

The big difficulty is Chaplin's rigid supervision of her diet. He doesn't want Virginia to go fat on him before he finishes his picture, which may take from two months to two years.

With this in view he bans all sweets from her menu and it is only the benign Henry Bergman of the famous Henry's Cafe that saves her life, for Virginia likes her pastries. Henry sneaks fattening edibles to Virginia when Charlie is not looking.

In four months, Virginia says, Chaplin has made only two scenes that he considers useable. In spare time, and there's plenty of that, Virginia engages herself in the projection room having the operator run off Chaplin's old comedies, A Dog's Life, Shoulder Arms and other old favorites.

Clara Bow and Joyce Compton laugh and dance their way through the IT girl's latest picture, Dangerous Curves, a circus story.

Jack Holt doesn't seem any too anxious about getting his neighbor, Ernest Torrence, all lit up.

Adois, Tango!

MONTMARTRE Cafe went Spanish for four Saturday afternoons last month, hired Molino's Orchestra in their bright-colored night shirts, served chicken patties, little bread-and-butter sandwiches and tea and advertised itself as offering a Tango Tea. It was the instant signal for all the sleek-haired lads of various descents, mostly Latin, to congregate with ladies and undulate here and there in the name of tango.

Estelle Taylor was star guest of honor at one five o'clock gathering, and the following Saturday Raquel Torres and Jose Crespo, representing Mexico and Spain, watched the proceedings. Among those who were baited by the rhythm of Andalusian music were Harry Crocker and Diane Ellis, Manuel Reachi (Agnes Ayres' ex) and Mona Maris, Helene Costello squired by Rene Cordona, Juan Morena and Manuel Sortres; Paul Ellis and others of Latin persuasion came unencumbered by femmes and proceeded to pirate upon the luscious ladies at the table of the guest of honor. Among those were Billie Dove, Lilyan Tashman and Jane Winton.

But apparently there was too little hot Spanish blood in Hollywood. Eddie Brandstatter stopped the Tango Teas and Carlos Molino and his Tango Orchestra folded their gay blouses, sadly, and took their guitars forth into a sad and unappreciative world.

Time for a Swim

WE HAVE it on reliable advice that John Barrymore has practically ruined the Costello-Barrymore plunge as far as healthy interest in aquatic sports is concerned. John has seen fit to install a beautiful antique sundial in the exact center of the pool, and although in itself it is a work of art, still various and sundry guests are loathe to make a detour to avoid it in their paddling about the dippery.

An All-Wheezy

WE HAVE before us, for consideration, the sad plight of the distinguished silent picture director who is unqualified to direct talkies, what with a listening microphone ready to catch every sound on the set, even heavy breathing. The director, alas, has asthma.

No Reflection on Sue

THE plate reading "for Sue's use only" that was attached to the mirror in Nick Stuart's car, has been removed. This gesture does not betoken a rift in the Carol-Stuart romance, but merely a gentlemanly regard for his lady love's feelings, since too many casual onlookers were all for chiding the two about the avowal.

Hair Today and Gone Tomorrow

MARY PICKFORD'S curls are gone forever. It would be a sentimental sacrilege, to her way of thinking, to pin them back on again for any purpose whatever. She keeps them, well wrapped and guarded, in a chest at Pickfair, and when someone asked her recently to consent to posing again with them tucked to her smartly shingled head, she was adamant in her refusal. Mary has never, since they were clipped from their silken mooring, had them to her head.

That's Her Weakness Now

IT'S funny how little things complicate our lives. Billie Dove's life has always been terrifically complicated by a weakness for animals. Her house is always something of a western branch of the Bronx Zoo and they are such a problem.

Once she saw a lamb. She simply had to have it. It was such a lamb! So she brought it home. Everyone told her that it was a goat, but she knew in her heart it was a lamb. Even when it butted a gardener and had to be banished to remote realms, she knew it was just a lamb that was misunderstood.

Then there were the prairie dogs. She saw them when she was on location in Arizona. They were simply irresistible. She had them brought home. But the unfeeling brutes refused to come above the ground.

Oh, yes! And Oscar, the turtle. Oscar was gifted beyond his kind. He could climb stairs. But Oscar had an unsocial habit of nipping at visitors' heels.

And now the animal kingdom has annexed her studio bungalow. There was a tortoise shell cat on the lot. One night it went Way Down East and brought a family of kittens into the world—in Dorothy Mackaill's best hat. Then feeling that perhaps it had committed a social error, the cat, with kittens, disappeared.

One day when Billie returned to her bungalow, here was the cat with a kitten, which it had brought in through a window.

Kiss'n Make-Up

HIS highness, Prince Louis Ferdinand, grandson of the old gentleman once known as the Kaiser, who might one day have been Kaiser himself if his family had gotten a break instead of a bust, is the pet of Hollywood these days.

At a recent party given in his honor, he stood in the reception line, kissing with European gusto the famous hands that were presented to him.

Al Rogell, the director, was looking on.

"Think," he murmured at last, "just think—of all the different kinds of powder he must have tasted in his day!"

Too bad this isn't a motion picture. Evelyn Brent's pose suggests some serious competition for Gilda Gray.

A Royal Yes-Man

AN ACTOR, finding a wonderful chance to try out his German, approached the Prince, and let loose a volley of gutterals intended to be intelligible to the Prince in his native tongue.

"Yes," said the Prince, smiling politely.

Nothing daunted, the ambitious actor let loose another volley.

"Yes," said the Prince again, hoping that was the right answer.

And still more gutterals.

"Yes," said the Prince, now with a sigh.

"You're okay, Prince," said the actor finally, "You knov how to get by in Hollywood."

A Latin Invasion

AMONG the budding romances is Helene Costello's marked penchant for the Latin race and one Rene Cordona, a young Spaniard, whose home is in Cuba. Although, we will admit, there is a question in our mind about her exact preference because there is a young Juan Moreno who travels in the three-some who tango and tea and swim together. Helene, you will recall, is not long divorced from her childhood sweetheart, Jack Regan, after a short married life.

Both of the Spanish lads are in motion pictures; Cordona

He's Funny that Way

THE wages of fun are French hilltop homes. That's what Chester Conklin now has. Chester, who used to be a Sennett comedian until Mr. Lasky thought he was funny enough for his pictures, has, with Mrs. Chester Conklin's aid, just completed the furnishing of a ten-room menage far above Hollywood in that section known as Lookout Mountain. It has a high iron fence, and a sign in front that bears a picture of Chester, false mustache, glasses and all. Inside, everything is very swell with marble illuminated columns and tile floors, to say nothing of a grand pipe organ that Chester, disconsolate, had to wait months for before it could be installed, for some reason or other. We personally suspect the organ people got lost en route to his hilltop domain. We almost did.

There is a large recreation hall on the second floor and in panels are framed pictures of Gloria Swanson, Bebe Daniels, Ed Wynn, Charles Chaplin, and a score of others with whom Chester has worked. Anita Loos, a really celebrated authoress, I mean, and the one who wrote Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, has written "to Chester, my favorite candidate for Lorelei Lee." There are pink and blue guest rooms and a nine-year-old dog named Jinx, who rises on his hind haunches at the sound of his name. It's a very swell house and the view from the veranda is one wide sweep of glimmering lights from Los Angeles to the sea.

Doris Hill and Nancy Carroll believe that it requires lots of sand and backbone to brave the smiles of a scorching California sun.

Gary Cooper, at his home, relaxes after the sun dips over the Hollywood hills and the day is done.

Chester, in retrospective mood, remarked on the night of his housewarming, "It is a glittering sea of diamonds." Which is not a mean line from anyone's mouth, you'll agree.

True to Her Public

PATRIOTIC gesture on the part of Colleen Moore. It is not generally known that she makes a habit, through her manager, of buying municipal bonds from every state in the union, and for this reason. Colleen feels that each state contributes to the revenues secured through the showing of her pictures and, therefore, in reciprocity she is glad to put golden clinkers back into their municipal coffers.

Cutting Down the Budget

ONE reason Lois Moran and her mother, Gladys Moran, give for opening the Evans Sport Shop near the Beverly-Wilshire Hotel in Beverly Hills is that Lois needed so many sport things in her wardrobe that it kept her poor buying them, what with the exorbitant prices. The most simple way, then, to solve the problem was to establish her own fashion font. Which she did, with marked success.

Writing for Money

MORE fun and everything when they initiated Billy Bakewell into the Thalian Club. They blindfolded him, but not for a cigarette test, and placed him in a chair that had been electrically wired.

"Now before we continue this initiation," said Lincoln Stedman, president, "I want to make a little plea for the Thalian Beach House. We need money if we are going to put it over. We need at least one hundred dollars. The first person who stands and waves his hand in the air, will be privileged to write a check for that amount."

Phyllis Haver rises to chirp that this is a night club scene from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Thunder, starring Lon Chaney.

With that they let the electricity run into Bakewell's chair. "And I jumped three hundred dollars worth," said Billy, telling of it later.

Such are the little pranks that make Thalian life worth living.

Heavywit Champion Tells One

PERTINENT, or impertinent (as you see fit) comment, from Arthur Caesar, heavyweight wit champion from Broadway, now frisking in Hollywood. It seems a producer invited him into his projection room to ask his verdict on a picture that was very, very bad, indeed.

"Vhat vould you do vid it?" the producer asked, palms outspread.

"Well," answered Arthur, after a pause, "You can tear it down and make mandolin picks of the celluloid."

Nick Goes to Jail

NICK STUART traveled all the way to Paris to meet up with his most embarrassing moment.

Fox sent the young leading man over to play the role of a news-reel cameraman. Fifteen hundred persons congregated within a few minutes after the equipment had been set up in a street of the French capital. Traffic was blocked.

Two French cops rushed up to Nick, protesting in loud tones, and Nick, thinking Director Dave Butler was putting one over on him, pushed the policemen out of the way.

It took Butler half a day to induce attaches at the American embassy to obtain Nick's release from jail.

Blame it on the Talkie

INNOVATIONS in the making of talking pictures: George Arliss, veteran stage star, now making The Green Goddess and Disraeli for Warner Brothers, halts work every afternoon at 4 o'clock while Jenner, his "man" for twenty-three years, serves him tea.

Ina Claire, also a stage importation, moves about the unventilated Pathe sound stages dragging her own oxygen tanks.

Next thing we know C. B. De Mille will be caught directing a film minus his famous boots.

Clara Sunburns Dangerous Curves

BELIEVE it or not, Clara Bow sleeps on her stomach.

Not long ago Clara hied herself to her summer home at Malibu Beach, donned a bathing suit, and proceeded to take a mid-day beauty nap in the sand.

"Third degree burns," pronounced the doctors, summoned the next day.

For one whole week, Clara dined off the mantel. Her picture, Dangerous Curves, in which she portrays a bare-back rider, was held up for the some length of time.

Beware of the Clause

WHEN a screen player tells you that his employer has awarded him a long-term contract, he doesn't exactly mean what he says.

Movie agreements today are more or less one-sided. The producer signs the actor for five years in a series of six-month options. He can hold the star for the full term or he can drop him at the end of any six-month period.

All of which means that the actor actually has a long contract, with a clause inserted making it possible for him to be fired every six months by something other than enthusiasm.

Kathryn Crawford kicks back her heels in delight when she hears she's been chosen to sing with Jean Hersholt in Universal's The Climax.

Leaves from an Extra Girl's Diary

This month SCREEN SECRETS culls a page from the diary of Francois Fern, who glories in her extra's job in Hollywood.

My Diary

Well, I'm something to look at now, because last night I was at the Montmartre, as a guest!

It happened this way. I met a big Daffy and Dough man from the east who wanted to see stars. I naturally suggested the Mo-mart, never once thinking he would actually take me there, but he did. I felt like a Gloria Swanson, climbing those golden padded stairs, while the orchestra played The Man I Love. Well, we got a ring-side table and were handed a bill-of-fare. Gosh, I took a hurried look at it and decided they didn't know any signs except dollar signs, so I shoved it away and said, "Well, Mister, I'm not hungry so I'll just take lamb chops." And it's a good thing I didn't order anything more, because those lamb chops cost $16.50.

The Two Black Crows are here in Hollywood making a picture—over at Lasky's studio and I am, or rather was, playing a nurse. We worked on the big new sound stage. Gee, it's like a huge ice-box, only it isn't cold. You go through two doors a foot thick, which are closed and barred after you, on the outside, so once you're in, you're there to stay, until your time is served or you're let out on good behavior.

It was a hospital scene. We were all gathered around Moran, who is supposed to have been injured, and we were to weep. The scene was going great when I happened to think how ridiculous it was to be weeping instead of laughing over "The early bird catches the worm" and I giggled under my breath. No one noticed it then. But, when we went into the play-back room to hear it, there was my "tee-hee-hee" as plain as day.

And oh, did the mercury go up! I'll say so! That director hit the ceiling and screamed, "Who did that?" For once in my life, I didn't imitate the Father of my Country and confess, I just patterned my actions after a more recent occupant of the White House and played Silent Gal. It was rather a dirty trick to play on the other girls, but I felt as my mother did when she spanked me for something I didn't do: It'ud make up for some time when they should have gotten it and didn't.

Just after lunch, George Bancroft visited the set. He has always been my Big Moment so I sidled over to him and smiled. He smiled right back. And say, is that man smart? I'm headlining the fact that he is. Why, he took one look at me and said, "Just what are you doing here? You should be playing leads."

Wasn't it terrible about that aero-wedding of John Gilbert's? Still, I suppose it is nothing to be shocked about, since he does things like that ever so often. I saw him on the M-G-M lot the other day and, really, he didn't look as interesting as he did before. About the only hope we have left is Richard Dix and I get panicky every time he starts a new picture, for fear he will fall for the leading lady. Still I guess he's safe, since he didn't fall for Gladys Belmont, for honestly, she is the most beautiful little thing that ever lived and I'd forgive Richard Dix or anyone else if he grabbed her. She's a cousin of the Day girls.

Buddy Rogers day-dreams over the lovely feminine vision of his desire, which is none other than a composite of Mary Brian's hair, Mary Pickford's eyes, Clara Bow's nose and Marian Nixon's mouth and chin.

Buddy Rogers' Dream Girl

In love with five beautiful girls—that's Buddy Rogers' predicament. But he doesn't intend to marry them all—instead he hopes to find in the girl of his dreams the sum total of their charms.

By BOB MOAK

COULD Charles Dana, great journalist of a by-gone day, have returned to earth to sit at my side while I interviewed Charles "Buddy" Rogers on the subject of love, he would have lingered long enough to revise his famous definition of what constitutes news.

Mr. Dana, you will recall, was the gentleman who refused to get excited about the dog that bit the man. Now had the man sunk his teeth into the ear of the canine, well—that would have been worth talking about.

And just so in the case of young Mr. Rogers.

Mary Brian's soft, lustrous hair is appealing to Buddy, "perhaps because I am partial to brunettes," he explains.

I'll admit I was somewhat startled when this bashful unsophisticated boy from Olathe, Kansas, admitted to me that he was in love. It didn't sound like the Buddy who used to blush at the nod of a girl.

"Of course I'm in love—" said Buddy.

"Now that's news," the ghost of Mr. Dana would have remarked.

But—

"I'm in love with five beautiful girls," finished the star of the celluloid.

"Heavens!" the Dana specter would have cried. "That's BIG news."

"Miss Pickford's eyes seemed to bring out in me something that has since remained dormant" is Buddy's high tribute to America's Sweetheart.

BY HIS own confession, Buddy stands convicted of having perpetrated a gigantic fraud upon the world at large.

For three years, the sympathy of the universe has gone out to this lonely lad as his big, sad eyes have flashed into the screen close-ups. Old John Fan and his wife and daughter have wiped away many a tear as their thoughts wandered to Buddy battling for his place in the Hollywood sun.

Handsome, accomplished, successful Buddy! But what an empty life for a youngster just out of his teens! A $16-a-month room, with a police dog, a saxophone and a Ford car as his only companions! If he but had a wife, or even a girl friend to keep him from being lonesome!

Little wonder, then, that several millions hearts went out to Buddy Rogers.

But save your sympathy from now on. The only reason Buddy hasn't joined the benedicts ere this, is that he has been a bit too exacting in drafting the list of specifications for his ideal girl.

Let Buddy describe his dream lady in his own words:

"You see," he said, "it is going to be a rather difficult matter for me to find my ideal girl, for she is a composite of five with whom I have worked in pictures.

Dimples are Buddy's one great weakness. He believes June Collyer's are most attractive.

"She has the hair of Mary Brian. Her eyes are like those of Mary Pickford. She has the nose of Clara Bow. Her mouth is that of Marian Nixon. She has the dimples of June Collyer.

Clara Bow has a perfect nose. Buddy chose her as part of his dream girl.

"Whether she has a college education or whether she, too, is in the films, matters little. However, I must insist upon refinement and a sunny disposition.

"I should want my ideal to be able to play the piano, for music means pleasant evenings when you are alone with your wife. It is an antidote for any craving a husband might have to roam with his boy friends.

"I should also want her to be fond of horseback riding, for that is the sport about which I am most enthusiastic."

I asked Buddy if he would marry this dream girl if she could be found.

"Certainly, I would," he replied. "In fact where lives the man who wouldn't marry this vision of loveliness that I have sketched? Wouldn't she be marvelous—this composite of five wonderful girls?"

BUDDY believes he is sure of his ideal because of the opportunities he has had to study the originals while working with them in the picture studios.

"I have picked Mary Brian's hair," he told me, "because I

THE PLUCK O' THE

Colleen Moore inherits from her sturdy Irish ancestors a tenacious manner of fighting her own battles and in her first talking picture, Smiling Irish Eyes, the inimitable character of this popular lass is plainly revealed.

THE Cathedral-like hush of a Vitaphone stage during recording was interrupted by angry words, softened somewhat by a delightful Irish brogue: "An' what right has that scatter-brained swaggerer to be stintin' us of our divarsion?" demanded a resentful feminine voice. "Isn't it true that I've been stayin' up o' nights gettin' my new dress ready, and didn't we have the auld house shod just so he could be takin' us to the fair tomorrow?"

The speaker wasn't visible from where I stood.

The silence-bell had caught me behind one of the bulky sound-proof camera booths that formed a concealing semi-circle about the scene being filmed, and I stood in a state of suspended animation, afraid to make a move for fear that it might echo in the sensitive microphone.

Nevertheless, it wasn't difficult to visualize Colleen Moore, characterizing a saucy little daughter of the "Auld Sod," with her "Irish up." The charming brogue was an audible version of the quaintly costumed colleen I had seen a few moments before, talking eagerly with several members of the staff—a sparkling personality in a slender, animated body.

The vivacious spirit of Colleen is admirably suited to her latest role in Smiling Irish Eyes.

Certainly, no screen role Colleen has even enacted so perfectly suits her appearance and personality as her characterization in Smiling Irish Eyes. If she lived in a thatched cottage in County Kerry instead of the attractive, modern residence she occupies in exclusive Bel-Air, Colleen would be precisely the rougish little Kathleen she is portraying in her first all-talking picture. She wears her little Irish shawl in a jaunty fashion that seems to typify her Irish personality; she slips easily into the musical brogue of Erin, and the sparkle of Irish wit in her screen dialogue is quite like the flashes of quick humor that characterize her own speech.

A keen sense of humor, a true Irish love of drama, and undeniable pluck are qualities that have brought success to this winsome miss.

IT MIGHT be gathered that anyone with the name of Colleen Moore comes honestly by such Celtic traits. She does, despite the fact that it is merely her professional name. Before her marriage to the producer of her pictures, John McCormick, she was Kathleen Morrison, and —but let me tell it in her words:

"Irish?" exclaimed Colleen, in response to my question,

IRISH

By BURNS BRADLEY

James Hall seems to have the situation well in hand with Colleen Moore in this love scene from Smiling Irish Eyes.

Colleen with Granny, who tutored her in the true Killarney brogue which the petite star has mastered to a delightful degree of realism for her latest role.

after we were seated for a chat between scenes. "Well, my grandfather's name was Patrick Kelly, if that's any indication—Pat Kelly, of County Kilkenny, Leinster, Ireland. He was a big, impulsive Irishman, who eloped to America with his 'acushla'—That's just an Irish expression for 'sweetheart,'" she explained, noting that I was puzzled, and then continued: "The Kilkenny girl he married was Mary Moylan. She's over eighty now, and she lives with mother and dad just a few blocks from us. When I first came to Hollywood to go into pictures, granny came along, and she's just as interested in my screen work today as she was then.

"Kilkenny isn't far from the Killarney district, which is the setting for Smiling Irish Eyes, so granny speaks the brogue we use in the picture. Naturally, I learned how to speak my lines from her. It just pleases her tremendously to know I'm making an Irish picture.

"Well, I'm getting 'way ahead of myself. Mother is the daughter of Patrick and Mary Kelly—she was born in Michigan, and christened Agnes.

THE other side of the family is Scotch. Dad's parents were Robert Morrison and Mary Henderson Morrison, natives of Glasgow, who came to America shortly after their marriage. So you see, I'm really Scotch-Irish."

"Didn't some genealogist say that the combination of Scotch and Irish blood is unusually well-balanced?" I offered.

"Perhaps," replied Colleen, "but sometimes my Scotch and Irish pull me in opposite directions. The Irish side of me is always stepping on the accelerator, while the Scotch is stepping on the brakes!"

"Well," I commented, "The Irish must step the hardest, because you certainly have gotten somewhere in the world."

"Oh, that's just the 'luck o' the Irish,'" said Colleen, depreciatingly, and was off with a quick smile and a hasty apology in response to a call from her director, William A. Seiter.

Possibly the proverbial "luck o' the Irish" had a part in carrying Colleen to the peak of screen popularity, but there are most certainly other qualities, peculiar to the

Harry Carr

AT THE end of the seventh inning, everybody leaps out of the bleachers into the reserved seats—first come, first served—and look out for your own shins.

That about describes the present condition of Hollywood. On account of the talkies, all previous bets are declared off.

Everybody who has been a flop in the movies is stampeding in again. All the old plays are being re-painted until they look darn near as good as new. Old pictures are having conversation squirted into them. Ladies whose faces didn't screen are hopefully trying to convince the producers that the audiences will not notice their buck teeth hardly at all—now that they can use their velvet voices.

Taking it by and large, I should say that Hollywood has become a free-for-all scramble. May the best man win—only, he isn't at all likely to.

A "Success Story"

NOW this is really curious. I don't know if he quite realizes it, but Warner Baxter, who comes pretty near to leading the parade in talkie success, owes his change in fortune to a piece of business in a picture.

He says, himself, that he changed his luck by mental treatments. He went to his open window every morning and faced the rising sun with thoughts of success.

It is a cinch he got that from Ramona. In every old Spanish household in the early days of California, each member of the family did that very thing—with a prayer and morning hymn.

However it may be, In Old Arizona still remains one of the most successful of the talking pictures.

Dry Rot

I DON'T know how the talkies are going to come out in the long run; but I do know that they were inevitable.

The movies were dying of dry rot. Same old stale stories—same old stars. They were overworking the devotion of a very long-suffering and patient public.

After all, the stars whom we were supposed to adore consisted of a handful of extremely blasé young ladies and gentlemen—of whom we were growing tired.

Since Constance Talmadge recently became Mrs. Townsend Netcher, her screen career is ended, thinks Mr. Carr.

Look Out, Clara

IT IS a question which stars will survive.

Among those who are in danger is Clara Bow. She was lately the target for the most savage and brutal beating I have read in any public print. At that, it wasn't a blow. It was an execution by the ling chee—the death of a thousands cuts.

I think I was the first writer who predicted a great triumph for the delectable Clara. I still believe in her, but she is in danger.

She Hasn't Woids

THE great difficulty in reducing—or elevating—a Clara Bow movie to the talkie class is to find words.

On the screen, her wild, tomboy performances look cute; they have—as she has—virility, fire, enthusiasm, "IT." When you bring in words to fit—they do not fit. To put it as delicately as possible, Clara looks a lot of things not proper to be said. She lacks the voice of insinuation. Reduced to words, Clara's sparks become hot hunks.

The Triumph of Jeanne

OUT in Arizona, you still have to be careful what you say about the famous old gun fight between the Erps and the Clantons. And in Hollywood, you have to watch your step when you speak of Jeanne Eagels.

Lily Damita had hardly become settled in Hollywood when along came Prince Louis Ferdinand, grandson of the German ex-Kaiser, a-courtin'.

Having been disciplined and turned out to pasture by the Actors' Equity for having been unruly, Miss Eagels comes to Hollywood and makes a talking picture which must be the best or the worst ever made. There is no middle ground. Either The Letter is the last word, or else the director should be led out and shot and Miss Eagels banished to Siberia.

The Paramount producers think it has knocked the amusement world cock-eyed. After seeing it, they raised Miss Eagels' wages from $125,000 to $150,000 per picture.

A Silly Picture

ANOTHER of the numerous stage stars who have invaded Hollywood is likely to make good. She is Helen Twelvetrees.

This child really has an alluring and fascinating personality. Any girl who could survive The Ghost Talks must have something unusual. I'll put that down as the stupidest picture I have seen up to date.

I give the cruel world fair warning. The next time I see a picture which consists of a colored brother seeing a ghost in an empty house, I am going to leap up with a scream and throw an orchestra chair through the screen. A fellow can stand just so much.

Private Line

FROM THE INSIDE

The Wolf and Mary's Door

IF MARY PICKFORD hasn't become one of the richest women in the world within the last few months, then I am no guesser.

Coquette, which she made against every one's solemn warnings, will put at least $1,500,000 in her pocket. In addition to this, I understand that she cleaned up on the stock market when it was announced that United Artists would combine with Warner Brothers.

At last Douglas Fairbanks is going to make a picture with "America's Sweetheart," Mary Pickford. They should smash all box-office records!

A Matter of Figgers

THERE is tremendous and uncontrolled excitement among the feminine hearts of Hollywood as to Mary's voluptuous figure as it appeared in Coquette. Many ardent friends contend that it just grew that way. But others—the cats!

Mary and Doug

FOR several years, Mary and Doug have said that some day they would make a picture in which they would co-star; and that it would be the last picture either would make. And now they are going to make a picture together—The Taming of the Shrew.

Whether the talkies are a boon or a bane to Clara Bow's career seems yet to be determined. But, judging from this picture, the IT girl doesn't seem to be worrying.

My private conviction is that it will be the last picture for them in the same sense that each one of Madam Schumann-Heink's concert tours is the final farewell.

No doubt they expect it to be their last; and no doubt they will expect every picture they make for the next 30 years to be their last. There will not be any "last" until they are buried. And movies will be taken even of that.

Patsy Ruth Miller is finally really and genuinely engaged; at least, this time she admits it. Tay Garnett is the lucky one.

Screening Shakespeare

WERE it involving any one else, I should say that a picture made from a Shakespearean play would be the last for any one who made it. But I have an almost superstitious respect for Mary's business judgment. I have heard of people who had their fingers on the pulse of the public. Mary doesn't wait for the pulse; she gets it at the heart pump.

Mary Will Manage Lillian

A LITTLE bird whispers to me that Miss Pickford is going to take over the management of Lillian Gish's screen career. If she does, watch the Gish!

You can paste this in your hat: the greatest part of Miss Gish's career as an actress is yet to come. You are going to see a day when she is a riot at the box office.

That she is now down and out, snubbed by producers and ignored by the public, is partly the result of stupid management on the part of the producers and partly through a bad choice of plays on her part. Strange to say, it is the result of a pronounced inferiority complex.

All Lillian needs is a little conceit and some one to fight her battles. Any one who has ever been in a fight with Mary Pickford will rub his scars thoughtfully.

Von Stroheim—Actor

HOLLYWOOD is the place for irony.

When Von Stroheim signed to direct Gloria Swanson, it was in the contract that he should not be one of the actors. That was at the insistence of the producers.

Now Von has blossomed forth as an actor, having shed his directorial wand. No less an authority than Madame Nazimova says he is the best actor who has ever been on the screen. I am inclined to agree with her.

Jim Cruze has signed Von for a great role — as an eccentric ventriloquist in his new picture.

Director St. Clair

Harold Lloyd, Mary McAlister, and Mal St. Clair, enjoy a welcome moment of relaxation on the set of Lloyd's forthcoming picture, Welcome Danger.

As told by MAL ST. CLAIR to Ruth Biery

I AM called Hollywood's whispering director, because I never speak instructions aloud to my actors. If you were doing a difficult scene and I hollered aloud before the electricians, the prop boys and the assistants, wouldn't you be embarrassed? Wouldn't you be conscious of the fact that they were all waiting to see if you acted according to my instruction? Give them the benefit of the doubt! Then if the audience—and don't think that our motion picture actors don't have an audience as critical as any in a theatre—says, "Wasn't that clever?" you'd get the credit. To let everyone know what I expect of him is like telling the point of a story before the beginning. You spoil the entire effect of the thing for both the actor and the people who are watching.

Take The Fleet's In for instance. There's the fight scene in the dance hall. Clara Bow is in the middle of the fight. "When the camera catches you, be sitting on the floor alone, oblivious, smiling naturally," I whispered. Persons on the set clapped when the scene was finished. After all, Clara did the acting. Wouldn't it have spoiled it if I had told her aloud how to do it?

Direct Clara? The story of all directors would be the same about this youngster. No director could make a really bad picture with her. But the secret is to use indifference. By all means, indifference! Pay no attention to her and she immediately reacts to you. Pay her a lot of attention and she is liable to have nothing to do with you. Always look beyond her when you are talking. When you begin a picture tell her the whole story. Then, each day, tell her exactly what part of the story is to be taken—in story form, always. She will sit like a child listening to a fairy tale, then say, "All right; I know!"—then go right in and do it.

THE funny part of it is that to Clara it's just a job. She's like a clerk or a stenographer who goes to work as a matter of course each morning. She has no feeling at all that she is an actress. She's just a natural, everyday kid earning her living. She turns on her emotions as you would turn on a water fountain. And you never have to wait for them! No glycerine, no onions. If it's time for tears—she has them; if it's time for hysterics, on come the hysterics. But her first time is the best. I never rehearse with Clara Bow. Late? Temperamental?—not any more than the average woman in the average job is temperamental. Of course, she doesn't really know until the picture is finished what it is all about. She knows the story but not the picture. Every morning when she comes on the set, it's, "What clothes do I wear today?" just as the clerk would ask, "What are the specials we're having?"

Says It with Whispers

This famous director, by shielding the feelings of the players he directs, secures the most that's in them.

The people who I've directed? Do you really want me to list them for you? Well, here's a few from my dictionary—Ford Sterling, Charlie Murray, Marie Prevost, Phyllis Haver, Chester Conklin, Florence Vidor, Pola Negri, Adolphe Menjou, Betty Bronson, Mary Brian, Richard Dix, Clive Brook, Lois Wilson, Harold Lloyd, Constance Talmadge, Don Alvarado, Alice White, Tom Moore, William Powell, Wesley Barry, Ruth Taylor—and Rin Tin Tin.

IF YOU insist, it is said, I presume, that I am the only director who never had trouble with Pola Negri. But that's simple. She is a child and you must treat her as one to get along with her. But she is at all times of interest—a fascinating woman and actress.

We would go into the projection room together to see the rushes. We would have all of her rushes strung together. She liked to look at herself and was not interested in seeing those who supported her. She always called me "Mally" and she'd slip her hand into mine and exclaim, "Is she not beautiful? Is she not gorgeous, Mally?" If a bad shot came along, she'd close her eyes and demand, "Wake me up when that is over, Mally."

While we were making The Tattooed Countess, she was madly in love with Rudolph Valentino. Whoever she was going with at the moment was always the greatest love of her life. She talked about him incessantly. One morning she came in and wanted to do her crying scene. She had had a quarrel with Valentino. We were doing light comedy; there was no crying scene but I said nothing about it. I just led her onto the set, called camera and directed her in a good cry. She didn't know it wasn't in the picture. She had had her way; she was happy. It had taken perhaps 10 minutes. If she couldn't have done her crying scene, wept out her emotions about Valentino, she would have been unable to work all day.

Mal St. Clair and his charming wife. The famous director's happy married life may be the result of his observations, during his work on the set, of nearly every sort of feminine temperament.

CUPID'S BULLETIN BOARD

The Ambassador of Love shoots his arrows into Hollywood hearts.

EVEN gay, careless Hollywood sighs at times, and wishes some of its "real romances of the film colony" would stay put.

Douglas MacLean

Douglas MacLean and his wife, who have been married for 13 years, have been considered among the reliably wed. Part of our social backbone, as it were. But now, even this pair has separated. The star is living at a beach club and his wife is residing in their Beverly Hills home. Mrs. MacLean was formerly Faith Cole, of a socially prominent Long Island family, her father having at one time been speaker of the New York State Senate. MacLean has starred in many of his own productions, and is well known as a crack yachtsman.

Ruth Elder to Marry

HOOT GIBSON tells the world that he wants Ruth Elder to be leading lady in all his forthcoming western thrillers. Hoot has gone in seriously for aviation, and altho he never used to appear at the popular dancing emporiums, is now often seen breaking into the social limelight with Ruth. It is believed that when Hoot's divorce decree becomes final these two will wed.

Ruth Elder

Reconciliation

WALLACE McDONALD, well-known screen leading man, reserves the right to change his mind. Or perhaps his wife, Doris May, clings to her feminine prerogative. At any rate, six months ago this couple were talking divorce and property settlements. Now they have decided it is all a mistake and have become reconciled. Hollywood has long pointed out the McDonalds as one of the film colony's ideally happy couples.

In Love With Love

BESSIE LOVE, who didn't have very good luck with her romance in the story of The Broadway Melody, seems to be having more romantic success in real life. Eddie Foy, the eldest son of the late Eddie Foy of vaudeville fame, is being very attentive to Bessie.

Pola's Heart Troubles

POLA NEGRI is not only going to get a divorce, it seems, but, it is rumored, may soon wed Rudolph Friml, the composer.

It is rumored that a break with Prince Serge Mdivani, her husband, occurred because, after he had secured a contract for the star with a French film concern, she did all in her power to break her agreement when a better one in England was offered her.

Romance for Colman

WHAT can this mean? Ronald Colman, who is politely indifferent to all the delectable stars of Hollywood, has been escorting Gertrude Lawrence, the English musical comedy star, about during his recent visit to New York City.

Carmel Myers Marries

CARMEL MYERS is now Mrs. Ralph Blum, wife of a prominent Los Angeles attorney. Mr. Blum is the son of a California rabbi and was for years a great friend of Carmel's father, the late Rabbi Myers.

Carmel Myers

David Wark Griffith once spoke of Carmel Myers as the most beautiful Jewish girl he had ever seen. She was one of several other film stars who began their careers in small roles in Intolerance and have since achieved fame. Her singing voice tests have been so unusually fine, that she will continue her career in musical comedy and in the talkie films.

William's Sweet Williams

Ada Williams

ANOTHER romance and one that has been hitherto unsuspected, is the engagement of Ada Williams to William Ince, the late Thomas H. Ince's oldest son, a romance on which Hollywood and Mrs. Ince herself look with extreme favor.

Bill has just returned from a trip around the world in time to celebrate his twenty-first birthday, but he couldn't forget the blue eyes of sixteen-year-old Ada during the cruise. They met nine or ten months ago at a party, and since then Ada has played in Raymond Cannon's Joy Street and also the part of one of the Daingerfield sisters in Magnolia. Isn't everything Magnolius?

Happily Ever After!

In which Joan Crawford and her hubby, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., give their recipe for a happy married life, touching on nearly everything from death to taxes, and reveling in love as it exists in the first pink flush of newlyweds' honeymoon.

By BELLE CLAIRE

Joan and Doug, Jr., have agreed to get angry one at a time—never both at once. But those who know this romantic pair doubt that either of them will ever show irritation toward the other.

Lovely Joan Crawford as she appears in Our Modern Maidens—her new husband, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., is in this film also.

JOAN CRAWFORD vows she is happily married.

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., solemnly swears he is happily married.

That makes it unanimous!

While the movie world slumbered, Joan and Dodo, as she affectionately refers to him, gave all their friends in New York the slip last June third, and were married in the rectory of St. Malachy's Roman Catholic Church.

It was to be a secret. Hollywood had them married in the frigid month of February, secretly of course, in Mexico. Very well, they would have the last ha-ha. But somehow, and there's always a thousand versions as to how things get out, a leak was sprung.

The wide world was soon in on movieland's cherished romance. For two years their friends had been waiting breathlessly for news of their marriage. Rumors burst forth periodically. Finally, it happened.

WHEN I met the newlyweds at their honeymoon hotel suite in the Roarin' Forties of New York, both of them seemed to be spinning in a whirling and dancing joyousness. The eternal beam of happiness played about their faces.

Young Fairbanks, always modest and usually in full possession of his poise, was palpably flustered. Joan, veritably blushing, pink, joyous and a smart eyeful in her sport ensemble, clung nervously to her newly-made husband's arm.

"Yes," gasped Doug, Jr., "we've just been married."

A wistful smile slid across Joan's lips.

"Gosh," exclaimed her husband, "we thought we could keep it secret. Well—it's out, so what's the use."

"How about plans for the future?" I asked.

"Now it's my turn to talk," asserted Joan, coyly.

"No, you're interruping me," protested Doug.

"But listen—"

"No, you listen to me," he insisted.

For a moment I thought I was going to be witness to the first scrap in the married life of Joan and Dodo.

SOCIETY in

By RUTH M. TILDESLEY
SCREEN SECRETS SOCIETY EDITOR

THE outstanding social event of the season was the costume ball given by the Basil Rathbones (Ouida Bergere) at the Beverly Hills Hotel. It was a brilliant, sparkling affair marked with gorgeous costumes and a wide variety of characterizations.

Mrs. Rathbone was superb as the Empress Eugenie—blazing with priceless French jewels—while Mr. Rathbone appeared as a Russian Cossack with a double-headed gold eagle on his breast.

Prominent among the two hundred or more guests was Prince Ferdinand of Germany, who is sojourning in Cinemaland. The royal visitor hovered close to piquant Lily Damita, who came garbed as a Spanish dancer and flirted outrageously. Bill Haines as a circus trapeze artist with a weird haircut and waxed mustachios, George K. Arthur burlesquing Harry Lauder, Marion Davies, mischievous Pierrot, and Newell Van Derhoef, a resplendent Arab in white satin and red rubies, proved the chief fun-makers of the evening.

Greta Garbo made a somber Hamlet and Peggy Woods a lovely Portia. Robert Leonard, disguised as a comic hunter with a funny little popgun, spent his time pursuing his own pretty spouse, Gertrude Olmstead, who was a soft, small, white bunny. A mysteriously beautiful Oriental turned out to be Jetta Goudal and a beautiful Rachel, Hedda Hopper.

John Roche was a romantic gondolier in green and white, Renee Adoree an adorable Parisian Apache, Eleanor Boardman, Grecian, in gold and silver, while her husband, King Vidor, disported as a Russian peasant. Perhaps the Irving Thalbergs (Norma Shearer) created more comment than any one else because they appeared dressed exactly alike in cocky West Point uniforms.

Marion Davies as Pierrot—she wore this tricky garb to Basil Rathbone's costume ball.

Then there was John Gilbert and two of his cronies, garbed as sinister Ku Klux Klansmen. When the cold gray dawn finally broke on the marvelous party of the Rathbones, John invited everybody out to his house to finish out the morning with a ham and eggs breakfast.

AN EAGER group of friends met Estelle Taylor on her return from the East. She was happy to be home again and looked youthful and charming in a dark blue sailor suit. Immediately everyone began to entertain in her honor—breakfasts, luncheons, teas and dinners followed in quick succession.

A SWIM in the surf preluded the dinner given recently at the beach home of Bebe Daniels. Marion Davies, Gloria Swanson and Colleen Moore created merriment over a pretended contest in high diving. John McCormick and Harry Martin posed as life guards ready to rescue the damsels. The remaining guests were Mr. and Mrs. B. P. Schulberg, Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Lehr, Joseph Schenck, Luther Reed, Marie Mosquini, Ann Pennington, Nance O'Neil, William LeBaron, Edgar Selwyn and Sid Grauman.

THE Montmartre was the setting for a brilliant luncheon given by Elizabeth Meehan for Fanny Hurst, who has come west to assist in the filming of her Lummox for the screen. Around the C-shaped table, decorated in delicate flowers and lighted with tall green tapers, were seated many of filmdom's elite, including Bebe Daniels, Billie Dove, Norma Talmadge, Lois Wilson, Lily Damita, Mrs. Richard Barthelmess, Mrs. Samuel Goldwyn, Alice Joyce, Anna Q. Nilsson, Hedda Hopper, Mrs. Raoul Walsh, Diana Kane, Mrs. George Lewis, Mrs. Warner Baxter and Mrs. H. B. Warner. Winifred Westover Hart, who is to play the title role in Miss Hurst's picture, was late in joining the party; she was wearing an attractive ensemble in black and white.

UNITED ARTISTS also entertained in honor of Miss Hurst. Besides the members of the press, John Considine, Winifred Westover Hart, Herbert Brenon and Elizabeth Meehan were present. Clever speeches were the order of the day.

THE birthday anniversary of pretty little Marceline Day was celebrated by her mother with a dinner-dance at the Ambassador. The tables were elaborately decorated with bright flowers and blazing candles and favors were tiny dolls—miniature dancers in bouffant skirts and modish figures in tuxedos. Alice Day assisted her mother in receiving.

Bidden were Messrs. and Mesdames Don Alvarado, Kenneth Hawkes (Mary Astor), Mervyn Leroy (Edna Murphy), Reginald Denny (Betsy Lee), Al Rockett and Ray Rockett and many others.

TO COMPLIMENT Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Irving of London, England, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Geraghty were hosts at a dinner recently. Mr. Irving is the grandson of the late Sir Henry Irving and is an artist of repute.

Mary and Douglas Fairbanks were dinner guests and were most enthusiastic in their praise of Mr. Irving's talents. The artist designed the sets for The Iron Mask and has consented to help with The Taming of the Shrew, which will be the first co-starring vehicle for Mary and Doug.

Carmelita and Sheila Geraghty assisted their parents in receiving. The guests were: Charlie Chaplin, Matt Moore, Hedda Hopper, Georgia Hale, the John Robertsons and Dennis O'Brien and Robert Fairbanks.

Problems in

When the film continues and the dialogue stops, when an actor sings a love song while he nonchalantly smokes a cigarette, when an actress recites passionate love lines while she munches a tea biscuit—something's wrong. This article explains such freakish happenings.

Hal Roach examines the new projection machinery which has been installed in his studios for "playbacks." Roach comedies in dialogue will be released by M-G-M.

THIS is terrible. I can't tell you any more."

It was Alec Francis talking, in The Terror.

He raised his fist for emphasis and when his hand came down, again he boomed forth: "This is terrible. I can't tell you any more." Then he turned, and as he strode across the room, his own voice followed him, seeming to haunt him with: "This is terrible. I can't tell you any more."

Of course the audience snickered—who wouldn't? Suddenly the screen went black and the once familiar but long forgotten "One Minute, Please" sign flashed on the canvas. Skeptics guffawed, children applauded and just natural died-in-the-wool pessimists vowed that the talkies never would be a success, that neither God nor science could ever hook up voice and action simultaneously and successfully.

That was months ago. Today, while most of the talkie troubles which beset the machine operators have been ironed out, life for the man in the projection room is far from a bed of roses. Equipment today is infinitely better than it was a year ago. Yet, things come up daily, which, while they do not reflect upon the ability of the operator, do much to keep the public in a semi-skeptical mood.

QUITE recently, Mary Pickford appeared in Coquette. Came the scene when she dramatically addressed her plea to Lewis Stone, her defense attorney. Things progressed splendidly to a bold and striking climax when —words failed her! Mary spoke, but no words came forth. The audience, keyed up to a high pitch of expectancy, turned dark looks toward the projection booth, but the operator was powerless to save the scene. The cell walls of the Vitaphone disc had broken down.

If you wonder how this could happen, picture a record many times more sensitive and many times softer than a phonograph record, upon which a standard phonograph needle is used. After a disc has been played from four to six times, the cell walls become quite fragile and in many instances they crumble unexpectedly, in the midst of a scene. When this occurs, the needle remains in one groove, like a phonograph needle at the end of a record, playing the same passage over and over again. If this catastrophe happens at the beginning of a disc, the operator stops his machine and starts a new record. Should this misfortune occur at the end of a disc, the audience will seldom notice the trouble, and in sound pictures, with no dialogue, they will not be cognizant of it at all, since sound alone is rarely of vital importance to an acting sequence, unless it occurs in the actor's playing a musical instrument. For instance, should the needle remain momentarily in one groove, or should it skip the sound track to another groove, the break in the music is not sufficiently serious to cause a bad break in the picture.

Talkie Presentation

By WALT RASCHICK

It was precisely at this moment in one showing of The Desert Song that the Red Shadow, played by John Boles, poured out his heart in fervent song to Margot (Carlotta King), while his lips were pressed to Margot's.

From four to a half dozen complete sets of discs are sent each motion picture house with each disc talkie picture. Incidentally, talkie disc playing begins at the center and ends at the outside, in exact contrast to a phonograph record, which begins at the outside rim and ends at the center.

RECORDING bass notes causes deep grooves in a disc, while soprano and falsetto notes, which producers try their best to avoid, barely make a mark on the disc, so that when the disc is played in reproduction, the bass notes cause the needle to dip and often remain in the low groove rut. Such an occurrence explains an actor's repetition of his lines. So also do high notes swing the needle rapidly and lightly over their grooves, often skipping portions of the disc grooves, with the result that whole sequences are thrown out of synchronization and thus ruined for the audience.

Take the case of Milton Sills in His Captive Woman.

Robert Milton, vocal expert, listens to Clara Bow's heartbeats, when the microphone is turned into an impromptu stethoscope. The IT girl looks worried, but Milton's expression indicates that her heart did everything expected of it.

In one scene the virile Sills grabs a fellow by the shoulder and yells: "You won't do it!" So forcefully does he shout and so low is his voice that the needle remains in the low groove. Sills strides across the room, whips out a cigarette and lights it, all to the accompaniment of his own voice: "You won't do it! You won't do it!" But by this time the operator realizes that this won't do; the picture stops abruptly and a new disc starts to play.

IN MUSICAL extravaganzas, the audience is often thrown into confusion by a strident discord, caused by the volume of the chorus' singing throwing the needle off the sound track. In one showing of The Desert Song, John Boles, as the half-witted Pierre, twice was heard singing, once when he was not even on the screen, although Carlotta King's (Margot's) lips were moving. This was rather difficult for the audience to grasp, to say nothing of such behavior's being a decided breach of etiquette on the part of Pierre. On another occasion, in the same picture, during a kissing scene, the Red Shadow pours out his heart to Margot in fervent song, while his lips are pressed to Margot's. It is such dire happenings as these that try the souls of the men in the projection room, over the heads of the audience.

And there are other problems, too, not caused by faulty equipment. In Clara Bow's recent picture, The Wild Party, for instance,

Twelvetrees Answers Your Questions

Hovering over the lovely head of Helen Twelvetrees is a flaming question mark that finds its answer in this remarkable interview.

By RUTH BIERY

HELEN TWELVETREES is one of the newcomers, one of the long list of Broadwayites which has invaded the movies. Only she came ahead of the others—sort of a vanguard for that long line of stage people who are pouring into Hollywood daily.

Naturally, she was curious about everything in Hollywood and the movies. Curious about the people—the Marion Davies, Bebe Daniels, John Gilberts, and Gary Coopers; anxious to see the Montmartre, the studios, pictures in the making. But there was one thing which interested her above everything else and that was the fan mail of which she had read so much and received so little.

Although she had been on the stage for years, made a hit as Roberta in An American Tragedy and a success in Broadway, she had received, like all stage people, a few mash notes and complimentary squibs, but no mail that necessitated a secretary or a special mailbox at the post office. Yet she understood that popularity was rated upon letters in pictures. "Billie Dove received more mail last month than Clara Bow. Gary Cooper and Buddy Rogers head the male heroes." She had read that often.

"I'm going to keep track of every letter and see what these folk who write film stars really want to know!" was her one Hollywood resolution, made the night she left New York City. Of course, she expected it would be years before she received enough to amount to anything. She has been here only ten months and her letters number hundreds weekly! She already has someone to help her open and sort out what the mailman brings daily.

With only one picture released, The Ghost Talks, she doesn't quite understand it. Of course, her election as a 1929 Wampas baby star helped. And the fact that she employs a capable press agent. But—

I CAN'T realize why, but here are the letters to prove it!" She showed me the neat stacks in the parlor of her little two-rooms-and-a-kitchen home which clings to the side of one of our nearest mountains. "And I've kept my resolution. I've listed all the questions they've asked me and when I get the money and can afford to answer each letter, I'm going to make it a point to tell them everything they want to know about me!"

"Just what do the fans want to know?" I, too, was curious about the letters which come to such a new person.

"I've made a list. I'll read it to you. First, 'Is your name really Twelvetrees?' Funny about my name. Almost everyone who writes is curious about it."

"Well, is it?"

"No, it's my husband's. My name was Helen Jurgens, but it didn't seem to bring me much luck in my profession," she made an unpleasant grimace. "You see, I went on the stage when I was seventeen but for two years I couldn't seem to do much more than carry a spear. That's what we call playing bit parts on Broadway; it's like extra work in pictures.

"Then I got a part with George Gaul in Kismet. I say a part. I was the atmosphere which draped the fountain. But I was thrilled just to be in his production. I used to slip up and change from one chiffon to another and rush down and watch him do his prison scene. Night after night, matinee after matinee, I stood there watching until he couldn't help but take notice. Then we'd talk together. I kept asking him how he got his start and he'd tell me about his experiences at the American Academy. I made up my mind I, too, would attend that school of acting.

"And my first year I saw Clark Twelvetrees play the lead in The Romantic Age, one of the school plays given at the Lyceum theatre. I was crazy about him. But I didn't know how to meet him. The day of the Pirates' Ball at the Ritz, I had an inspiration. I went out and got my costume, went back to school and hung around his classroom until he came out. I started down the stairs before him, carrying the huge box with my costume in it, tripped, fell—of course, he carried it for me and asked what was in it.

"Why, I'm going too!" he answered.

THAT night I completely forgot George Bradshaw Crandall, an artist for whom I posed for magazine covers, who was my escort for the evening. I danced every number with Clark. The next day he took me to lunch—and the next!

"The second day we also started out early for dinner together. But we landed at the New York city hall. They wouldn't marry us because I was from Brooklyn, so we rushed over there and got in just in time.

Back of Helen Twelvetrees' pensive eyes are the answers to many questions that pop up wherever her name is mentioned—answers that are an expression of her own insatiable curiosity.

FAST LIFE

An entertaining story of modern youth, with events revolving around a frenzied murder—and the birth of a greater and deeper love on the ruins of tragedy.

"And they never suspected a thing," Doug was saying. "Wouldn't they get a jolt if they knew?" laughed Pat.

Posed by Loretta Young and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

WHOOPEE was being manufactured in Doug Stratton's apartment.

It wasn't the largest shop of its kind in the world, but it turned out a quality product. None but the best grade of bottled-in-bond synthetic gin was used among the ingredients.

"Right off the boat," sighed Paul Palmer, son of the governor, as he tossed one off.

"Right off the side of the boat, judging by the wry face you just made and the shudders that are even now chasing each other up and down your spinal column," laughed Pat Mason, she of the glorious grin around which the party revolved.

"Come on, get aboard for the big parade," bellowed Rodney Hall, who was already well started. He picked up somebody's saxophone and began an Indian dance about the room. One of the boys with a guitar fell in behind him and a quick serpentine followed them.

"The band seems a little light," shrieked Patricia, and shoving a tall perfume atomizer into Doug's hands, led the way with him, pretending to play.

THE little apartment wouldn't have stood the strain if it had had enough chairs in it for the crowd, but Pat, who was studying interior decorating and had practiced on Doug's hangout, had solved the problem by making everybody sit on cushions that could be kicked into the corner when things got gay.

"They don't break so easily as chairs," she had told Doug, between kisses, before the party started.

There would have been poundings on the apartment walls if everybody in the place who was at home that night hadn't been having a party of his own. Trust Doug and his crowd to pick the right location. Little Pat's "three jacks," as she called Doug and Rodney and Paul, had to have a place to play and now they were playing in it with a short dozen of their cronies.

"Where'd you two disappear to over the week-end?" asked Tomboy Tina Johnson as soon as conversation became feasible and the cocktails were going around again.

Pat's eyes flashed to Doug's and for a moment neither of them answered. Silence began to be heard.

"Just a little trip up the country," Pat presently tossed off and jumped up to lead another parade. But it didn't go so well. The party had settled down to serious drinking and to petting in the pillowed nooks.

Pat didn't pet. Not there, at least, and not then. She never petted with one of the "three jacks"—not when the other two were around. She had enough trouble with them as it was. And besides, those days were over now. But she wasn't telling anybody.

SHE wondered what she was going to do about going home. Paul and Rod would both ask her. She must get a word with Doug before they did. They whispered together for a moment behind the colorful hangings of the doorway.

"I'll be back as soon as I can," she said. "I'll throw them both off by making them take me home. Paul can still drive his car."

And so, presently, there was a noisy leave-taking. The party had bogged down a little at the last—after that question of Tina's. And Patricia Mason ran lightly down the steps with Paul and Rodney. She threw a meaning glance back up the stairs to Doug.

"See you soon," she called, with bright laughter. There was something moving in her voice, something that gave to the words a special significance.

A quick ride through the deep night and she was at home. She ran lightly to the door, waving good-bye. Only she knew that there was no one in the house. The two boys shoved off in Paul's car and a few minutes later glorious Patricia Mason was hailing a taxicab and giving the number of Doug's place. Less than half an hour after the party died, Pat was back in Doug's arms in the bright room.

"And they never suspected a thing," Stratton was saying.

"Wouldn't they get a jolt if they knew?" Pat laughed and slipped away to Doug's dressing room, while the boy pulled out a miraculously concealed bed and adjusted it for the night, or what was left of it.

He was emptying the ash-trays and bundling the glasses and shakers and bottles off to the kitchenet when she came back more glorious than ever in orchid negligee.

NOW her soft body was in Doug's arms again, her moist lips on his. Those kisses of flame. Patricia Mason laughed—a laugh that was almost a purr. The girl flung herself upon the bed and pressed her hot cheek to the silk coverlet. Wonderful, wonderful love. How had she ever lived without it? She was glad she hadn't waited.

A window open to a tiny balcony was clearing the room of smoke and fumes of gin. She drank in draughts of the cool air. And then she screamed. For beyond the circle of light which now was the only illumination in the room she heard the step and saw the figure of a man.

"What's this?" a fuzzy voice inquired. "Another week-end trip?"

It was Rod's voice and Rod had had far too much to drink.

"What do you mean breaking in here through the window like that?" she cried. It was a silly thing to say. Rod stood there weaving. He was the sort that drinking made canny, suspicious, dangerous.

"I thought there was something funny," he said, "the way you looked at each other when week-ends were mentioned." His voice had steadied now. It was low, even, deadly. He laughed harshly. "And I thought you were—" He broke off with a gesture of disgust.

"Oh, for God's sake, Rod, go peddle your papers. We've been married since last Friday. Can't you leave us alone?" It was Doug's voice coming to the rescue.

"Married!" There was a world of scorn in the way that single word was spoken by the drunken Rod. Patricia felt as though she had been whipped across the face.

In a flash, Doug, in pajamas and dressing gown, sprang at the intruder.

"You insulting idiot," he whipped out. "Get out of here before I throw you out of that window. I'll teach you to sneak and spy on Pat and me. A swell kind of a friend you turned out to be."

THE girl cowered on the bed while they fought or tried to fight, the one befuddled by drink, the other hampered by the long dressing gown. She wanted to laugh at these two friends of hers scuffling there before her. It was too absurd. And yet there was the horrid lash of that scornful word. Deliberately or not, Rod had chosen to disbelieve, to doubt, the marriage. That, at least, was a question of fact. She sprang to her feet.

"Rodney Hall," she cried, "you get out of here with your rotton insinuations. We can prove we are married and if you don't leave at once I'll—I'll have you arrested."

Hysterical as she was, she realized she was still saying silly things. Why didn't Rod go? It wasn't fair.

Suddenly, the drunken one let out a howl of anguish and doubled up on the floor.

"Get up," came Doug's voice. "I didn't hurt you."

"I know it," Rod groaned, "but something's got me. It must have been that liquor. Call a doctor—quick." He let out another anguished groan and Doug flashed out of the room, just as he was, to bring up a doctor from the floor below.

Pat bent over the prostrate man to ask if there was anything she could do for him, when he sprang to his feet. She cowered back upon the bed, staring at his flaming eyes.

"Now," he cried with an oath, "I'm going to take you out of here —whether you want to go or not."

The girl screamed. He had been shamming. He had tricked Doug out of the way and now he was in an uglier mood than ever. He seized her by the arm.

"Go away," she cried. "Can't you see? Haven't you sense enough in your addled head to know that I wouldn't be here if we weren't married?"

Rod's powerful arms were about her. Rod's sickening breath fanned her face. Rod's voice told her in horrid terms what he thought of her and threatened dire things if she didn't get out of there with him.

SUDDENLY there was a rush and a crash. Doug had come back. Doug's fist had smashed into Rod's face. Doug was raining blows upon the cruel mouth that had leered down at her. The girl fell to the floor, freed from those brutal arms.

And now the two were battling in real earnest. Doug had thrown off the dressing gown and his movements were quick and sure and free. Rod, sobered, was fighting with a ferocity she had never seen before in any creature.

Pat threw herself back on the bed, out of the way of their plunging bodies. She wondered what she could do if Doug should be hurt. Every blow that found its mark on his face or body hurt her to the heart. Her breath was coming as quickly as his. Slowly he gave ground. The powerful Rod was proving too much for him, but he was making a real battle out of it.

Doug backed to the open door and then with one of Rod's rushes was borne out into the hall beyond her sight.

Hunches that Brought

Queer turns of fate have had an amazing influence on the lives of stars—no wonder they play for big stakes just on the dictations of a capricious hunch!

MARY NOLAN, blonde beauty of the cinema, stepped from her yellow sports roadster, and nonchalantly entered a Hollywood Boulevard cigar store.

From her purse she produced a five-dollar bill; from the pocket of her white leather jacket, a gem-studded cigarette lighter.

"I've a hunch you're going to pay for my lunch today," said Mary, addressing the alpaca-coated clerk as she tossed the currency on the counter and pressed the lever of the mechanical match. A tiny spark . . . a flame . . . Eureka!

"Thanks," remarked the actress as she picked up her five-spot, plus another contributed by the attendant, and retraced her steps to the curbing. A frown registered on the clerk's countenance as Mary pointed the nose of her car toward the Montmartre.

Dolores Costello is another celebrated member of the film colony who believes that hunches are worth their weight in gold.

Betty Compson had a hunch to keep this grass skirt, presented to her by a hula dancer—not long after she staged a comeback to the screen with Milton Sills in The Barker.

IT'S a great racket, this business of betting even money that the other fellow's lighter won't work on the first try," he told me a few seconds later. "Yea, a great racket—except when the party of the second part is operating on a hunch!"

And he knows. Doesn't he wager his cash against that of from fifty to a hundred persons a day? And hasn't he found that the percentage is with the house "except when one of them there movie blokes gets a hunch?"

Playing hunches! It's Flickertown's most popular sport, both indoor and outdoor.

The boys and girls of the silversheet don't consider themselves psychic, any more than you or I. They don't call these frequent urges to do things "premonitions."

In Celluloidia they are HUNCHES, nothing more. And hunches fill an important niche in their everyday lives.

Didn't Al Jolson make $1,500,000 on Warner stock on a hunch? Didn't Lon Chaney win his first film recognition in the same way? Didn't Raoul Walsh cop $18,000 on his wedding day? Didn't Bessie Love stage one of the greatest of all comebacks? And . . . .

Didn't Ben Lyon ignore a hunch about flying on Friday, the 13th, and didn't his plane crash, with injuries to himself and his co-pilot?

Yes, by all means, play your hunches!

IT'S because the luminaries of Shadowland are children at heart—children chasing rainbows and playing hunches—that they flock across the Mexican border to the gaming tables at Agua Caliente and the race track at Tia Juana. It's because they play on the hunch that Goldie's, an institution featuring roulette, blackjack and craps, is a Hollywood landmark; $25-a-hole golf is the rule rather than the exception on the Hollywood courses, and the extra of today becomes the star of tomorrow.

They preach against gambling in Sunday School. At least, it was considered a vice in my day. But listen to Jimmie Hall:

"When I play a hunch, I'm not gambling. To gamble means to take a chance. To play a hunch means I've got a sure thing."

So that's that, for Jimmie's views are identical with those of other hundreds of Hollywoodians.

Take the case of Al Jolson, who became a millionaire because of his ability to shout "Mammy" over the footlights. The blackface artist increased his income by safe and sane real estate investments.

"Play the stock market? Not me," he used to inform the friends who volunteered to let him in on the "ground floor."

Jolson signed a contract to make a picture for Warner Brothers, then a small concern trying to get along. "Trying" was the word in those days, if you know what I mean.

But Jolson had a hunch that Warner stock was due for a rise. Unknown to them, he bought their stock in the open market.

They say Al's salary and percentage on The Jazz Singer, the canned-tongue masterpiece of its time, brought him close to a million dollars. But his hunch on Warner stock increased his bank account by a million and a half.

Whatever may have been his financial fate during later fluctuations of the stock market, that was one time Al rode a hunch and made a real killing.

AND speaking of Wall Street . . .

When Lois Moran was making tests for the featured lead in Joy Street, her banker chanced to remark that the market was on the upward trend. Stocks, you know, have contributed considerable toward Lois' upkeep in recent years.

One of her favorite investments is rubber. Another is Studebaker. Both were active, the banker informed her, but he advised Studebaker. Lois, however, was inclined toward rubber.

All evening, Lois thought the matter over without reaching a decision. Next morning she climbed into her car and started for the studio. En route she was halted by a traffic signal. She noticed the California license plate on the car ahead of her. It was "R-178." A hunch! "R" stood for rubber and 178 was the price at which it had closed the previous day.

(Turn to page 98)

No wonder Ruby Keeler and Al Jolson smile. Al's hunch to play the market netted him nearly a million dollars.

Popularity, life in a road show, first love, disillusionment, a colorful career climaxed by stardom—Betty Compson gives to SCREEN SECRETS readers all these intimate feelings of her innermost being. Throbbing with truth, alive with utter frankness is this story, as told to Ruth Biery.

By Betty Compson

Betty Compson is universally recognized as one of the most beautiful women on the screen.

MY WORK in a Salt Lake City movie house, where I played the violin in the three-piece "orchestra" for $15 a week, fired me with the ambition to become a motion picture actress.

As I told you last month, I would find myself looking up to the screen as I played, envisioning myself in the actors' roles. My violin playing was becoming humdrum—I knew I was not destined to become a Kreisler or a Heifetz and I longed to do greater things.

The sign on our house, "Furnished Rooms and Board"—God, how I hated it!—attracted enough customers to enable mother and me to live, and with father ill with tuberculosis, it was impossible for me to break away from the ties which bound me to home and obscurity.

When Betty played her violin in a Salt Lake City movie house, for $15 a week, she purposely dressed to make herself look older than her fifteen years.

Then father died. I knew it was time for his passing and I welcomed his death as a heaven-sent opportunity for me to reach fame and fortune. Vistas of doing something big and getting away from Salt Lake City loomed before me. I knew that the time had come—that in six months I would be out of high school, headed for glory, riches.

I HAVEN'T mentioned the men in my life for quite a few pages, have I? Oh, they were there all right. Somehow, in spite of the grocery store and rooming house signs, I managed to run with a nice bunch of youngsters.

Just before my father died, I was going through the torment of one of the two unrequited loves of my life. Mercy, that sounds conceited, doesn't it? But remember, my whole family believed that any woman could get any man she wanted. And there are really only two who have interested me whom I have not interested. One was the football coach. He had charge of the assembly room study period. I was insane about him; would thrill when he made a move up there at his outlook-post before us. Now he's fat and bald-headed; married, with loads of children. Whenever anyone comes from Salt Lake City, I'm told about him. Still, I'd rather like to go back and have a conquest.

Only two men—(She paused a moment, cupped her chin in right hand again and meditated. Who was the other man who had baffled this go-get-them person, I wondered. She sighed, looked up—) He didn't know I was in love with him. He was just kind. But I certainly used to put on the works. Well, anyway he'll know when this is written.

AFTER my father's death, there were literally hundreds of boys. I found it didn't make any difference whether I was working or where I was working. There were enough boys so I could afford to be particular. Of course, I was talked about. What girl who is popular with the male sex, isn't?

Lowry Allen was a doctor's son. He wanted to convert me to the Mormon religion. He was going to Germany on a mission. Julian Burton was a banker's son. I was very fond of him. He never proposed to me, but it was my fault he didn't. It was his importance which thrilled me. And Alex Jacobson, a millionaire's pride and joy!

Then—well, I met my first thriller. And this was the first time I encountered the mother's proverbial fear for her daughter—that danger of being what we so commonly called "ruined." His name was Gattison Jones and we called him Gatty. He came from a good family but he was the type who sloughs school, a wonderful dancer, a natural actor. He wanted to go on vaudeville with me. He would draw pictures of a rich drop curtain with C (for Compson) on one side and G (for Gattison) on the other and tell me that those were what we would have when we were headliners. What a kick that boy did give me!

Naturally, I had let boys kiss me, but the kisses to this

CINEMA SLANTS

Quality before quantity in the film output—audible anatomy—the ballyhoo king's gross exaggerations—two heads are better than one at the megaphone—and other crisp comment on the latest activities of filmdom.

Palms

THE movie industry was utterly disrupted by the sudden arrival of talking pictures, but the speed of its recovery from this shattering upheaval has been little short of phenomenal.

Not only has Hollywood learned, in a few months, how to make dialogue films; it has learned how to make superlatively good dialogue films. The quality of the screen entertainment that has come forth since January first has been amazingly high.

Consider this list: The Broadway Melody, The Letter, Alibi, Hearts in Dixie, Show Boat, The Trial of Mary Dugan, Close Harmony, In Old Arizona, Madame X, The Voice of the City, Coquette and Bulldog Drummond.

The movie industry has a right to be proud of itself for the manner in which it has withstood the shock of sound.

Hear My Pulse

IN AN advertisement of the film, His Captive Woman, appears this startling phrase, "You can almost hear the heart-beats of this daring drama!"

Does this mean that the movies, having permitted us to listen to the voices of stars, will now reveal to us their innermost anatomical secrets?

Before long we'll be seeing and hearing X-ray moving pictures, with sound accompaniment recorded through a stethoscope.

Collaborators

STARRING teams have been popular in the past—Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky, Douglas MacLean and Doris May, Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton. Now, for the first time, we are beginning to hear of directorial teams. On many talking pictures you will observe that the credit for the direction (or the blame, perhaps) is shared by two men.

One of them is an experienced movie director, the other an experienced stage director, and their different talents are combined.

The best directorial team that has been heard from to date is that of Edward Sutherland (of the screen) and John Cromwell (of the stage). They were responsible for that excellent picture, Close Harmony—and they worked together in close harmony in more ways than one.

Fortunately, Mr. Sutherland and Mr. Cromwell are smart, broadminded and easy to get along with. They know their limitations, and neither one of them bothered or irritated the other.

Such non-temperamental directors, however, are regretably hard to find, and it is a safe bet that this practice of teaming up two men on one job will be productive of many terrific fights.

I know I should hate to be the movie director who is assigned to work with David Belasco—or the stage director who is assigned to work with Cecil B. De Mille.

Wise Observation

FRANK CRAVEN, the famous actor and playwright, was called in to help with the dialogue on Harold Lloyd's first all-talker.

Speaking of the difficulties of making comedy on the audible screen, someone said, "The trouble is, we don't know how long to wait for the laughs. If the audience laughs in an unexpected place, then they'll drown out several of the lines that follow. And if they don't laugh at one of the expected places, then there'll be an awkward pause."

"That's true," said Mr. Craven, and added, "It's too bad that no one has been able to figure out how to synchronize an audience."

The Loud Speakers

IT IS always fun to watch the antics of the movie press agents, and to listen to the strange monologues of selling talk that they deliver. So talented are these fellows that, frequently, their promotion campaigns are much more entertaining than are the pictures they promote.

The greatest of them all, unquestionably, is Harry Reichenbach, a publicity expert who stops at nothing. It was Harry Reichenbach who once walked into a Broadway hotel, bringing with him as luggage a large cage which contained a live lion. He registered at the hotel as "Mr. T. R. Zann and lion," and the odd incident was chronicled on the front pages of all the newspapers before it occurred to anyone to surmise that there might be some connection between "Mr. T. R. Zann" and a movie called Tarzan of the Apes that was about to open in New York.

It was Harry Reichenbach again who planted, also on all the front pages, the story that secret emissaries of the Sultan of Turkey had just arrived in New York in pursuit of a beautiful virgin who had escaped from the Sultan's harem and was seeking refuge in this monogamous country. When the newspapers finally discovered the hoax, the whole town was talking about a forthcoming film entitled The Virgin of Stamboul.

Small wonder that Mr. Reichenbach, when he is called in as a specialist by some company in need of publicity, is paid a salary much larger than that of most stars.

His recent efforts have been in behalf of the screen version of Show Boat, and he has been entirely successful in tooting the calliope for that popular production. One of his advertisements, however, is open to serious question, and I challenge him to prove a statement contained in it—to-wit:

"Fifty thousand Senators say that Show Boat is the first genuine movietone hit."

Who were the Fifty Thousand Senators? And even if so, isn't it possible that Fifty Thousand Senators might be wrong?

A Mean One

TWO loafers had stopped, as two loafers will do, to watch the work in a vast excavation in New York City. Suddenly the concrete mixer started functioning.

"Listen!" said one of the kibitzers, "It sounds just like Clara Bow's voice."

Sights for Sore Eyes and Sounds for Sensitive Ears

MARIAN NIXON listening in The Rainbow Man.

Helen Kane declaiming, "I was an innocent gir-rul" in Nothing But the Truth.

Betty Lawford calling "Daddy" in Gentlemen of the Press.

Mary Duncan opening a White Rock bottle (you can hear the squisssh) in Through Different Eyes.

Helen Morgan, perched on the piano, singing Bill in the prologue to Show Boat.

Sylvia Field telling her lover that she is all his in The Voice of the City.

Nancy Carroll shouting "You're yellow!" in Close Harmony.

Sue Carol justifying the title in Girls Gone Wild.

Diane Ellis "telling it to the Marines" in The Leatherneck.

Lily Damita doing practically everything in The Bridge of San Luis Rey (you can't hear her, but, oh, how you can see!)

Deceptive Clues

IF THEY must have mystery melodramas on the screen—and apparently they must—I wish the producers would at least have the decency to play fair with the audience.

Through Different Eyes is extremely effective—well acted and well told; but much of its value is lost because so many attempts are made to cheat the spectator. Three terribly suspicious characters are introduced, and they are never accounted for. They are shown in close-ups from time to time, with strange expressions on their faces, to indicate that, if they would only tell all they knew, the mystery of the murder would be cleared up instantly. Not one of them has any connection with the story.

The net result of these unnecessary intrusions is that the audience feels it has been gypped—and, when you come to think of it, it has.

Willard Mack

ONE director who doesn't seem to need any assistance from anyone is Willard Mack. This picturesque veteran of a thousand bad plays went into the movies with his usual Irish vigor, and his first production, The Voice of the City, is one of the big successes of the year.

Not only did Mr. Mack direct this picture; he also wrote the story and the dialogue, and acted the most important part. It is a one-man triumph.

Order in the Court

HAVING lately witnessed some 86 trials for murder on the screen, it seems to me that the one line that has been spoken most often in the talking pictures is: "Doyousweartotellthetruththewholetruthandnothingbutthe truthsohelpyouGod—Siddown!"

George Fawcett

George Fawcett

GEORGE FAWCETT, veteran actor, was born on an estate near Alexandria, Virginia. He was graduated from the University of Virginia. He was a member of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity, a fraternity brother of the late Woodrow Wilson. After leaving school he joined a stock company in Baltimore. When only twenty-one years of age, he went to New York City and made his bow on Broadway. Among his early successes were She, Paul Kelvar, The Legal Wreck, Othello and possibly the best known of all his successes, Blue Jeans. He first came to Los Angeles with William Gillette in Held by the Enemy. Four years later he again returned to Los Angeles with the Palmer Stock Company. So great was his name that playwrights wrote parts especially for him to secure the weight of his importance for their plays. During his stage career he was associated with every leading player including Maude Adams in The Little Minister. He made his first picture in 1914 at the old Morosco studios in The Majesty of the Law.

Leatrice Joy

Leatrice Joy

LEATRICE JOY was born in New Orleans. Her first stage experience was as an ingenue in a California stock company, managed by John Griffith Wray, the director. This gave her an idea that she might also play in pictures. Her first picture role was with the Selznick company. Her rise was rapid. Possibly her greatest success was in Manslaughter. She was starred by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in many pictures, among them The Clinging Vine, Eve's Leaves, Made For Love, and many others. She was at one time married to John Gilbert. This union did not last long, but it brought to Leatrice Joy a baby daughter, whom she says is her greatest inspiration. The child is now three years old. Miss Joy is five feet, three inches tall and has large brown eyes and black hair. She has never been known to possess such a thing as temperament. Always sunny, always kind, makes her one of the most loved young matrons of the motion picture colony. She has just signed a long-term contract with First National.

Norma Shearer

Norma Shearer

NORMA SHEARER was born in Montreal, Canada, on August 10, 1904, of wealthy parents. Sudden financial reverses sent her to New York, while she was still young, to aid in the support of her family. Here, after a disappointing tour of theatrical agencies, she met Louis B. Mayer who became impressed with her distinctive beauty and induced her to come to Hollywood. The best-known of her first pictures are The Stealers and Channing of the Northwest, in which she attracted the attention of Irving G. Thalberg, whom she later married. Among her recent pictures are The Actress, Latest From Paris, Lady of Chance, The Trial of Mary Dugan and The Last of Mrs. Cheyney. Miss Shearer is five feet, one inch tall and weighs one hundred and eighteen pounds. Her hair is brown and wavy, her eyes blue. Recent pictures have proved that her voice is one of the best in the talking pictures. She is regarded as one of the most intellectual, as well as most beautiful actresses of the motion picture world.

Edward Everett Horton

Edward Horton

EDWARD EVERETT HORTON was born in Brooklyn, New York, and was educated in the public schools there. From public school, he went to Columbia University. It was while in a class play there that he discovered his talent for acting. After graduating, he went on the stage. His first appearance was with Louis Mann at the Lyric Theatre in New York. Some of his early successes were The Cheater, The Man Who Stood Still, and Elevating a Husband. After playing New York for some time, he toured the country with plays. One show brought him to Hollywood and he was invited to join the parade into pictures. For a time he deserted the stage entirely. Some of his first pictures were Ruggles of Red Gap, Helen's Babies, The Whole Town's Talking, Marry Me, and The Beggar on Horseback. He returned to the stage again in March, 1928, and since that time he has been dividing his talent between the stage and the screen. Mr. Horton is a bachelor and remains to himself outside of working hours.

Gary Cooper

Gary Cooper

GARY COOPER was born in Helena, Montana, twenty-seven years ago. He spent his youth on his father's ranch and at the age of eleven was sent to London to attend Dunstable preparatory school for three years. Later he enrolled at Grinnel College in Iowa. He fell in love with a schoolmate and with thoughts of impending marriage in his mind, left for California to seek his fortune. His attempts to secure work with newspapers were unsuccessful. With one thin dime left in his pockets, Gary purchased a loaf of bread to dull the pangs of hunger and sallied forth to the Fox studios to seek work as an extra. His first major part was with Vilma Banky and Ronald Colman in The Winning of Barbara Worth. Among his recent pictures are Lilac Time, The Shopworn Angel and The Wolf Song. Gary Cooper is one of the tallest stars of the screen, standing six feet, two inches in his stocking feet. His bronzed face, dark hair and erect carriage make him a striking figure.

Dorothy Gulliver

Dorothy Gulliver

DOROTHY KATHLEEN GULLIVER was born in Salt Lake City, Utah, on September 6, 1908. She attended school there and never gave a thought to pictures, when along came a contest conducted by the Universal Pictures Corporation and Dorothy won the contest. She came to Universal City with a six months' contract tucked under her arm. She had had no experience in picture acting and was cast in short comedies and in westerns as try-out pictures. Her work was excellent and she was given a two-year contract with Universal Studios. Her first big part came as a co-ed in The Collegians, opposite George Lewis, and although she has played leads opposite Hoot Gibson and other stars, she is still appearing as the leading lady of the famous Collegians series. Owing to her picture work, she was not able to attend college, but so eager is she for a higher education that she employs private tutors. She is fond of horse-back riding and all outdoor sports. Miss Gulliver has brown eyes and red-brown hair.

Nick Stuart, Lois Moran, Marshall Ruth (the fat boy) and Rex Bell, all members of Hollywood's Whoopee Club, indulge in a bit of heavy drinking—but it's only soda pop.

The Whoopee Club

A crowd of filmdom's youngsters who drive house detectives mad with their wild whoopee antics—all without imbibing a single drop of drink.

By RUTH M. TILDESLEY

THE Whoopee Club is Hollywood's latest sensation. Whoopee making has become America's favorite indoor sport and from queries pouring in daily upon the Chief Exalted Whoopee, Lois Moran, it would seem that like organizations will soon become the excitement of the nation.

This is the way the whole thing began:

Raymond Cannon, casting his picture Joy Street, could not find suitable players for this jazz-age story among the people sent through Central Casting Bureau, so he and Robert Carr, the boy author of the tale, wandered from set to set on the Fox lot, picking out actors and extras who fitted into the picture until they found the sixty youngsters necessary.

Realizing that a new method of direction was vital if Joy Street was to be a success, Ray Cannon threw away his megaphone and adopted a whoopee manner. He came on the set each morning to shouts of "Let's make whoopee! Hey-hey!" An orchestra was going full blast all the time and he had to learn to concentrate beyond it. If his players felt like dancing, they danced; if they felt like singing, they sang; the idea was to make whoopee—and make whoopee they did.

THEY had such a good time that as the picture neared completion, the cast decided they could not bear to break up. Lois Moran, Rex Bell, Nick Stuart, Jose Crespo, Sally Phipps, Maria Alba, Dorothy Ward, and all the rest of the sixty were counting the days that were left to them, as though the end of Joy Street meant the end of the world.

"Let's have a club and never separate!" suggested Rex.

They all began to plan. Among other things, they decided to originate a dance all their own and to dance it at all gatherings. Lois, Rex and Ray Cannon made a business of going about to night clubs and picking up odd steps. Then they combined the various steps, adding movements of their own, and Con Conrad, well-known composer, wrote the music to the Joy Street Dance, which

THEIR HEAVENS

"After death—what?" This vital question has elicited many intensely interesting answers. Herewith are presented the opinions of some famous film players.

By ALYCE CASTILE

GALLANT lot-actors! Is it because they are trained to cover their real feelings and to seem always something else that most players die as debonairly as they live? Or is it because they feel, more than the rest of us, the sympathy and understanding of an audience that they go into the next world as joyously as they ever made their entrance onto a stage or studio set?

There is a strange atmosphere surrounding death, in the minds of the screen folk. Whenever one of their number dies, a sort of a hushed pall hangs over the movie colony. Particularly the old-timers. They have seen so many come and go. Meteors. Comets. Or perhaps just a falling star. The unspoken question is, "Who will be next?"

Movie stars hate to think of death. Perhaps it is because success is the mark of a long, hard struggle that they hate to think of losing it. Perhaps it is because they are just beginning to enjoy life, to make up for the endless sacrifices and hardships they have undergone. None of us really knows. We are not movie actors, you see.

Since Charles Farrell played in Seventh Heaven, it seemed logical to start my research into the movie stars' heaven with him. On a rustic country set, with just tons of very real dirt, he grinned cheerfully at my question. "My idea of heaven? It's a happy hunting ground—with a good golf course! Seriously, though, I believe heaven's right here on earth, and so is hell.

"I was with Fred Thomson when he died. I feel differently about death now. The closer you get to it, the less awful it seems. He was a great, strapping, good-looking devil, and to sit up with him, night after night, and to see how like a sport he took it all—! I'd like to die like that, like a sport, a good fellow.

"I used to dread death. Scared of it. Right now, I'm not scared, no. It all depends on what mood you're in when someone asks you a question like that. I'm not serious now. In fact, I'm feeling great. Besides, it's daylight. But if you were to ask me the same question at three o'clock in the morning, well—!"

I resolved to ask him that very same question sometime at precisely three in the morning.

Vilma Banky believes she has found heaven in her romance with Rod La Rocque.

Lily Damita is a fatalist. In the mad whirl of the gaiety of her life she has no room for thoughts on the possibility of a hereafter.

ALICE WHITE giggled. Alice would. She was having trouble with her pajamas when I arrived. Did I know anything about sewing? Well, she didn't know what to do then. Her maid had sewed them up three times already, and they still were too tight when she sat down. She must be getting fat. She'd have to do something about her diet. At my question she suddenly seemed inspired.

"Oh, I've always wished someone would ask me a question like that! You see, I have thought about it a lot—death, I mean, and I have come to the conclusion that I must have been a boy in past ages. I just don't feel like a girl. I'm sure I must have been a very nice one, too, a general or maybe a commander. I don't know just exactly what I will be in my next life—probably a nice, wire-haired fox

Brave Toreador!

¶ Richard Barthelmess visits Mexico City and sees a glorious bullfight.

By HARMONY HAYNES

Dick plays with the bull-baiting equipment, after seeing one of the greatest toreadors in action.

I CERTAINLY never will forget that bullfight of mine," said Richard Barthelmess, upon his return from Mexico City. "Oh, don't misunderstand me, I did not do any fighting, but since the event was given in my honor, I reserve the right to call it my bullfight.

"While visiting in Mexico City, I met Canero, Mexico's greatest toreador, and we became quite friendly. I was interested in bullfights, naturally. Who isn't? I suppose I displayed the enthusiasm of a 10-year-old.

"Well, any way, my friend Canero thought enough of my hero worship to stage a corrida in my honor, and, although I felt rather embarrassed at the time by this unexpected honor, I am glad now that Canero did so. I have always had the average American's horror of a bullfight and might never have attended one had I not been, more or less, forced into it by being honor guest.

Barthelmess was all set to make a bullfight picture, when the Mexican revolution flared up and wrecked his plans.

Richard Barthelmess and Canero, Mexico's greatest toreador, who staged a bullfight in Dick's honor when the film star visited the Mexican capital.

"It was the most colorful thing I have ever seen. Oh, how those people love their bullfighting! I spoke to Canero of their enthusiasm. He smiled and said, 'Si, senor, Mexico, like Spain, would rather perish with the bullfight than survive without it. It is in the blood.'

AND it seemed to be, for every Mexican, or Spaniard, seems to be a true aficionado—a fan we'd call them—of the taurine art. Men, women and children attend; all dressed in their fighting togs. Those people have clothes that they wear to no other event than a corrida. The mantillas, bright shawls, parasols, all moving—never still a moment—made that grandstand look like a bevy of butterflies in a flower garden.

"The bullfight is opened with a grand parade. Municipal officers lead. They are followed by the gaily-dressed espadas, or bullfighters, banderelleros, picadors and

Their Red Letter Days

July's calendar is marked with events of great importance in the lives of motion picture people

REX APPEAL

Gang pictures wiped the horse operas from the face of the screen and despite Rex Bell's valiant stand in favor of Western thrillers, he began to lose ground —now he is back at the front of the parade in a new and different role.

By HELEN BURNS

FOUND—a cure for the inferiority complex, the curse of the wallflower, the bane of the would-be sophisticate, and the delight of the ardent reformer.

Rex Bell, now playing his first dramatic role in Joy Street, a William Fox production, does not preach his cult, he has proved it.

Less than two years ago, Rex, who is six feet tall, blue eyed, and curly headed, rode a bucking broncho past the casting director and to success in the Western thrillers, but, because he possessed an inferiority complex, he gave nine-tenths of the credit to his horse.

"I knew I could ride anything on four legs," he says, "but I thought that the fans would start yawning if they had to watch me for more than five minutes without my horse."

In those days Rex had very definite ambitions. He wanted to do a great epoch of the west, where courage and chivalry counted a great deal, and poise and go-gettingness not at all.

Then, a few months ago, western pictures fell into the discard, and the higher ups at the Fox studio, being loath to let Rex depart with the screen cowboy, said: "Throw away your spurs, boy, and don a tuxedo, for in your next picture you will be a spoiled son of wealth, a product of the jazz age, a young man with the world at his feet and no hesitation about walking upon it."

"My best pal and severest critic," was Rex Bell's attitude toward his horse until he cast aside his spurs and became the jazz-hound type.

Lois Moran and Rex Bell illustrate the steps of the new dance originated for Joy Street, the picture in which Rex reveals his new personality.

REX read the part, and, having finished reading, decided that the hero had the sum total of all the qualities that he, Rex Bell, lacked.

"I can't do it," said Rex. "That fellow is cocky, and musical, and sure of himself. That part is beyond me."

Many of the directors agreed with Rex. They said he was a definite type, and no amount of coaching or directing could make a jazz hound out of him. But Director Raymond Cannon banked on Rex's smile to put him over. It was a contagious smile, and he felt that it could win its way anywhere if only Rex's blue eyes would back it up.

"You may be a modest young fellow to the rest of the world," said Cannon, "but you'll be a singing jazz hound for me."

That settled the matter. He did not ask advice from his friends, he did not read books on the subject, he did not

McLaglen—Soldier of Fortune

Prize ring battles that took him half around the world, a turn in vaudeville and a man's part in the World War—then—fame in the movies! The Life Story of an actor-adventurer, as told to Dorothy Spensley.

By Victor McLaglen

EDITOR'S NOTE:
Victor McLaglen gives here the second and final installment of his life story. In the first part, he told of how, at fourteen, the McLaglen itching heel urged him to run away from his English home, to enlist in the King's Guard. After three and a half years, he returned home, but he was soon on the bounding main, sails set for Canada. Work enough for ten men kept him busy on a farm. McLaglen soon tired of this and struck out for the Cobalt silver region. Here he stayed for a while at a Syrian's place, with a buddy he had met on shipboard. His buddy went mad and was taken away, leaving McLaglen, a youth of nineteen, with funds exhausted and a roofless cabin over his head. No go on with the story.

In his current production, The Black Watch, Victor McLaglen gives a stirring, he-man portrayal of a gallant leader of riflemen.

AT THE Syrian's were four young fellows, living on remittances from their parents. They were anxious to get away from the place and suggested coming with me; they, to supply a roof and food. This plan went well until they began to complain about supporting me. With that, a fight developed, and one day I had the lads running down the hills, me after them. They reported to the Chief of Police of Cobalt that I had turned them out, but the Chief was a friend of mine.

"Run along, boys, you're foolish," he told them. "Why, I saw that lad buildin' that house. It's his."

So there I was, king of my own little domain; the stove that had been displaced in the brawl, re-instated; provisions enough for a long siege and a water-tight roof over my head!

I DON'T believe I was ever actually happier in my life. Sublimely happy, with nothing to worry about. Nothing to do but hunt and fish and do a bit of shadow boxing. I wore a tam o'shanter, a mackinaw, and my toes, frozen at Grove's, were rapidly healing to normal in warm moccasins. Strangely enough, later, and in one of my first American pictures, Winds of Chance, Frank Lloyd directing, I played just the sort of character that I was at

Lilyan Laughs at Life

Through the eyes of the true sophisticate, Lilyan Tashman regards life from the lofty pinnacle of her varied experiences.

In spite of her serious philosophy, Lilyan has a sense of humor that adds much to the potent charm that is distinctly her own.

By CHARLES GRAY

ACCORDING to Tashman:

Billy Haines is the world's funniest white man.
Stage actors will dominate the sound pictures.
Sidney Howard is the playwright of the hour.
The ideas of the outside world about the money made by picture people is laughable. Most of the latter are worried constantly, trying to get along.
Clara Bow has something which the other "IT girls" are unable to counterfeit.
Really vital women have no age.
Los Angeles, because of the present difficulty of New York producers in casting shows, may become a greater producing center than New York.
The talkies have made of Hollywood a civilized place in which to live.

AND he said to me, 'Hollywood is like a trip through a sewer in a glass-bottom boat;' and I said to him, 'Fella, isn't that a case of the pot calling the kettle black?' "

She ducked her head and laughed. A man at the next table knocked over his water, a waiter knocked over the mustard, and I felt as if all my creditors suddenly had been knocked for goals.

Some day soon some wide-eyed producer is going to make a sound film of Lilyan Tashman's laughter—and the best of all possible theme songs would be Good Scout, I Love You.

A wow, and nothing else but. I had heard about her for years, from a host of enthusiastic sources—that she had charm and wit and a sense of humor. But it had been my fate to go on seeking interview material from the sort of cuties who still believe in Santa Claus and that Rex Beach is a summer resort . . . Well, I suppose I'll go on interviewing those sort of gals, pictures being what they are; but I'm afraid they're going to seem awfully flat after Lilyan. For she has charm and wit and humor and Heaven help me!—a brain! A brain! In an actress! I do believe in fairies! I do!

WHEN I first came out here, four years ago," she confided, "I thought Hollywood was the end of all things. But now I'm believing that it's just the beginning of everything for me."

The story of a struggle lies behind that offhand statement, and a real one. The story of a girl leaving the New York stage—on which she had won the reputation under Ziegfeld as being one of the cleverest, as well as one of the best-dressed, of women—deserting friends, associations as metropolitan as was she, to cross the continent to a town in which she was a stranger. Years of endeavor in an atmosphere which she considered provincial; of seeking to impress upon the film-makers the possibilities of her type. And at last, with the advent of the sound films, arriving at the destiny for which she had planned.

The talkies have been as fortunate for Lilyan as they have proved the Waterloo of scores of others. More emphasis upon sophistication is being placed in the newer PETITE, auburn-haired Doris Hill's only professional background was that she is a cousin of Eugene O'Neill, the dramatist. Paramount, however, cares little for background; they're pushing her into the foreground as a featured player. Here she poses as a ballet dancer.

SOUND and SILENT

By EDWARD R. SAMMIS,

BROADWAY (Talkie)

THIS is by far the finest picture Universal has produced since Foolish Wives, and that was long ago.

Broadway, in talkie form, may lack somewhat the tenseness of the stage play, but its faults are minor ones and Carl Laemmle, Jr., is to be congratulated for giving the theatre-going public this fascinating picture. Dr. Paul Fejos does a mighty able job of directing.

Where the picture suffers, if at all, is in the situations where padding has been inserted. These additions are far from helpful in the main but they are there and so we can only try to overlook them, as we thrill to the puissant lines of the original play. Thomas E. Jackson, Broadway Theatre star, scores heaviest of all the cast in his excellent portrayal of Detective Dan McCorn.

Robert Ellis and Paul Porcasi, respectively playing the parts of the bootlegger murderer, Steve Crandall, and the smoothly villainous Nick Verdis, night club owner, are superb.

So much for the stage people in this splendid production. In the motion picture realm, Evelyn Brent walks off with first honors, for the reason that she does the relatively small part of Pearl with such finesse that it stands out as one of the finest characterizations in the film.

Glenn Tryon portrays the role of Roy Lane, a difficult part which Tryon does excellently. Merna Kennedy also does well as Billie Moore.

Broadway is certain to bring the whoopee that once was (and in some quarters, still is) Gotham's, to the great open spaces where there isn't any. Yes, it should be received by theatre-goers as one of the very biggest noises of the season.—Universal.

GENTLEMEN OF THE PRESS (Talkie)

HERE is a picture for those people who think that newspaper work is a fascinating profession. It catches very clearly the heartbreak and the lure and the grind of the Fourth Estate.

The story concerns one Wickland Snell, who was a great newspaper man in his way, and his futile efforts to break away from the business that has held him in slavery throughout his life. For a time he breaks loose and becomes a publicity man, broadcasting the merits of mausoleums, but not for long.

There is an underlying love theme in which Snell goes on with a tiresome affair with a dangerous woman, in order to keep her away from his daughter's husband.

Snell returns to newspaper work to find relief from the impetuous advances of Kay, the vamp in question. A phone call informs him that his daughter is in the throes of childbirth and in a critical condition. As he is about to leave for the hospital, a big story breaks; he stays on the job while his daughter dies and the audience weeps with emotion.

Walter Huston, who plays Snell, is the perfect reproduction of a newspaper man. And the screen has made a great find in Kay Francis who plays the part of the dangerous woman. You'll see her again in Clara Bow's next picture, and, we hope, again and again. She knows how to play a modern vamp convincingly. Betty Lawford is attractive as the daughter, and Charles Ruggles is a riot as the bibulous reporter. These names? They're all from the stage.

High spot: Snell getting out an extra edition, while his daughter is having a baby in the hospital.—Paramount.

THE SQUALL (Talkie)

LIKE a squall out of a summer sky, Nubi, a gypsy girl, sweeps into the quiet life of a Hungarian peasant family, bringing havoc in her wake.

Squall, my eye, she's a tempest, and not in a teapot, either. That's Myrna Loy again. She's much in demand for exotic roles, these days.

Nubi is a wanton woman. Always wantin' this and wantin' that. She wants the hired man, the husband and the son, in turn, not to mention odd bits of jewelry. And she gets them all, although the other women folks eventually crab her game.

The vampish ambitions of the exotic Nubi raise havoc with every male member of the cast and her seductive charms cast their hypnotic spell over a willing audience. Nubi is not immoral, rather, unmoral; a condition of being entirely without restraint, excusing the delightful random with which she bursts into flame at frequent intervals. Complications are the result of Nubi's activities, but they are all over when the gypsy chief returns and claims her as his wife.

The Squall was written for the stage some years ago as one of those one-part plays. Myrna has the part. You should see her slink. She's the best indoor and outdoor slinker in Hollywood. Loretta Young and Carroll Nye are pleasing to look upon as the wholesome young folks, but pale along side of Nubi. Richard Tucker and Alice Joyce handle with deftness the God-awful lines that are given them to speak.

You'll like it—on account of Myrna.

High spot: Myrna vamping Carroll Nye.—First National.

THE PAGAN (Sound)

HERE is a picture in which sound becomes too much of a good thing. It's the first picture in which Ramon Novarro has a chance to make use of his really beautiful voice.

The action, however, has an inconvenient habit of halting, to give Ramon a chance to sing. Which is all very well, except that you forget what has been happening in the meantime.

Ramon's ambition to become an opera star led him to study voice for some years, and in so doing, he unwittingly prepared himself for the talkies. His voice registers far above the average and is of such quality that one wishes the plot of the picture might fade out of view and allow the silvery tones of Novarro to play about unceasingly in the depths of the loud-speaker.

The picture is a soothing affair, with Ramon cavorting through the scenes, exposing the better part of his marvelous physique to the hot tropic sun.

The Pagan, taken from John Russell's short story, concerns the struggle between Novarro as a half-caste who simply wants to be happy in his own way, and a white trader who seeks to exploit him, principally over the latter's adopted daughter. This gives Dorothy Janis, the little Indian girl, her first sizable chance and she handles it nicely.

The little humorous touches along the way make the picture entertaining in spite of itself, and as said before, the singing is beautiful. There is a Sadie Thompson subplot that were better left out.

High spot: Novarro trying to master the intricacies of store-keeping.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

BULLDOG DRUMMOND (Talkie)

HERE'S one that will keep you guessing. Now it's comedy and now it's melodrama, and you're never sure which is which. But, after all, it's great entertainment, so who cares?

Bulldog Drummond is one of those dashing young Englishmen who couldn't be anyone else but Ronald Colman. Barbara Bennett is the girl.

It goes to show what sound can do to make hair-raising pictures still more thrilling. And Ronald Colman has a musical voice beyond your dreams.

High spot: Auto chase at night, with sound effects. —Samuel Goldwyn.

WHERE EAST IS EAST (Silent)

THIS picture simply couldn't happen any place but somewhere East of Suez, where the best is like the worst. And believe it or not, for once Lon Chaney is a bad man with a good heart.

He lives a peaceful enough life with his daughter, Lupe Velez, working every day, from nine till five, catching tigers for the circus. Lupe is to be married to Lloyd Hughes and everything is perfectly grand. Then along comes Estelle Taylor as a half-caste, but wholly designing vampire. You never saw Estelle look so—well, that way.

High spot: Lupe trying to keep back the tears, while playing games with her father.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

SHE GOES TO WAR (Sound)

YOU wouldn't think it possible to build a stirring dramatic movie on the silliest plot in the world, eh?

Eleanor Boardman is the usual pampered daughter of society who has a yen to do something in a big way when war breaks out. She gets as far as a front line canteen, and then when her worthless sweetie, Edmund Burns, providentially gets drunk, she pinches his uniform and goes into battle in his place. The war scenes are great, and manage to ring true.

High spot: American troops, loaded in tanks, advancing to the attack through a barrage of liquid fire—with sound.—United Artists.

PRISONERS (Talkie)

CORINNE GRIFFITH, in spite of the talkies, is still one of those violets that bloom in the mire.

This time she is a cabaret singer in Vienna who aspires to better things. She gets a job in a pastry shop and falls in love with Ian Keith, who is a struggling young lawyer. Then follows a battle to get Keith to fall in love with her. Finally she is accused of stealing some money and prevails upon Keith to defend her. He loses the case, but finds his love for her. Ian Keith gets everything he can out of a role that is a little threadbare and theatrical.

High spot: Keith realizing that he loves the girl as he defends her in court.—First National.

TWO WEEKS OFF (Silent)

THERE'S something about a Mackaill-Mulhall comedy. Whatever the story, you're always sure of light, breezy humor and pleasant love-making.

This is one of their funniest. It's the old O. Henry plot, about two ordinary people who meet on vacation, pretending that they are somebody quite swell. Jack Mulhall is a plumber who pretends he is a movie star, until he is exposed while making a personal appearance speech. He disappears, and Dorothy thinks she will never see him again. But she does and everybody's happy.

High spot: Household afloat while Jack neglects plumbing to woo Dorothy.—First National.

FOX MOVIETONE FOLLIES OF 1929 (Talkie)

AND now the American girl is to be glorified in the tank towns. Unless you pinch yourself, you might think you were right on old Broadway.

The story is about a young Southerner who buys up a show so that he can fire the star, his sweetheart, because he thinks her place is in the home. There is a wealth of new talent from the stage, including Lola Lane, Dixie Lee and David Percy. But Sue Carol carries off first honors in her song and dance numbers, with David Rollins. Stepin Fetchit is a comedy riot, as usual.

High spot: Sue Carol leading the chorus in the new dance, The Breakaway.—Fox.

CAREERS (Talkie)

IN WHICH Billie Dove comes out in the talkies with colors flying. Billie has a lovely voice.

The story is laid in Cochin-China. Billie's husband, Antonio Moreno isn't advancing as fast as he should, so she goes to the firm's president about it. He, Noah Berry, makes a hobby of beautiful women and tells Billie quite plainly how she can best help her husband.

At that point he is conveniently murdered by persons unknown. The dramatic twist to the story comes when Moreno sets out to discover who last saw him alive.

High spot: Billie explaining the situation to her husband.—First National.

THE TIME, THE PLACE, THE GIRL (Talkie)

HERE is the old time musical comedy made into a bright and rollicking talkie.

Jimmy Crane, played by Grant Withers, works for a man who sells worthless stock. The climax comes when the boss thinks he hears his wife in Crane's room. Gertrude Olmstead slips into the room, however, while Betty Compson slips out of it, and the husband, contritely gives his wife a check for $20,000. Thereupon Crane sells the wife $20,000 worth of her husband's worthless stock, which enables him to marry Gertrude.

High spot: Betty slipping out of bedroom while husband pounds on door.—Warner Brothers.

WOLF!

Hollywood's movie celebrities are surrounded by bunco wolves eager to prey on fat incomes—how film players combat the scheming gyp artists is the fascinating story told here by

FRED GILMAN JOPP

NOWHERE are charlatans more abundant than in Hollywood. Stars, directors and cinema officials are besieged by disreputable salesmen, schemers, blackmailers and beggars, not to mention those parasites who gain entrance to the studios as extra players, through introductions from relatives, and by contemptible means.

It is great fun—for everyone but the celebrity involved—to watch a star peep forth from the studio door, scent the plebeian air with dilated nostrils, then scuttle to a chugging motor car, with the remark: "Beat it, James! Quick!" Even so, the chauffeur must instantly give his bus the gun, that the bunco wolves, already gnawing at the doors of the machine, may be shaken from the running boards. It has come to that, really.

In the past six years, Lon Chaney has turned down fully 2,000 schemes, stock propositions and other glittering bait for his hard-earned coin. Every day sees at least 30 visitors at the doors of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, trying by some pretext or other to gain access to him. Most of the propositions are fantastic, so strange that one wonders how they ever could be considered seriously.

Diligent watch is maintained that only those having legitimate business may get into the studios—but the wolves work outside the studios, too.

Clara Bow once befriended a hungry young man and was nearly kidnaped as a result of her kindness—she, too, has had experience with the wolves.

"I suppose," says Chaney, "that most of these people think that picture players are so loaded with money they don't know how to get rid of it and are clamoring for an opportunity to gamble, lose or give it away."

QUESTIONABLE publications are also offered the stars as investments. William Duncan, the serial star, in a moment of weakness, once invested in a film magazine, then had to publish it for a whole year. It cost him a fortune.

Haunting the studios and the stars' homes are scores of salesmen who solicit advertising for magazines that spring up overnight in Hollywood, and which die with equal suddenness.

What can a coming young player do but give, give, give what she or he can ill afford? If these youngsters don't give, they are threatened with being blacklisted.

Dolores Del Rio was called from her dinner table recently by one of these blackjacking artists, and told that she must take space in a certain newspaper. (Business of igniting dynamite.) Whenever Dolores goes rabid she lapses into her native tongue. And, WOW! how she can set fire to liquid Spanish! She literally burnt up that hard-boiled salesman who, even today, admits that carbolic acid, in any foreign language, is— poison. Imagine forcing one's guests to await her return from such monkey business! Why, it simply isn't done.

Some stars employ financial experts and those who do not are capable of doing for themselves. Chaney, for instance, is a clever real estate operator, besides being part owner of a large industrial plant. John Barrymore, Douglas Fairbanks and Jean Hersholt are all directors of banks. A hundred others might be cited. However, none of them completely get away from the "touch" and untold sums are generously given each year to men who are temporarily down on their luck.

The fierce specter of the bunco wolf casts a sinister shadow over the studios—a constant warning for movie people to keep a tight hold on their purse strings.

RAYMOND HATTON, too, knows the bunco wolves intimately. His support of a widow and six starving children is a tale that must now be told.

After reading the widow's first pathetic letter—the stars receive countless begging letters, you know—Ray sat down and bawled, after which he decided to make her heavy burden a little easier to bear by sending her weekly checks. This went on until the following winter, when business called him to the widow's city, New York. Purchasing a great basket of edibles, he hailed a taxi and started out to make this old world a little brighter. The taxi dropped him off before a big apartment house. When queried, the switchboard operator informed Ray that the lady he sought owned the building, but that the rigors of cold weather always caused her to winter in Miami.

Perhaps that little telephone operator is reading for the first time why a supposedly crazy movie star took one long look at her, then ran shrieking from the lobby, minus a basket that was never claimed. However, when kidded about it, Ray Hatton softly croons: "The song is ended . . but the melody lingers on." And yet this is only one of a thousand bunco stories that the stars could tell.

Once upon a time Mary Pickford received a letter from a girl who begged for a dress worn in one of Mary's picture sequences. The girl got the dress, for little Mary would give her last shimmy-shirt to the needy. By underground wireless the news traveled far and wide. Today, with the release of each new photoplay, Mary is sad because Pickfair isn't a garment factory, that she may give away a thousand duplicates of each of her dresses.

Alms-soliciting from movie stars has become an expert trade. Shortly after the war, the stars were flooded with begging letters from Germany. They came in such numbers, and all so similar, that it set the film folk to thinking. The resulting investigation brought to light the fact that some enterprising person in Germany had translated into English a begging letter that was a wonderful money-puller, for it always brought tears to the eyes of the reader and opened pocketbooks. This enterprising gentleman sold the letter to any one who wished to purchase it, and the buyer, without understanding a single word of English, sent out copies to every star known.

Even Lon Chaney with all his disguises cannot keep away from the scheming individuals who seek to pry loose a part of his income.

NORMA TALMADGE gave willingly to everyone who asked, until she discovered that her yearly salary totalled close to zero. Whereupon Papa Joe put a damper on Norma's charities by proving to her that most of her money had gone to professional beggars.

Things are different now. Only the forlorn orphans, the outcasts, old and poor, know of the stars' secret generosities, and that is nobody's business. Your favorite star will continue to give to the needy, but it is extremely difficult to separate the lambs from the wolves.

Ever hear of a "public double?"

Well, neither did Richard Barthelmess, until he was

Hobnobbing with

¶ A department of authentic gossip, conducted by a famous columnist and feature writer who is intimately acquainted—both on the set and off—with those who comprise the cinema capital.

RECONCILIATIONS between estranged couples, both married and engaged, are coming about thick and fast.

Mary Carewe and Edwin Edmund Carewe, the director, will be re-married, according to the report of friends of the pair. This will be a wonderful thing for everybody, since it will quiet the gossip which has been going about that Dolores Del Rio intends to marry Carewe. The Carewes have two children, and it isn't any secret that Mary Akin Carewe has always adored her husband.

It is said that the two met one day on the street, gave each other a nod of recognition, looked around to see the other looking back, came back and talked a little, dropped into an ice cream parlor, and realized that there had been too much between them for them ever to forget each other. Eddie asked about the children, which led on to further talk, until Eddie almost forgot a business appointment.

And Mary Carewe has grown more beautiful than ever. Also, she has never looked at another man during the long two years of estrangement. Those two facts combined would make any man stop and think twice before deciding not to make up with his wife.

Clara Bow, the IT girl, poses with an IT boy, Richard Dix. These two are the most popular unmarried players in the film colony.

Dorothy Gulliver looks morosely over her shoulder into the empty skillet, with Lorayne Duval urging her to "get a wiggle on."

ANOTHER imminent reconciliation is that between Tom Mix and his wife, who have worked together for the upbuilding of their fortunes and their home life until it seems a terrible pity that it should all be broken. Tom Mix, too, adores his little daughter, Thomasina.

Mrs. Mix has told friends that she was sure it was having that great house and entertaining constantly which was one of the biggest sources of trouble between her and Tom. She is willing to give it all up in order to be reconciled to Tom. She is in Europe at this writing, but Tom tells us it is likely he will go over there and bring her and their little girl home.

They are to sell their great home in Beverly Hills, says Mrs. Mix, and buy a little place in Flintridge or somewhere outside the film center, where they can resume the quiet, almost humble, home life in which they were so happy before they moved into their palatial home. They lived in a comparatively small house on a quiet home street in Hollywood during many years. There Tom repaired his own cars and filled his trophy room with saddles, guns, cowboy chaps, knives, relics of the hunt, and other things dear to a cowboy's heart. There little Thomasina was born, and there one maid-of-all-work served them.

Then they moved into the great house, and almost at once there began rumors of disagreements between the pair, with Mrs. Mix taking two or three trips to Europe. Before Mrs. Mix left on her last trip, Tom gave her a check for $10,000 to be spent merely as pin money.

By GRACE KINGSLEY

Grace Kingsley's unquestioned authority on all things relating to the motion picture industry comes from her long experience in Pacific Coast newspaperdom. From the time she was seventeen, Miss Kingsley has noted with her gifted pen all the doings of Celluloidia and her position as motion picture news writer and critic of The Los Angeles Times enables her to get movie news that is authentic and fresh.

Grace Kingsley

MARSHALL NEILAN and Blanche Sweet are another couple who, we hear, are being reconciled. They attended a masquerade party a short time ago, given by Mr. and Mrs. Basil Rathbone, and Micky and Blanche were together all evening. Micky told his hostess with tears in his eyes, before he left, that he was everlastingly grateful to her for inviting them together; and Blanche told friends afterward that she had the best time she had ever had in her life.

SOME of the estranged engaged couples are coming together again, too.

The romance of Charlie Farrell and Janet Gaynor seems likely to blossom into an engagement again. The two are seen together everywhere. Janet at one time was reported engaged to a San Francisco lawyer, and Charlie was seen about all the time with Virginia Valli, but both affairs seem to be off now, with Charlie and Janet as devoted as ever.

Bobby Ullman, who makes his screen debut in Fannie Hurst's Lummox, is Rudolph Valentino's god-child. The great Valentino was at the height of his fame five years ago, when Bobby was christened.

SALLIE EILERS and Matty Kemp, too, are going together again. Sallie was engaged to George Hawks, the writer, for a time, but not long ago handed him back his ring and made up with Matty. The two met at a party, danced together, went into the conservatory and patched up their little scrap.

AND now that Vivian Duncan is back in pictures, who knows what may happen between her and Nils Asther? Vivian never has cared for anybody since, and Nils gave out in an interview that Vivian was the love of his life!

Won't Live in Brides' Houses

BRIDEGROOMS who are married to film stars won't live in the stars' houses, we find.

Take Ben Lyon, for instance. Bebe Daniels is crazy about her beach home at Santa Monica, and would like to live there after she is married. But Ben insists that he is going to build her a home himself.

There was Norma Shearer, too. Norma owns a beautiful home in Hollywood, but when she married Irving Thalberg, he refused to live in her house, and as it was too big for her mother, Norma rents it, and has engaged a smaller house for Mrs. Shearer.

Carmel Myers, too, owns a house, but we hear that her husband, the lawyer, Ralph Blum, insists that he is going to build a house for his bride. Indeed, I believe it is already nearly finished.

Winifred Hart Gains Pounds

AFTER working for years to lose pounds of flesh, during which time she went to bed ill a couple of times, fate ironically brought her the role of Lummox, and she found that she must gain 45 pounds!

So Winifred dutifully ate her way through numberless dishes of mashed potatoes and boxes of candy. But she likes potatoes and she likes candy; so she says that the theme song of Lummox should be the rotund Trixie Friganza's song, There's Lots More Fun in Putting It On Than There is in Taking It Off.

How De Mille

Under the expert guidance of this master director the talkies are taking giant strides forward, and in Dynamite the work of a great genius can be plainly seen.

By HARMONY HAYNES

Cecil B. De Mille, one of the industry's foremost directors, who conquers new and baffling problems in his latest picture.

DIRECTOR C. B. DE MILLE has always maintained that a plot for a motion picture drama could, and should, be expressed in a single sentence.

Some years ago, as he was reading his evening paper, his eye fell upon a headline: Prisoner Marries on Eve of Execution. That was but a single sentence, yet to the trained mind of De Mille, it was a whole drama. He cut out that clipping and carried it around with him, planning, some day, to put it on the screen. Later another headline startled him: Society Girl Pays Wife Alimony.

The combination of the two headlines form the basic plot for his most recent picture, Dynamite, written for the screen by Jeanie MacPherson.

In this story, Mr. De Mille has disproved the statements of all technical experts when it comes to talking pictures. He was told, by good authority, that the stage for a talking picture must be sound-proof and absolutely quiet in order that the lines of the speakers might be heard.

"It is not true to life," De Mille said. "While you and I are talking here, a thousand things are going on in the background. I can hear you. You can hear me. The noises back there do not interfere with our conversation. That is the way I will make my picture."

And that is the way De Mille did make his picture. If there were naturally noises in the background, while his principals were talking in the foreground, he saw to it that those natural sounds were recorded.

The entire picture is colorful, unique. There is, of course, the famous bath-tub. This time it is a crystal tub of novel, unparalleled originality. The bathroom is as inimitable as the tub itself.

Kay Johnson, director De Mille, and Julia Faye, discuss the merits of the new "bungalow" camera (left) used on the sound stages as compared to the old box camera (right) introduced in 1913.

There is also the crystal clock. The dial is a huge round mirror where one may gaze at oneself.

STEAMING highballs are introduced in the sequence of the wild party. This is accomplished by placing frozen liquid air, a new scientific novelty, into a glass containing a highball. The contents of the glass is so many times warmer than the solidified liquid air that the frigid white crystals literally boil, giving one a boiling highball which is freezing cold.

By way of outdoor sports, there is an archery contest, where the elite meet and gaily try to prove the steadiness of Cecil B. De Mille giving final orders in the filming of an aero-wheel race. The camera and microphone both follow the action in this ingenious contrivance.

Buddy Rogers' Dream Girl

am partial to brunettes. Perhaps the fact that I, too, am dark has something to do with this.

AS FOR Mary Pickford's eyes, there is much to be said. It is not of their hazel coloring or their size that I am thinking, but of what is back of them. It was with Mary Pickford in My Best Girl that I did the finest work of my career on the screen. Miss Pickford's eyes seemed to bring out in me something that has since remained dormant—some hidden or undeveloped ability.

Clara Bow has the perfect nose. At least Buddy thinks so. He never has seen a mouth more beautiful than that of Marian Nixon's—small and shaped as though it might have been moulded by some great artist—its beauty is enhanced by two rows of even white teeth.

Then, to complete the synthetic girl, Buddy would throw in, just for good measure, the Collyer dimples.

Incidentally, this composite dream girl is not Buddy's first love.

"She was an actress in the first stage play I ever attended, when I was five," Buddy explained. "My mother had taken me to see Uncle Tom's Cabin. Naturally, the girl was little Eva. I thought of her for days afterward."

BUDDY denied that the fact he had purchased a home site in the Hollywood hills could be taken as an indication that he was planning an early marriage.

"I shall build a home there within another year," he said, "but it won't necessarily be a honeymoon bungalow.

"You see, I have wanted to bring my family out here for some time. Mother comes frequently and spends a month or two with me, then has to rush back to Dad and the kids.

"Father has owned the Olathe Daily Mirror for twenty-two years. It's pretty hard to ask him to give up the paper that has played such a big part in his life. But sooner or later, he'll give in. That's why I have bought the lot."

But much as Buddy has to say of the various attractions of his dream girl, I have a suspicion that dimples are his greatest weakness. He's been "keeping company" with June Collyer of late, you know!

So let's take stock of June's other features.

Her hair is not unlike that of Mary Brian. There is a similarity between the size of her eyes and those of Mary Pickford. Her nose is more pointed than is that of Clara Bow, but her mouth is small and shapely like that of Marian Nixon. And the dimples are her own.

Perhaps, after all, young Mr. Rogers will realize that one can't have everything one craves. And possibly he will decide that four out of five is a good percentage—even in a dream girl!

"Even outdoor girls come to me with this problem"

—Says a woman athlete about this phase of feminine hygiene

Not even the outdoor girl is free from fear of offending others at times. She now learns with relief of a new process which deodorizes this modern sanitary pad.

NO woman is sure, when she learns the possibilities of this offense against daintiness, that she, herself, may not be guilty at certain times. But she is sure, today, that she need not be guilty. Kotex Laboratories have discovered (and patented*) a process which deodorizes perfectly. Each Kotex sanitary pad is now scientifically treated by this formula. The results, in peace of mind, are vitally important to women.

The fear of being conspicuous

Equally important is the fact that the new pad is shaped to fit. Corners are rounded and tapered to permit no evidence of sanitary protection when worn. All the clumsiness of old-fashioned methods is overcome.

Nothing is like the softness and delicate protection of Cellucotton absorbent wadding. The identical material used by surgeons in 85% of the country's leading hospitals, it must be hygienically superior and comfort-giving to the utmost degree.

Greater softness of texture; instant disposability—no laundry; and the fact that you can adjust the layers of filler—these things are of great importance for comfort and good health. And the remarkable absorbency is still one of the important advantages of Kotex. Cellucotton absorbent wadding takes up 16 times its own weight in moisture—5 times more than cotton itself.

I remained absolutely unscorched during the pleasantest palaver I've had with a movie queen since I talked with Leatrice Joy during her recent visit, about Plato and Dante. For not once did Baclanova (accent on the second syllable, please) lean over and attempt to bite my ear. She displayed no Theda Barish proclivities. Not once did she pull out all of her maid's hair for having failed to bathsalt the tub of Trotsky, the Pekinese, properly. For, if you must know, there isn't any Pekinese. Baclanova is the most unaffected, serious yet charming woman of the lispies.

She's come East with her husband, the sad-eyed Nicholas Sousannin, who once stole a picture from Menjou, A Gentleman of Paris (if you must be reminded), to take a four-week flyer in vaudeville. They're both playing in some little nitten-notton of Schnitzler's and going over big—not because of Schnitzler, but because of Baclanova. These four weeks represent her first vacation with Paramount. She's been hard at work at talkies, being the first of the foreign luminaries to talk. Surely you saw and liked her in The Wolf of Wall Street.

Her foreign accent is but slightly noticeable and she's in vaudeville to clean up her vowel complaint. She wants to talk English well enough to play roles other than Russian, French or gypsy. She also wants to be cast for other parts than bad women. She admits in private life she never lies on tiger skins, eats the hearts of her victims or drives Hispano-Suizas on moonless roads at furious speeds.

In all the realms of feminine loveliness there are few who surpass Patsy O'Day in breath-taking beauty. She's a prominent member of the cast of Ziegfeld's Whoopee.

Gilbert to Garbo to Claire, a Triple Play

AT THE time of the John Pringle-Ina Fagan wedding—I beg pardon, I mean the Gilbert-Claire wedding (I must have been thinking of their real names)—it took a New York Telegram reporter to get off the best phrase about John I've ever heard. This wag called him, "The digitalis in the coffee of American womanhood."

Also, the following yarn is making the rounds, explaining the real reason why John gave Garbo the air and married Ina. It seems John sneaked up behind Garbo one night and gurgled: "Come on, baby, kiss papa!"

"You make me sick," Garbo garbooned. "Always talking shop!"

Precious Little Theme

SPEAKING of theme songs (as who isn't?), Herman J. Mankiewicz, Paramount's Nonpareil Wisecracker, and author of The Man I Love and several unsuccessful Broadway stage hits, suggests the following: Mary Dugan, You're a Trial to Me. Why not a pre-release theme song, to be sung at the movie houses where they intend showing the picture? We have one: Four Feathers, Soon to be released by Paramount at This Theatre, You Tickle Me!

Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks

DOUG and Mary, a young couple about whom you may or mayn't have heard, dropped in to the Big Apple for a flying visit. Since they are such simple and quiet folks, they arrived without "making an entrance." They came to discuss the proposed merger betwixt United Artists and the Warner Brothers. And as any bright little lad or lassie knows, the Warners didn't propose properly, so there warn't no merger. Accordingly, we can't say the Warners got away with merger. And, anyway, we wouldn't have said it in the first place. So there!

An amusing incident. When Doug and Mary got on the train at Hollywood, they found a trick goose, named Jo-Jo, which Sid Grauman, the Hollywood Morris Gest, had put into their drawing room as a gag. On arrival at Grand Central, Doug didn't know what to do with the goose which had ridden East in the baggage car. Somehow, word got back to Sid that the goose was being shunted around and in danger of getting lost. Sid wired Doug frantically: "For Gawd's sake, don't mislay Jo-Jo; he's worth a fortune." To which Doug wired back, "Don't worry, we've already eaten him." All Sid could return to the original owner of Jo-Jo was the gooseflesh that crawled up and down his spine when he read Doug's wire—plus a fat check as goose balm. Under the circumstances, no goose wasn't exactly good goose, at least for Sid, was it?

EAST!

The Fairbankses took the whole tower of the Sherry-Netherlands hotel and filled in their trip with plenty of nuts and raisins. They saw about two shows a day; Doug played golf and cheered Walter Hagen, winning the British Open, by cable; Mary shopped; and they left, having signed John Haig and Constance Collier, prominent stage folk, who will step to Hollywood to train them in voice culture for their joint appearance in The Taming of the Shrew. No, Hildegard, a shrew isn't a thing that rows in college regattas. It's the story of a dog fight written by an Englishman called Will Shaxpur, or something.

D. W. Griffith, film producer, and Joan Lowell, author of Cradle of the Deep, enjoy a few moments away from the revelry of a party on board the S. S. Ile de France.

Gish and Make Up

LILLIAN GISH, the pink mist of the silver silences, or, Dusé of the Screen, as some critic or other called her some years back, came East in the same private car which brought the Fairbankses, the Joe Schencks, and Dick Barthelmess. Miss Gish is hiding away at the Elysee, under the name of Diana Ward, and putting in her time reading the Yogi philosophers, Sir James Barrie, the works of Louisa M. Alcott, Berkeley's Theory of Vision and, of course, SCREEN SECRETS. In a few days she is going to startle the world. She's going to announce that she's about to break the silence of the years and do a chirpie. Honest. All she lacks is a vehicle. Why not do Cyril Hume's A Gish for the Gods, Lillian? The theme song to be, Gish Me Again. Well, now, who threw that?

Helen Hermes presents an enticing study in classic beauty as she appears in this pose in The Red Rose.

Go Blow Your Trader Horn

TRADER HORN (Alfred Aloysius Smith), whose assorted memoirs Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is busy filming in Africa, chugged into New York recently via day coach. He explained he'd never slept in a Pullman in his 80 years and didn't intend changing a lifetime's habit at this stage. (Right here and now we ought to say something about his "not being a big bertha" or "he believed in berth control" or "you can't change a berth mark," but thank Zeus, we have no use for puns—except with coffee).

The Coogans, Fils et Pere

THE Coogans, Jackie and dad, are in these parts doing time, that is, on the Keith vaudeville circuit. Jackie has a long stretch, pardon, contract, ahead and after he's completed it, Jackie's returning to Hollywood to do something for the gabbies. Jackie did a clever turn here, reciting long passages from Kipling (No, I neither Kipple nor Dowl—I tipple).

He scored a tremendous hit reciting a dandy thing beginning, "I Hailed Me a Woman from the Streets." He also danced and sang.

He's getting to be a big lad now; he's almost as large as Chaplin was when they played The Kid. I'm sure he'd be a big boon to a talkie producer. I don't mean if they'd hire him, he'd go boon and faw down. The kid's too good. He's got something! Anyone who made Bob Sherwood weep all through his career as a critic on Life, must have.

Fan Club Department

The columns of this department are devoted to the latest fan club news. Information about the clubs may be obtained by writing to Grace Simpson, conductor of this department, in care of SCREEN SECRETS.

A New One for Rex Bell

WINKIE" TAYLOR, president of the Kenyon-Sills Fan Club, has started another club, this one the Rex Bell Friendship Club, in honor of the young Fox cowboy player. Dues are only ten cents right now, for one year, and that includes list of members and membership card. Miss Taylor says that Rex answers every letter and sends each club member a very fine photo.

Audrey Donates Photo

THE Audrey Ferris Club is now having a drive for new members and Audrey herself has put up a beautiful prize to be awarded the winner. It is a large 11"x14" photograph and it will be personally autographed by Miss Ferris to the winner.

Wm. Collier, Jr.'s "Dope Sheet"

A WILLIAM COLLIER, JR., Fan Club has been called to my attention. This club was organized on November 11, 1927, by Welty S. Earnest, and now has members all over the world. A monthly magazine called, Ye Club Dope Sheet, is issued free to members, and also club pins can be bought. Any further information can be secured by addressing Mr. Earnest, care this department.

Two New Papers Out

THE very first issues of two new fan club papers are now on my desk. The first is The Harrison Ford Club News, put out by the club president, Lillian Doria. It is very good for a first issue and from what I hear, Harrison himself was very much pleased with it.

The other is The Ramon Novarro Fan Club News, published by and for the club of which Dorothy Wollaston is at the head. This, too, is very good. Hereafter, one corner of the News is to be devoted to eulogies on Ramon. The best letter or poem—not more than seventy-five words long—which reaches the club before each issue of the paper, will be printed in the succeeding issue.

Bee Line Dix Chapter

THE "Bee Line" Chapter of the Richard Dix fan club is growing by leaps and bounds—in fact, it's holding its own with the other long-established chapters and it was organized only last November! Mrs. Ethel Cottingham is the "Skipper" and invites all Dix fans to join her chapter, particularly all of Richard's old friends in his home town. All of the officers of this branch are personal friends of Dix, who have known him ever since his school days! As you perhaps know, dues to the Dix Club are fifty cents yearly and that includes membership card, one of Richard's latest photos and a current Dix Journal.

The government has had slips printed, bearing the information, "All for Clara Bow, Lasky Studios," and it seems that this assertion is quite right, in view of the fact that Clara receives more than 33,000 fan letters each month.

Win George O'Brien's Boxing Gloves

HERE'S a chance for some George O'Brien fan to win a fine pair of his boxing gloves. He recently sent them to Chaw Mank, secretary of the Movie Fans Friendship Club, to be given away in a contest for new members. Further information about this contest can be had from Chaw.

More Contests

CELESTE WITHROW, head of the Conrad Nagel and the Gloria Swanson fan clubs, announces two new membership contests to be held by her clubs. Conrad Nagel is personally offering a valuable prize for his club and also one-year subscriptions to SCREEN SECRETS will be given to secondary winners. In the Gloria Swanson contest, the first prize is a year's subscription to SCREEN SECRETS, and the second prize is a large framed photograph of Gloria.

Putting Over Conway Tearle

IT MIGHT interest some of you to know that Miss Winifred Graham, who is also one of the active "Bee Liners" of the Dix club, is now organizing a fan club for Conway Tearle—to try to reinstate him with the motion picture producers, I believe. And she is so sincere in the work that I believe that somehow the club will become quite active.

Clipping Exchange

HAN JUNGELING of Holland has turned over his Betty Bronson Club to Gertrude Soeurt of Indianapolis, Indiana, and now she has complete charge of it. Miss Soeurt intends to reorganize the club and make it more interesting if possible. There is a charge of fifty cents to become a member of this club. It was formed simply for the reason of joining the Betty Bronson fans together.

Miss Soeurt, who is also a member of the William Collier, Jr., Fan Club, writes: "Please tell the fans of William Boyd, Richard Dix, Harrison Ford, Leslie Fenton, Johnny Hines, Al Jolson, Mae Murray and Lars Hanson, that I will gladly send them material regarding their favorites in exchange for all spare clippings, interviews, pictures, etc., of William Collier, Jr."

Director St. Clair Says it With Whispers

RICHARD DIX is always on the job —never late a minute. He never makes a suggestion and he works the same as I do. If he doesn't quite get the hang of a thing he calls me over in a corner and we go into a huddle together. He never suggests in front of others that I may not have been clear in my suggestions. He's just a good, all-around fellow who does exactly as you whisper it to him.

Alice White. I directed her and Ruth Taylor in Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, the picture which made Alice. Both of them were trying to get a break, so I antagonized them. Bawled White out to get a good scene from Taylor; flattered Taylor to get some work out of White. In other words, I played on one's jealousy of the other.

White's a master hand at the oldest gag in pictures: standing back so the one in front has to turn her head to look at her, while the camera catches the forward one's back and the rear one's full face. She used to walk back until she hit the wall to cut out Taylor. When it would get too hot, I'd say, "All right, you kids go ahead and direct this scene." And if you think White didn't write herself in in red letters! Taylor was always on time; White was always late. It was at the time when she thought being late proved that she was temperamental.

She might have taken some lessons from Adolphe Menjou, who is the most practical person I have ever directed. He entirely forgets that he, himself, is playing in the picture. As long as the other people are good he doesn't care how many close-ups they have; how much glory. You work mentally hand in hand with Adolphe.

THERE'S not enough I can say about Harold Lloyd. Yes, of course, he directs his own pictures. But he is always considerate of the man he pays to direct it. He surrounds himself with the best talent money can buy and then listens to their suggestions, picks and chooses, makes his picture and divides the credit.

Perhaps I'm the wrong person to give you this story, as I don't seem to have much temperamental trouble. It's all a matter of psychology. A director must be a student of human nature first and a megaphoner second. And he might well copy Harold Lloyd's tactics and realize that other people have ideas. If the ideas come from Adolphe Menjou, pay heed to them. Don't expect them from Clara Bow or Richard Dix. Pretend you are listening to Pola Negri. In other words, live with your people—not over them. Use the same psychology employed by successful husbands and you are pretty sure to be a successful director.

I Turned To Ice When I Tried To Talk

—But Now I Can Sway An Audience of Thousands!

I HAD always been painfully bashful. When trying to carry on even the most commonplace conversation my voice would sound unnatural and my hands and knees would tremble. Often I would listen to an argument among a group and become so keenly interested that I would want to voice my own opinion—yet timidity would keep me silent. I never had the courage to stand up for what I knew to be my rights—I was always afraid of "what people will say," of ridicule. Since my childhood I had had a secret desire to appear in public—to be active in politics — but my shyness was so great that I turned to ice when I tried to talk—in even the smallest gathering!

My inability to talk was also affecting my business success. I dreaded going in and asking for a raise—I was afraid of any situation that meant using my voice—having to express myself. I didn't know how to present the ideas which I was sure the firm could use. I was just a plodder—a truck horse, capable of doing a lot of heavy work but of no use where brilliant performance was required. Often I would see men who were not half so thorough nor so hard working as I, promoted to positions where they made a brilliant showing—not through hard work, but through their ability to talk cleverly and convincingly—to give the appearance of being efficient and skillful.

In Twenty Minutes a Day

And then suddenly I discovered a new easy method which made me a forceful speaker almost overnight. I learned how to dominate one man or an audience of thousands—how to say just the right words at the right time, how to win and hold the attention of those around me, how to express my thoughts simply and clearly, yet in a pleasing, interesting and amusing way. In just a few months I was able to make campaign speeches for a local candidate—I who a short time before had turned to ice when I tried to carry on an ordinary conversation!

Soon I had won salary increases, promotion, popularity, power. Today I always have a ready flow of speech at my command. I am able to rise to any occasion, to meet any emergency with just the right words, to approach all types of people with ease and fearlessness. And I accomplished all this by developing the natural power of speech possessed by everyone, but cultivated by so few—by simply spending 20 minutes a day in my own home on this most fascinating subject.

Cecil B. De Mille, Gloria Swanson and Elliott Dexter were busily engaged in making Don't Change Your Husband, in 1918. De Mille is now producing his first talking picture, Dynamite, for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Backtrailing Movie History

Movie personalities and developments of a decade or so ago.

PAULINE FREDERICK was under contract to the Robertson-Cole Company, later F. B. O., at the startling salary of $7,500 a week. Among her most successful starring vehicles was Slaves of Vanity, taken from the Pinero play Iris which has recently been purchased by M-G-M for Greta Garbo. Miss Frederick was divorced from Willard Mack at the time she affiliated with Robertson-Cole, and a little later married a doctor, her childhood sweetheart. This romance, in spite of being consummated in leisure, was regretted in haste.

Fanny Ward was being starred by Lasky in such productions as Tennessee's Partner and The Cheat. It was the latter production that brought Sessue Hayakawa to fame.

In 1917, Harold Lloyd put on his first pair of horn-rimmed, glassless spectacles, which have since become one of the world's most famous trademarks. As horn-rimmers were still rather a novelty, he had to send East for duplicates when the original pair broke beyond repair. The manufacturer shipped back 20 pairs, made to the measure of the original specimen, and returned Harold's check. The advertising received through Harold Lloyd's adoption of tortoise-shell rimmed spectacles more than repaid the optical-goods manufacturer for the gift.

Sally Blane was a little girl living across the street from the old Lasky Studios, where her father was assistant casting director. Day by day she watched the stars go in and out, and made up her mind that some day she would also be a star. When The Sheik was produced, Sally was given a small part as a little gypsy dancing girl. In the evenings, Valentino, who was devoted to children, often sang to Sally and her sister, Polly Ann Young, both of whom adored him.

In 1913, Adolph Zukor was laying the foundation for what has since become the Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation. At that time his studios had produced many pictures, but they were slow in selling, and bankers were prepared to gobble his business unless he could raise money to meet his payroll for two weeks more. It was Daniel Frohman, brother of Charles Frohman, legitimate stage producer, and one of Zukor's earliest advisors, who brought in a check for $50,000. He was gambling his life's savings on his faith in Zukor and the future of the motion picture industry.

Richard Rowland, then head of the Metro Company, went to Europe to purchase the picture rights, from Vincente Blasco Ibanez, of The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse. The deal was closed, after much argument, at $190,000. This act was then considered drastic, owing to the fact that war pictures had flooded the market and caused the income of the Metro Studios to drop from $108,000 a week to $6,000. By 1925 this same picture had netted the Metro Company over $4,000,000.

Marshall Neilan, at the height of his career, was directing Anita Stewart in In Old Kentucky.

Eric Von Stroheim, who had been in America just 10 years, was being barred from the studios on account of his nationality. Directors, in their eagerness to display patriotism, seemed to overlook the fact that Mr. Von Stroheim had proved his Americanism by serving four and one-half years in the United States Army.

Problems in Talkie Presentation

Frederic March, the professor, spoke and his voice boomed forth like a cannon's roar. Quickly the operator turned down the "tone fader," to soften the volume. Perhaps several hundred persons entered the theatre during the interim—perhaps any of a half hundred other things happened—at any rate, when Clara was flashed onto the screen, her voice came forth in a weak whisper—as from a person suffering from quinsy. This mishap may have been responsible for certain fans and critics having panned unmercifully the IT girl's voice, for on this occasion, Clara had certainly less IT than a sick cricket.

SINCE all the foregoing mishaps took place when the disc was telling the film story, do not take for granted that when sound and dialogue printed film is used, the operators' troubles are over. Even with this type of talkie film, mistakes can happen and they often do. In one showing of The Broadway Melody, Bessie Love's supporting chorus kicked their legs so high and gave her such vigorous vocal volume that the film probably became too hot—at any rate, twice in that production the film flickered out and the operator, finding himself powerless to stop the trouble without stopping the machine, had to hang out his "Pardon Me" sign.

One disc is made to accommodate 900 feet of film, which means from seven to ten average reels. Quite obviously, then, it can be seen how difficult is the operator's task to synchronize the sound with the dialogue when a mishap occurs anywhere along either the film or the disc. Pictures with sound and singing, rather than dialogue throughout, seldom cause the operator any trouble, whereas, pictures with sound, singing and dialogue might well cause the operator premature gray hair.

SUCH a combination, in Tide of Empire, produced a gasp of incredulity from the audience when this happened: George Duryea, Renee Adoree and George Fawcett were seated at the latter's rancho dinner table, sipping their wine, when suddenly, apparently from nowhere, came the rich, full baritone of Duryea, singing a passionate love song to Josephita, played by Miss Adoree. It was perhaps not the operator's most embarrassing moment, but it was far from a comfortable one.

Since sound travels slower than light, many times a person sitting in the rear part of the theatre will see the picture of the actor, watch his gestures, and see his lips move—all before he hears the spoken word. This fraction of a split second in time before the voice accommodates the picture, is irksome, but it is hardly a menace to one's enjoyment of the performance. If this happens to you, get up and find yourself another seat—there is always another spot, according to acoustical engineers, where the sound will reach you better.

Each projection machine is built to accommodate silent film, sound and dialogue film, and pictures employing discs. When disc talkies are run, one machine does the projecting and playing, with the other machine set and ready to go as soon as the first disc runs its course. Naturally, synchronization has to be minutely perfect, to a hair's breath.

While audiences get the impression, because of disc surface noise, that the discs are back of the screen, they are really part of the projection machine equipment and their words or music are broadcast through an elaborate amplifying system to a place backstage, where the sound is thrown onto the back of the screen.

Some systems employ amplifyer horns throughout the building, with a central unit to carry the sound to the screen. Others employ twelve, huge amplifying horns, which feed their sound backstage into a central broadcasting station. This sound, tremendously loud and harsh, filters or sifts through a gigantic screen, which strains out the harshness and allows the finished sound to float out to the audience for a perfectly smooth reproduction of what the discs are grinding out, over the heads and back of the audience.

TODAY there are less than 2,500 theatres in the United States wired for sound and talkie performances. Where formerly 15,000 theatres would have shown Mary Pickford's Coquette, less than one-sixth that number possessed the possibilities to show her latest masterpiece. Obviously, then, the advent of sound has limited the work of picture distribution, to the painful financial detriment of the producers.

Shakespeare once said: "The time is out of joint." Motion picture producers today can certainly agree with him.

Houses charging 60 and 75 cents for admission should charge $1.25 to enable them to keep their heads above water. And instead of the cost of producing pictures becoming less, costs have gone sky high, with the result that pictures cost the producers more money and they have a much smaller market than formerly, to boot.

Today most pictures are first made in a silent version, for distribution in small towns and villages; talkie dialogue and sound sequences are later inserted for showing in the big cities. This means practially a double monetary outlay for the producer. However, although millions of dollars have already been expended since the advent of the talkies, producers are aware that the end is not yet—in fact, most of them know that their spending orgy has hardly begun. Many more millions of dollars will be spent in 1929 and 1930 to improve the HOLLYWOOD is bidding farewell to its foreign population. The big trek back to the homelands is under way.

The Postal Pouch editor will answer your questions on this page. For a personal answer, enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

SIMONNE D.: We have long since mailed you the magazine for which you sent twenty-five cents. Why not subscribe to it and have it delivered to you regularly every month? Brunswick is full of horse feathers. Clara Bow is not dead. Mary Brian is not dead. Billie Dove is not dead. And I'm very well, thank you.

NAOMI R.: Whither thou goest my long white beard will follow . . . . George Lewis is making pictures at the Universal Studios, Universal City, while Tom Tyler is at the RKO Studios, Hollywood. Sure, come back as often as you like and bring your gang along!

B.: See Clara Bow next in The Wild Party—and don't you wish you were invited? You win the bet—Norma Shearer was born in Montreal, Canada, not in the States. What do you get out of it—a dinner or a new dress?

KATHERINE K.: Write to Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor at Fox, Hollywood; Marion Davies and Nils Asther at M-G-M, Culver City, and to Ruth Taylor at Paramount, Hollywood. I answer letters personally whenever a stamped self-addressed envelope is included.

LILBURN T. Never heard that name before. May I name my canary bird for you? Only maybe it's not that kind of bird. Greta Garbo was born in Stockholm, Sweden, on January 20, 1906. She is five feet, six inches tall, weighs one hundred and twenty-five, has rich dark golden hair, and blue eyes. She has never been married. She cares nothing for Hollywood parties or for elaborate clothes, but lives at a very quiet Santa Monica hotel and enjoys walking along the beach all by herself.

ANNA G.: Height, weight, age, and number of teeth of Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.? Sure, anything to oblige a girlfriend! He was born in New York City on December 9, 1910, is six feet tall, weighs 160 pounds, has light brown hair and blue eyes. He was educated in New York, Los Angeles, Pasadena, Paris, and London—so he ought to be pretty smart by now. His hobbies are golf, swimming, music, art, and poetry. He plays half a dozen instruments, including the victrola, and has literary aspirations. You lose—he's married to Joan Crawford. Write to him at M-G-M, Culver City.

The Letter of the Month

VILMA BANKY answered one of the letters received by Postal Pouch this month and sent an attractive, large-sized photograph of herself to Florence Coté, of Oakville, Ontario, Canada. You may be the next to receive a personal reply from some star. The letter from Miss Coté and Vilma Banky's reply appear below.

Vilma Banky

Dear Postal Pouch Editor:

Would you tell me all about Vilma Banky? I'm so interested in her. How old is she? Does she and Rod go out much? Is her next picture a talkie? I have heard that she is leaving the screen, but I hope not. How could I get an autographed photograph of her?

Yours hopefully,
FLORENCE COTÉ,
Oakville, Ontario, Canada.

Dear Miss Coté:

It gives me great pleasure indeed, to be able to answer your very kind letter and to be able to tell you a little about myself. I am twenty-four years old, about five feet four inches tall and weigh about one hundred and twenty pounds. My eyes are blue. I was born at the little town of Nagydorg, which is just outside of Budapest in Hungary.

You asked me if I will leave the screen soon—and I can answer definitely that I will be making pictures for at least the next two years. After that Rod and I hope to take a long vacation and travel together.

Certainly, my next picture will be a talking picture. As a matter of fact, I don't ever expect to make another silent one.

I hope that this will tell you all that you want to know about myself.

With very kindest regards,
VILMA BANKY.

JUST ROSIE: Rough-house Rosie, or hot-house? No, Clara Bow hasn't freckles, but Mary Astor has. Clara was born in Brooklyn on July 29, 1905, is five feet, three and one-half inches tall, weighs one hundred and ten pounds, has fiery red hair and agate brown eyes. Clara's hair photographs light because she bleached it a lighter red than it is naturally. Write to her at Paramount, Hollywood. How does she wear her hair? Attached at one end, Rosie. Say, you must think I'm a college graduate—barber college! Sure, come back as often as you like.

WINNIE J.: Maybe your hunch about Gary and Lupe is right. I'll make it two—but not for publication. Well, he was born in Helena, Mont., May 7, 1901, is six feet, two inches tall, weighs one hundred and eighty pounds, has reddish hair and blue eyes, and was educated in England and at Grinnel College, Iowa. He is a clever cartoonist. If this isn't "all about him," come back on the second Thursday of this week and I'll tell you lots more.

BARBARA S.: The army on the left consists of Buddy Rogers' fans. You may be the chief K. P. Sure, he likes working in pictures, and he gets a big kick out of real life. His eyes are brown, he likes sports, and everybody calls him "Buddy," not Charles, Write to him at the Paramount Studios, Hollywood, and send twenty-five cents for his photograph.

A LAD OF 25 SUMMERS: If winter comes, how old will you be then? Florence Lawrence has turned down many motion picture offers lately to devote her time exclusively to the manufacture of cosmetics. You might write to her at 821 N. Fairfax Avenue, Hollywood. Mae Murray is under contract now to Tiffany-Stahl, Hollywood.

Twelvetrees Answers Your Questions

And that's how I got my stage name.

"From the minute I took Twelvetrees in place of Jurgens, my luck changed. Clark had a chance to go as leading man in stock but wouldn't leave without me, so I was made ingenue leading lady. From that to An American Tragedy—And believe me, when I answered the letters I'm going to tell the folks who ask me, that Twelvetrees is my married name but it has brought me so much luck that I am determined to keep it!"

"What's your next question?"

"'Did you have a pull to get into the movies?' Everyone asks that! As a matter of fact, I didn't! I was in rehearsals for Elmer Gantry, on Broadway. But it was at the time that the talkies were starting and the agents were rushing everybody to the studios for a test. Clark and I went over to Fox together for ours. We went as brother and sister, as the agent said it was better in pictures, not to tell them we were married. There were about 200 people there. It was awful. A woman and a man sorted us out and put us through our paces. When we had finished, I went right back to rehearsals and tried to forget about it.

"I didn't think there was a chance. But in a few days they called me back and said, 'You were good but we couldn't see your brother!' They had heard his voice, but somehow he wasn't in the picture! They signed me—and that's all there was to it. Pull! I didn't know a soul in the Fox studio.

FUNNY, but the next most persistent question people have written to me, is 'Do you think I'd have a chance before the camera?' Do you know, I don't know how to answer that question. Of course, I can't say yes, when I haven't heard them or seen them. Nor can I say, no, for the same reason. However, with these talkies, I really think there is less chance than ever for the new-comers."

She fingered several hundred letters which were tied together with blue ribbon. "Every one of these are from girls who ask me that question!"

"And the next?"

"The next is funny. It is 'Are you a real blonde or have you dyed your hair? How did you do it? And do you think blonde hair is best for the movies?' These almost always come all as one question.

"As a matter of fact, I am neither blonde or brunette. I am fifty-fifty. Writers, hard up for words to describe it, usually call me a blonde. I should say my hair was rather a dirty color. No, I don't dye it. As for blonde being best, it depends upon the part. Laura La Plante wore a wig for the first part of Show Boat, because she was working in two pictures at once and had started the other with her natural blonde color. Then, she dyed her hair dark and she says she'll never wear another wig, but always dye it if she must have dark tresses. She's bleached it back again now and it looks perfectly natural. It also depends upon which color photographs best with your features.

THE next question is also a sticker. 'What interests you most in Hollywood?' And believe me, they all want to know that! I suppose it's because I'm a newcomer. But what can I say, since everything interests me here? Of course, I was a movie fan myself before I came; I was simply crazy to see this place.

"I'll never forget my first day. I went to Henry's for breakfast just as soon as I landed. I'd always heard about Henry's. I looked around for Charlie Chaplin, who was supposed to eat there, but I couldn't find him. In fact, I didn't see anyone. I'd forgotten that you should go to Henry's after midnight rather than for breakfast, to see people. Then I went to the Montmartre for lunch. It was Wednesday. Such a crowd. I couldn't believe it!

AFTER a half hour or so, when I was a little acclimated, I tried to pick them out one by one. I took Dorothy Mackaill for Marion Davies. They looked so much alike that I simply couldn't get over it. Marion was there too and even seeing them together, I couldn't tell them apart. I can't yet, for that matter. And Rod La Rocque and Mone Blue! Larry Grey was sitting back of me and he yelled 'Hello, Monte' to a man not far from me. I craned my neck to see. How that man was scowling. It was Rod La Rocque and he didn't seem to like the mistaken identification. But you couldn't blame Larry. I recognized Bebe because she was with Ben Lyon. You'd always recognize Ben; he's such a darling. But that scene isn't telling much about what interests me most in Hollywood—"

"Oh, yes, it is," I interrupted. "It tells the whole story!"

"How?" she looked a bit disbelieving.

"Personalities! That's what everybody comes to Hollywood for. In other cities, it's museums and art galleries and scenic drives and so forth. We have more of those than any other one city, but no one ever pays any attention to them when they can look at Gloria Swanson and Greta Garbo and Nils Asther."

"I saw John Gilbert in his automobile on a side street one day. I've been down that street every day since, but he must have been there by mistake on that occasion—

"But, mercy! I forgot, you came to get a story! What shall we talk about? I haven't had a very interesting life. I've got a husband; I love my work—"

"Never mind." I reached for my hat and coat. "You don't need to say a word. I've got my story. We'll tell the fans what they want to know! Then you won't have to write any letters!"

When cold cream is removed

...this new way

1 A lovely, clear skin that comes with real cleanliness... when you rub cold cream off instead of rubbing it in.

2 No high laundry bills that mount when you use one clean towel after another... no ruined towels, either, from cold cream oil.

3 No dirt or germs to cause blackheads, pimples, enlarged pores... they come from using grimy "cold cream cloths."

WOMEN who know every new aid to beauty have introduced a perfect method of removing cold cream. It takes the cream off instead of rubbing it further in. Kleenex Cleansing Tissues are highly absorbent; soft; fresh; hygienic. You discard them after using. They cost but a few cents a day. If you don't know how much they can do for you, send for a sample package today and discover how your skin responds when cold cream is removed this new way.

"Now I can stand the Public Gaze"

Charming—self-confident

Can You?

Wherever you go, whatever you wear, to be really at ease, attractive, you must have a skin free from disfiguring hair.

Curious eyes are quick to detect the slightest flaw the modern bathing suit may disclose. Revealing too are sleeveless frocks, evening gowns, sheer hose, and short skirts. Today dainty women are more careful than ever to remove the slightest suggestion of superfluous hair on arms, underarms, legs, back of neck, and face.

Under-arm daintiness

In 3 brief minutes Del-a-tone Cream removes every trace of offending hairs. Leaves the skin soft, and velvety smooth.

Applied directly from its handy tube, Del-a-tone Cream has no equal for easy, quick, pleasant removal of hair. It is snow-white and faintly fragrant.

Del-a-tone Cream or Powder—at drug and department stores or sent prepaid in plain wrapper, $1. Money back if not satisfied. Address Miss Mildred Hadley, The Delatone Co. (Established 1908), Department 98, 233 E. Ontario Street, Chicago.

Fast Life

There were violent crashes as the two hurled each other against the walls or fell upon the floor.

Then, like the crack of some horrible doom, came the terrifying roar of a revolver shot. Its echo died in the corridor. The girl sprang forward with an agonized scream.

"Doug," she cried, "what have you done?"

"Someone," the boy sobbed, "someone has killed old Rod. He's dead, I tell you. He's dead."

For the first time he seemed to see the weapon he held. His fingers spread as though he held an unclean thing and he dropped it to the floor.

Then with a burst of weeping he buried his face in her arms.

"I didn't do it, honey," he sobbed, "but I don't know who did. I saw red. I don't know what happened. But I know I didn't do it."

"Why, Doug. You were friends. Everybody will know you didn't do it."

BUT when the mills of the gods had ground and the wheels of justice had turned, even Patricia of the glorious smile had found moments when it was hard to believe in her Douglas. The glorious smile had faded into a pitiable thing before the day when she sat broken before Governor Palmer, Paul's father, and heard him speak.

"My child," he said, "I can't do it. Because of your friendship with my son—really because he asked it—I have given Douglas two reprieves. To commute his sentence or to postpone his execution merely because I would like to do it is out of the question. The evidence in the case was conclusive.

"But—oh, isn't there anything that can be done to save him? He is my husband. I loved all those boys, but I adore Douglas. He has been so brave, waiting there in the death house. Isn't there anything I can do?"

"Nothing, little girl, unless you can bring me new evidence that will warrant reopening the case."

"Then that is what I must do," Patricia cried and her head came up and her eyes gleamed once more with determination. "I thank you for what you have done and I am going to make it possible for you to do more."

There were tears in the governor's eyes as he told her how much he hoped and prayed that she might succeed.

PATRICIA STRATTON—she had proved her marriage to Doug and with the governor's son, Paul, had stood by him throughout the long trial and the dreadful weeks afterward—went straight to the prison in Paul's car with Paul Palmer by her side, as he always was, now.

The warden, a brother of the governor and Paul's uncle, himself conducted them to the condemned man's cell.

DOUG and Patricia clung to each other for a moment through the bars.

"It's no use," she said. "The governor can't do anything more unless we get new evidence. Paul and I are going to do that. Aren't we, Paul?"

And the governor's son promised that he would do everything that could be done.

But the kindly old warden's eyes happened to be on his nephew's face when he answered the question. And when the painful scene at the death cell was over he spoke to the boy.

"Send Patricia back with the car, Paul. I want to talk to you."

Paul protested, but the warden had his way and presently sat opposite his nephew in the prison office.

"Paul," he said. "I've been warden of this prison a long time. I know men. I know when they've got something on their minds. I know when they are lying and when they are hiding something."

"I'll bet you do, uncle. But you don't think Doug is bottling something up?"

"No," the warden said. "But you are. You know something about this case. Now come clean and tell me what it is."

"What in the world? Where do you get an idea like that?"

"That is something I don't know. Probably never will know. But I know you are covering something up. The time has come for you to come out with it or that boy down there is going to the chair. Whatever it is, it may get him a new trial and then there's always a chance. Come on, tell me what it is."

"I don't know a thing, uncle. For once you are mistaken. Don't you suppose I'd have come out long ago if I'd been holding back anything that could have the slightest bearing on the case?"

THEN the old warden fell back on his training of many years. It was his way when he wanted the truth to paint the picture as black as he could, much blacker than he believed it could be. It usually brought results. Almost without thinking, he shot the next question.

"Where were you the night Rodney Hall was killed?"

The flash of fear in Paul's eyes struck the old man like a blow in the face. Instantly he knew the truth. He hurled question after question now at the boy, not to convict him, not to fasten the crime upon him, but to find out everything so that he might know how to act, how to protect this son of his own brother from a deadly danger.

But the story which presently came out shocked the old warden. His nephew and Rodney Hall had followed the girl from her house, they had seen her hail the taxicab. They had trailed her back to the flat and seen her enter.

RODNEY had taken the fire escape to the balcony and the window. Paul, not so drunk as his companion, had crept up the stairs and was listening outside the door. He had hidden in a recess near the apartment when Doug rushed out for the doctor. He was still there when Stratton rushed back and while the fight was going on. He stood within a few feet of the two as they battled in the hall and because he, too, believed that the story of marriage was a lie, he had tried to kill Stratton but had shot Hall instead.

Since then, fear had kept him silent, fear and the hope that with both Hall and Stratton out of the way he might still win the love of the girl. All that was past now. He knew Patricia could never care for anyone but Doug.

Sobbing at last, Paul Palmer, the son of a governor, declared his intention of confessing the crime and paying with his own life for the happiness of his friend and his beloved.

The old warden lived an eternity, it seemed, while the story was being told. He saw in it the disgrace of his family, the political death of his brother, whose son was here before him confessing murder. He thought of the train of tragedy this story would cause, the scandal, the disgrace to the state, to his political party, to the scores of men and women who had pinned their faith to his brother and to him.

A MAN was convicted of this crime. His death was a matter of only a few days. Then the chapter would be ended except for the grief in his own heart and the torture in the soul of a governor's son. Innocent men had died before now in lesser causes.

"Listen," he cried to the cowering boy in front of him. "I'll get you out of this. I'll fix it up so the other lad can be saved and you needn't say a word. Just keep all this under your hat. Don't breathe a word of it. Leave it all to me. You'll feel better now that you've told me. I'll take care of everything."

And so it was that the day of execution arrived for Douglas Stratton. Paul Palmer and Patricia Stratton had seemingly raised heaven and earth to turn up new evidence, but had failed. Paul, whitefaced and shaken, the picture of a youth tortured by the fate of his friend and powerless to help him, broke first and was taken home with a raging fever.

Patricia, the little Pat of the once glorious smile, didn't break until she stood before the door of the death cell on the night before the fatal day. Then she quietly fainted in the arms of the kind old warden and was carried away.

Douglas Stratton had won through to a new faith, in the Golgotha of the death cell. Face to face with death, he had seen life as a beautiful pathway to glorious adventure. There were only a few things that really counted. Love first. He had had that. Friends next. Friends like Paul Palmer and Rodney Hall.

The only pain of death to him, he thought, would be the loss of Pat. But that he must bear just as he had to bear it when she left him there behind the cell bars.

It was only in the warden's office that a light burned all that night and a worn old man paced to and fro, fighting another kind of fight. The light was still burning, but the figure sat huddled and shrunken before a great desk when the death march began in the chill of the following dawn.

Beside the figure of his son in the dual role of father and spiritual adviser strode the Reverend Andrew Stratton.

"My boy," he said gently, "I am proud of you."

"And I am proud of you, dad. Not many men would have stood up under it." They might have been chatting together before some casual event, so serene was the faith of these two.

"I couldn't have stood it, son, if I hadn't known you were innocent."

The boy choked a little. "Take care of Pat, dad. That's all I ask."

THE boy's eyes held to his father's gaze as he seated himself in the chair. They smiled a little as the straps were adjusted. But now, strangely enough, his father's face had disappeared and Doug Stratton dreamed he was looking into the eyes of his wife.

There were whispered words among the guards. The electrodes had been strapped tight.

"Is there anything you would like to say?" the words sounded in the boy's ears. He sought to shake his head but the mechanism interfered. His lips framed a whisper "no."

But on the instant that a hand was about to give the death signal the crash of glass alarmed the little throng. Newspaper men leaped to their feet. Guards massed as though for an attack.

A disheveled gray head thrust itself out of the broken window.

"Stop it," a cracked voice shrieked. "Release the prisoner. Bring him to my office. I have proof that he is innocent."

Newspaper men fled for telephones. A wan girl, sitting like one in a trance, was galvanized into life by renewed hope raised by a brief message.

In the warden's office presently a boy and a girl wept in each other's arms, almost insane with joy, dreaming of days far different from the fast life they had known. A messenger laid on the gray-haired old warden's desk a pardon signed by the governor's hand.

Tears coursed down the old man's cheeks as he took the two in his trembling arms and whispered: "Forgive me."

The telephone rang and these three learned of the self-execution of the governor's son who was a murderer but who had been a friend.

"In the midst of life—" murmured the old warden.

And Patricia and Douglas Stratton, in the midst of their happiness, shared with those closer of kin to Paul Palmer, a new and poignant grief.

GROW—

Yes, Grow Eyelashes and Eyebrows like this in 30 days

THE most marvelous discovery has been made—a way to make eyelashes and eyebrows actually grow. Now if you want long, curling, silken lashes, you can have them—and beautiful, wonderful eyebrows.

I say to you in plain English that no matter how scant the eyelashes and eyebrows, I will increase their length and thickness in 30 days—or not accept a single penny. No "ifs," "ands," or "maybes." It is new growth, startling results, or no pay. And you are the sole judge.

Proved Beyond the Shadow of a Doubt

Over ten thousand women have tried my amazing discovery, proved that eyes can now be fringed with long, curling natural lashes, and the eyebrows made intense, strong silken lines! Read what a few of them say. I have made oath before a notary public that these letters are voluntary and genuine. From Mlle. Heffleinger, 240 W. "B" St., Carlisle, Pa.: "I certainly am delighted . . . I notice the greatest difference . . . people I come in contact with remark how long and silky my eyelashes appear." From Naomi Otstot, 5437 Westminster Ave., W. Phila., Pa.: "I am greatly pleased. My eyebrows and lashes are beautiful now." From Frances Raviart, R. D. No. 2, Box 179, Jeanette, Penn.: "Your eyelash and eyebrow beautifier is simply marvelous." From Pearl Provo, 2954 Taylor St., N. E., Minneapolis, Minn.: "I have been using your eyebrow and eyelash Method. It is surely wonderful." From Miss Flora J. Corriveau, 8 Pinette Ave., Biddeford, Me.: "I am more than pleased with your Method. My eyelashes are growing long and luxurious."

Results Noticeable in a Week

In one week—sometimes in a day or two—you notice the effect. The eyelashes become more beautiful—like a silken fringe. The darling little upward curl shows itself. The eyebrows become sleek and tractable—with a noticeable appearance of growth and thickness. You will have the thrill of a lifetime—know that you can have eyelashes and eyebrows as beautiful as any you ever saw.

Remember . . . in 30 days I guarantee results that will not only delight, but amaze. If you are not absolutely and entirely satisfied, your money will be returned promptly. I mean just that—no quibble, no strings. Introductory price $1.95. Later the price will be regularly $5.00.

away in little letters on the screen, afraid that people will think it's something highbrow and run. We are going to play the name of Shakespeare up big. We're proud that we are going to play a Shakespearean comedy.

THERE'S nothing highbrow about The Taming of the Shrew. Why, even though it is a talkie, we could play it in a deafmute asylum and it would be a hit. It's every bit as modern as Broadway or The Front Page, and just as fast moving.

"We aren't going to play it in modern dress or anything of that sort. There is a picturesqueness and a flavor to the medieval setting that we don't want to lose. Nor will we alter or add a line anywhere. Of course it will be necessary to do some cutting to adapt it to film form, but we want to keep as close to the original as possible."

The Taming of the Shrew, with its gay, high-spirited, sensible love-making, its absolute lack of mawkish sentimentality, is in a way an expression of their own romance. They look upon it as a healthy counter-irritant to all the silly, mushy stories that have been written about them.

Their marriage, which has stood as solid as a rock in the swirling waters of Hollywood domestic strife, has necessarily been founded on a common sense basis.

The Iron Mask was such a climax for Doug, with the great D'Artagnan looking back over his adventurous past, without regrets, and forward, into the inscrutable future, without fear.

Coquette was such a climax for Mary, with the triumphant conquest of a new medium.

NOW comes the greatest climax of all. And that must bring them to the painful question, "Where do we go from here?" It is the pathetic cry of the successful ones when there are revealed no new worlds to conquer.

So Mary and Doug find themselves in a curious dilemma. With the ripest years of their life still stretching before them, they arrived at the pinnacle of human ambition. They have fame such as has never been dreamed of before in the history of the world.

Whatever they may do in future years, there is the record of two glorious careers, crowned with the shining jewel of the union of three great talents—Mary's and Doug's and Bill's.

John Gilbert, My Real Life Lover

but I think I can forget the footlights where I am best known and content myself in the films as long as it means that John and I can be together."

Ina told me that John's bachelor home in Beverly Hills would be their permanent residence.

"John is attached to the place, because of the seclusion afforded by the hills," she declared, "and it in every way meets my idea of an honest-to-goodness home."

A BUZZER sounded in the room. "Come in," called Miss Claire.

The door swung open. A head appeared. It was the unshaven face of John Gilbert, clad in the rough garb of a Russian peasant—black shirt, uncreased trousers, coarse boots—his role in Redemption.

John entered. First, he looked at Ina. Then at me. Then he blushed.

Did John Gilbert seize Ina Claire in his arms and plant a truly Gilbert smack upon the lips of his bride. John Gilbert did not.

But Ina understood. That blush meant more to her than the kiss she was being cheated out of by my presence.

"Well, honey, I'll run along," he said finally.

"No you won't," warned Ina. "I am being interviewed and you will stay right here."

"Interviewed on what?" demanded John.

"On love, darling."

"That is one thing we are not talking about," said John, directing his words at me. "There are some things against which even motion picture people are permitted to lock their doors. That, I think, is one of them."

"I'm going to say something, too, that I know John won't like," interposed Ina. "I am going to be still happier when John's picture is finished and he can visit the barber and look like a human being once more.

"Looking at him now, could anyone doubt my love for him? He has been growing that beard and his hair has been curling over his collar ever since I first met him. That should prove that my affection for him is more than skin deep."

John was fidgeting in his chair. I knew he wanted me to go, so I took advantage of the opportunity, thinking he might permit Ina to answer one last question. It was:

"What did John say when he proposed?"

John's fist banged down on the arm of the chair.

"Get out!" he shouted.

I glanced back as I closed the door behind me. Ina was in John's arms.

What would a producer have paid for that scene?

GETTING PERSONAL

Intimate items about the stars not to be found elsewhere.

TWO blue ribbons and a silver trophy were awarded the pedigreed collie belonging to Jean Darling, six-year-old blonde beauty of Hal Roach's Our Gang at the Pasadena Dog Show. Her collie, Goldfield Pal, was presented to her by a film fan in Salt Lake City.

Priscilla Dean wears a dress that can be converted instantly into Turkish bloomers.

Charles Farrell has no time for girls these days. He is devoting his time to his music, which he has been studying quite seriously for two years. He is said to possess one of the best voices in pictures. We may yet hear Charlie and Janet Gaynor sing a love duet in another Seventh Heaven; for Janet is said to have a charming voice, though not a strong one.

Charles Farrell

Charles Chaplin's most prized possession is the first pair of over-sized gunboat shoes he wore to convulse motion picture audiences.

Gossip has it that Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon are far too casual a pair of lovers. Bebe has a party every night and Ben merely looks in for a moment or so and then trots along home.

Jacqueline Logan is known at the studios as the girl without fear because of her indifference to doing dangerous stunts of any kind.

Jos. Schildkraut

Joseph Schildkraut has a library containing 17,500 volumes. The books are in five different languages and Mr. Schildkraut reads them all.

Colleen Moore's new Bel Air estate, rapidly nearing completion, contains fourteen electrically controlled clocks, guaranteed not to vary a hundredth of a second a year. These telechrons range in type from an attractive grandfather clock in the hallway, to a dainty boudoir time piece.

Charlie Chaplin and the director, Harry D'Arrast, may be seen high over your head in an aeroplane making for Mexico of a Sunday morning, if your vision is keen enough.

Billie Dove has the largest collection of dressed fleas in the world. Trained and dressed in tiny garments, fleas are considered highly interesting companions by those who own them.

Clive Brook plays tennis on a hidden private court, garbed in nothing but his eyebrows. His partner is a non-professional friend who likewise finds this the most enjoyable manner of taking a daily California sun bath.

Something new in the way of a bridge costume has been introduced by Corinne Griffith—a dark-red crepe de chine frock with pleated skirt which is worn with a red scarf of the same material containing a hand-painted border of spade, diamond, club and heart playing cards in their natural colors; the black patent leather belt has a buckle of two enamel cards, one of red and one of black.

Clara Bow

Clara Bow is wearing her hair parted in the middle and combed back from the face, showing her forehead.

Now that everybody's growing theirs, Olive Borden has bobbed her hair. But with the shorn locks, Olive had developed an entirely new personality.

Doris Hill is letting her reddish bob grow out. Bobbed hair, quoth she, is getting quite old-fashioned!

Norman Kerry has enlarged the quarters of his kennels on his Beverly Hills estate and added a couch for Mme. Doberman-Pincher, which has recently given birth to a sextet. Happily, he says, there is just one Floradora and the rest are boys.

John Barrymore is a regular Beau Brummel since he married Dolores Costello. John used to be a typical bachelor, and his pet monkey, Clementine, amused itself by frightening afternoon callers. But now John is buying the best clothes in town, and he has given Clementine away.

New Way to Magnetic Personality!

At last, the secret of a winning personality has been discovered! Psychologists have long agreed that personal attraction comes from expression, not beauty. And now, through a series of simple facial exercises, you can easily acquire that charm and radiance you have always longed for.

Try this 30-Second Test

Try this 30-second test. Stand before your mirror. Make faces—stretching your mouth, eyes and cheeks—for half a minute. Then, notice how much better your face feels—how improved your expression is—even in that short time!

The Facialex Course is offered to you after years of scientific research, after hundreds of persons have tried it with the same amazing results. 20 minutes a day before your mirror is all that is needed. Following our instructions, flashing, expressive eyes, healthy rich-colored lips, bright animated features—personality—soon become yours naturally—permanently.

This course has been sold to a limited few for $10 to $25. Now we are offering it to the thousands—at the special introductory price of only one dollar for the six sets of exercises complete in book form! Satisfaction guaranteed or your money back. Use the coupon NOW.

Problems in Talkie Presentation

talkies—and there are startling things predicted about what this talkie business is coming to.

Many units now being installed are built so as to accommodate new parts as improvements progress, but even these machines will pass hopelessly out of date with the coming of the third dimension—that process which will enable audiences to see the figures of the actors, and objects surrounding them, in all their life-like contour.

MAJOR SPOOR, of Spoor and Anderson, the old Essanay firm of Chicago, is said to have developed third dimension to a point where it will be ready for theatres within the next six months. This development is certain to cause an even more radical change in theatre owners' equipment than was necessitated in the change from silent to talking pictures.

Color is now far from difficult to film and the picture which looms as ideal to the average fan—the all-color, all-talkie, third dimension opus—will be a reality and perhaps an ordinary thing within the next twelvemonth, according to producers.

In view of the foregoing, it seems rather a silly question for someone to ask, "Are the talkies here to stay?"

Recently, a theatre owner's talkie equipment failed. The man in the projection room got out the silent version of the picture, complete with sub-titles, and proceeded to run it. The audience voiced their displeasure and stormed the box-office, demanding their money back. They got it!

Which causes us to stifle a yawn when someone asks, "Are the talkies here to stay?"

Yeah, bo—we're tellin' you!

THERE is something very appealing in the fact that one of the star plums of the year has gone to Winifred Westover Hart—the lead in Lummox.

Classified Picture Guide

(Other reviews will be found on page 70)

DRAMA

CHILDREN OF THE RITZ—Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall team again in a fast-moving story of a society girl falling in love with her chauffeur. They marry, separate and finally come together again for a triumphant hug and kiss at the fadeout.—First National.

COQUETTE—Mary Pickford scores a genuine triumph in her first talking picture. Coquette is the story of a southern girl whose ruination brings tragedy and death to her family. Johnny Mack Brown gives Mary strong support in gaining popular favor for this picture.—United Artists.

SHOW BOAT—A picturesque opus of the old-time show boat, alive with novelty and romance. Joseph Schildkraut at last is given a role equal to his talents and he acquits himself notably well. Laura La Plante, Otis Harlan, Alma Rubens, Jane La Verne and Emily Fitzroy round out a splendid cast in a glorious picture.—Universal.

THIS IS HEAVEN—Mediocre story, but it is highly entertaining, due to Vilma Banky's sparkling personality. It is a tale of a poor immigrant (which allows Vilma to speak her native Hungarian before the mike) who flips flapjacks in a Child's restaurant on New York's Fifth Avenue and lands a millionaire.—Sam Goldwyn.

ETERNAL LOVE — This is John Barrymore's last silent picture and it requires all that John can muster to put it over. A slow, dull story about life in the Swiss Alps, with Barrymore drunk and glum. Ernst Lubitsch's direction helps to keep it out of the total failure class.—United Artists.

CLOSE HARMONY—Buddy Rogers and Nancy Carroll frolic through this picture in grand style. Buddy plays most of the instruments in a jazz band and Nancy, who is a vaudeville headliner, gets his band into vaudeville to show him how much she cares.—Paramount.

THE DESERT SONG—Too many songs strung out one after the other make this a rather tiresome affair. John Boles sings a strong baritone, Myrna Loy is fascinating as a native desert girl and Johnny Arthur and Louise Fazenda furnish comedy relief which is relief.—Warner Brothers.

THE LETTER—Jeanne Eagels contributes in The Letter, the finest acting since the screen found its voice. A powerful plot, containing lies, deceit, murder, love—strong melodrama—bring out the finest of Miss Eagel's talents.—Paramount.

MADAME X—Ruth Chatterton registers another remarkable characterization, following her success in The Doctor's Secret, this time under Lionel Barrymore's direction. She is a lady of quality who slides into the gutter, leaving behind her a son. She commits murder, is defended by her son, unknown to either of them, and finally recognizes the boy's father, in a dramatic climax.—M-G-M.

INNOCENTS OF PARIS—This opus gives the gallant and talented Maurice Chevalier a chance to prove that genius recognizes no barriers of language, for Maurice speaks and sings in his native French and gets plenty of hearty American applause for his efforts. Altogether too good to miss!—Paramount.

THE DONOVAN AFFAIR—Here is a truly able cast—Jack Holt, Agnes Ayres, William Collier, Jr., Dorothy Revier, John Roche, Ethel Wales and Virginia Brown Faire. And the picture is a swift moving comedy-drama, with a series of triangles and two cold-blooded murders, which keeps the audience at the highest pitch.—Columbia.

HOT STUFF—Alice White plays a characteristic Alice White role—that of a girl with the reputation of being "hot stuff." It is a story of romance at college, with William Bakewell supplying the heart palpitations for the feminine fans.—First National.

THE TRIAL OF MARY DUGAN—Norma Shearer blossoms out as an emotional actress of rare ability. Mary Dugan is a chorus girl who is careless enough to have her sugar daddy found dead in her apartment. From then on, the picture is concerned with finding out whether Mary was goose enough to kill the Golden Egg.—M-G-M.

ALIBI—One of the best talkies so far. Night-club life and a murder provide the plot. Regis Toomey, Harry Stubbs, Mae Busch and Irma Harrison swing the picture into the first rank of the talkies.—United Artists.

COMEDY

JOY STREET—Lois Moran goes whoopee! She inherits a fortune and immediately becomes the center of a rollicking rowdy set of carefree youngsters and she does the best acting of her career. Nick Stuart has the male lead, but Rex Bell steps in and steals the honors.—Fox.

THE HOTTENTOT—Edward Everett Horton does some sparkling work in this, one of the funniest farces ever written. He suffers from a mortal fear of horses, yet he is called upon to ride The Hottentot, a horse that has killed three men, to please his sweetheart, Patsy Ruth Miller. Of course, Horton wins the steeplechase, much the worse for wear.—Warner Brothers.

THE DUKE STEPS OUT—William Haines makes merry in a snappy story of college, the prize ring and love. Gwen Lee and Joan Crawford help speed up the action and manage to keep pace with Haines in this riot of pep and punch.—M-G-M.

Hunches That Brought Fame

Reversing her course, she hurried to her brokers. Rubber netted her $15,600 within forty-eight hours.

FORMER President Coolidge provided Bessie Love with the hunch that won her a five-year contract in the talkies at a salary she didn't believe was possible for her. That was two years ago.

There's a bit of irony in that, too. "Silent Cal" leading a girl into stardom!

The films had treated Bessie rather shabbily, what with lifting her to the top, then dropping her cold.

One night the discouraged Bessie sat in a Hollywood picture palace, one of the first to be equipped for Movietone. The then President of the United States flashed on the screen and delivered a brief oration.

"There's the picture of the future," said Bessie to herself. "If I could talk, well. . . ."

Bessie had her hunch.

A few days later she signed a contract for a tour of the picture houses. She picked the film theatres because she would do five shows a day, and five would furnish a more intensive training for her than would the two-a-day vaudeville stage.

Followed more than a year of schooling, then her selection as Hank in Broadway Melody.

BETTY COMPSON flared back into screen prominence via a somewhat similar route.

Several years ago she was vacationing in Honolulu. On the beach she noticed a hula dancer who was giving a remarkable performance. For some time she watched the native girl gyrate. Betty congratulated her, expressed a desire to learn the dance, and became the girl's pupil.

When Miss Compson was preparing to return to California, the dancer presented her with a complete hulu outfit.

"Maybe you use in a picture, eh?" she said with a sly smile.

There was Betty's hunch. She stored the costume among her souvenirs.

Rummaging through a trunk last summer, Betty ran across the grass dress and threw it over the back of a chair. That day she had callers and one of them spied the outfit. Betty told the story.

"By George," said the friend, who happened to be George Fitzmaurice, the director, "I'm going to make The Barker and there's a part in which you can wear it."

Betty's hunch led to her selection as Carrie in the Milton Sills vehicle. The role brought her others that will earn for her more than a quarter of a million dollars during 1929.

Twelve months ago Betty was rustling work down in Poverty Row.

Lon Chaney traveled to stardom in much the same manner.

Lon was a paper-hanger, and an expert one, too. Business took a slump and as a means to providing groceries, he took a job as a stage hand with a "Ten-twenty-thirt'" show. He had worked two weeks when the company went broke in Los Angeles.

Lon heard tell that Universal was paying $5 a day to most anyone who could ride a horse in its equine operas. Each morning he laid seige to the casting office. Some days he worked; some days he didn't.

Months later he overheard two directors talking over the future of the silent drama.

"These pretty-faced boys and girls are the ones getting the money now," said one, "but the day will come when the character actor will be on the top."

Lon had plenty of time on his hands. He began toying with makeup paints, wigs and false whiskers.

Then he heard Universal was to cast a picture built around a very grotesque character. Lon made up to fit his conception of the part, and appeared before the casting director.

It was his first step toward fame.

DO I believe in hunches? Most certainly," declared Marian Nixon in answer to my question. "All I am and all I ever hope to be in pictures came to me when I played one. Some might call it intuition, but I prefer to believe it was just a plain hunch that caused me to leave Universal."

Marian's contract with Carl Laemmle was nearing expiration. For some time she had been debating the question of whether she should re-sign or turn freelance. Her friends urged the former course as the wisest, but Marian was not enthusiastic about the sweet-girl roles usually handed her. As an independent player, she could refuse or accept characterizations as they appealed to her.

It was while she was trying to decide that she attended a Los Angeles legitimate theatre performance. Her problem was worrying her and she paid little heed to what was transpiring on the stage until she heard the words, "I prefer independence to riches."

A hunch! She, too, would be free even if not quite so prosperous. Her decision proved wise. Since that time she has had several outstanding parts, culminating in the feminine lead in Al Jolson's Little Pal and in John Barrymore's Captain Crack.

Small wonder that Marian believes in hunches!

Talk to John Barrymore, Monte Blue, Adolphe Menjou, H. B. Warner, Lois Wilson, Everett Edward Horton, Dolores Costello, Lena Malena, Ruth Elder or anyone of a hundred or so others. They'll all tell you that their screen success was won by a hunch.

In fact one has not completely "gone Hollywood" until one learns to play the hunches. The breaks are sure to follow.

The Life Story of Betty Compson

time had meant nothing to me. But now—Ethlyn and Ralph Walker, very important people socially, were giving a party in Collenwood Canyon. Their summer home was the most beautiful spot and the most romantic I had seen. We danced, Gatty and I, then went for a walk down the moon-filtered canyon. Will I ever forget it? Talk about first love and the awakening of it—oh, we were terribly in love!

HE HAD a reputation for being wild. You know, there are always one or two boys in school with a name like that. Mother had a fit about our going together. Then, one day I cut school and the orchestra and went out into the woods to spend the day with Gatty. We were discovered. You can imagine the talk! All we had done was to wander around and moon about ourselves and our future as vaudeville headliners, like any two love-sick youngsters.

Do you know, I don't know how all this would have ended, whether I would have settled down and married Gatty or built up a small-town wild-girl reputation, if it hadn't been for a professional interruption.

The manager of the theatre—of whom my mother should have been more alarmed, by the way, than of Gatty—asked if I wouldn't take the place of a sick girl in one of the skits and play a violin solo. Now, I had seen "Nonette" do her violin gypsy act so I decided I'd go a-gypsying too. Only I would be younger and prettier and have a wonderful break because the other two in our orchestra knew everything I could do and they would be inspired to help me.

IT WAS a huge success. The whole high school turned out and we did more business that week than ever before. And the mash notes that came in! It was the first time I felt the kick of succeeding across the footlights; felt the glamour and the glory, the thrill of praise and publicity—all of those up-in-the-air sensations which go with the theatrical business.

Dick Goss, one of the home-town boys, conceived the idea of our vaudevilling together. I had just turned sixteen. He would put up all expenses and take an act with a couple of other boys and girls to San Francisco.

Dick was careful to put us in a beautiful apartment in San Francisco before he went out to book us. But what he knew about the booking business! We tried out for Sid Grauman, then manager of The Empress on the Sullivan-Considine time. "I can use those two girls," Sid said, pointing to me and one other, but Dick wouldn't change or break the act for Grauman.

Stranded! No money! Career! I still had faith in it, but I was beginning to lose faith that my stomach would hold out for it. I still knew I was going to be better than Nonette, that I would be a headliner, if I could only take care of old man Starvation.

One morning I went out by myself and applied at the little Mission Theatre. They gave me $50 for half a week, doing the same little act I put on in Salt Lake City, and Winterhode, the manager, had Levy come down to see me. He gave me a place on the Levy small-time circuit.

When it was over, the big time wouldn't consider me. When you've once played the small time, well, it's something like trying to get out of quickies. It's an awfully hard pull and takes a lot of courage and good breaks to do it.

BACK in San Francisco, living on hopes and my long letters from Gatty. Walking all the way to the San Francisco post office to get them because I didn't have the money for street car riding. We were again literally starving and if we didn't get some good, warm food in our stomachs, some way—

We put an ad in the papers to hire out as domestic servants. Mr. and Mrs. John Haverside hired us as cook and nurse maid. And when we arrived, we learned that Mr. Haverside had a younger brother named Olson who lived with them. Today, I might have known what to expect. But then—well, I hadn't read stories about young plutocrats who fall in love with the pretty nursemaids in their families. I had to learn from experience. And when he learned that I was a good girl and that he must be serious about it—well, he became serious.

The family! You can imagine the situation. At night I waited on dinner and Olson couldn't eat. I was a pretty swell looking dish in my maid's uniform, I don't mind telling you. We were the best help in the world and they had to pay us only $20 a month together and room and board. They certainly didn't like to fire us.

Olson and I decided to run away and get married. We were walking down the street one evening after this momentous decision when I saw a sign advertising Oil and Water, starring Blanche Sweet. I wanted to see it, and Blanche Sweet changed my whole life for me. When we came out I said, "Olson, I can't marry you. I'm going to be an actress and go on the stage. I'm not the type who can stay home and have babies."

THE next morning I called some agents and explained the exact situation. A girl was sick at the Pantages. I received $75 a week and expected them to keep me on, but they didn't. I had caught the whooping cough from the Haverside baby and I would whoop right when I was playing. We were soon back in the same moneyless situation, mother and I, as before. We saw an ad for a cook and a second girl for a summer resort. I was so sick that we thought perhaps the country would help me to get better. We took the job.

AT THE end of the season, I went back to Salt Lake and discovered that Margaret Whitney was starting a vaudeville act. She was a young composer and had chosen seven gorgeous young creatures who had never been on the stage and Morris Moon, a fine comedian who is dead now. I was the eighth chosen.

By this time, with all these proposals, I was pretty excited about what marriage meant; why people made such a fuss about it. Of course, there was always someone inside the company, as well as out of it. That made for intrigue and jealousies and excitement.

Bob Thurston was "my man" in the act. I made up my mind that although Bob wasn't particularly attractive to me, he was as good as any other. But I decided that before I took the marriage step I would have one real—I don't know what to call it except spooning party! It's strange, but as necessary as men were to me, I had never really what you call necked with them. Kisses, yes. But that instinctive fear of a young girl prevented necking. I chose my eighteenth birthday for this new experience, and then if I liked it—

And do you know, it was months before I would let a man put his arms around me, because of that one evening of supposed-to-be romance? If marriage were to mean more—bah! what was the use of it? Why, Gatty's ardent kisses meant more than this hugging and petting. It was a good thing it happened. I was so disgusted that I was cured temporarily, at least—for what woman is ever completely cured?—of man-fever.

LOS ANGELES was our last stop on the tour. Robert Bradbury, now a director at RKO, but at that time "one of the boys" in Calgary, had made me promise that when I reached Los Angeles, I would take my pictures out to Universal. He even wrote down to have a man meet me. It was the day after my love of men had turned to something like hatred that I decided to keep my promise. They did have a man meet me.

They took a test of me fluttering around in a summery dress for Al Christie. Victoria Ford had just vacated, so that left an opening. Gertrude Astor—God bless her—helped me to put on my make-up. I didn't know what it was all about. There wasn't any artificial lighting at this time; just big, open-air stages. Our show was closing that night in Los Angeles, and going to Frisco. I felt so sure that the tests would be successful that I sent a telegram to mother. "Have signed beautiful contract, motion pictures at enormous salary." While all Christie had said, was: "If the tests are all right, you'll get the job."

FROM Frisco I went back to Salt Lake and told everybody there about it. Then I waited and waited. While my poor mother, still cooking in the summer resort, also waited. I couldn't write and tell her it was all a lie, so I just kept faith it would turn out the truth, and kept her waiting.

By this time I was almost starving again. Three weeks and then a special delivery letter. I tore it open. My lie had been the truth then! But this is what it said, when I read it: "I want you to join my comedy company and come to Los Angeles as quickly as you can. Your salary will be $40 a week, with opportunity for several raises. Hoping to see you soon—Al Christie."

Not one word about car fare or expenses. And I had exactly $35. The rate one way—this was in 1915—was $30; return trip, $35. I bought the return one. If conditions in Hollywood were as bad as I'd heard, if they couldn't even send car fare for people, I'd better have a prepared exit. I wired mother on a couple of borrowed dollars to send me spending money.

I LIVED on malted milk tablets from Salt Lake City. There wasn't even a train Johnny from whom I could bum a free breakfast. I sent mother a wire to join me in Los Angeles, from the train, using my last money. Even told her which train to take. But when I got there and met it, via the hotel bus—it was a blessing you didn't have to pay hotels in advance in this city—she wasn't on it. I met every train for two days. Then she showed up at the hotel. She had come down by the boat to save money. She had no idea where I was staying but she remembered that the theatrical hotel which our company had used had an Indian's head on the stationery. And she discovered that the only hotel with an Indian head was the Chickasaw.

She was seasick; I was hungry. We just threw ourselves on the bed and went into hysterics. The next morning I telephoned Al Christie and he sent a car and chauffeur down for me. And that chauffeur was Howard Bertherton, who is now directing me in The Time, The Place and The Girl. He also did some of the episodes in The Barker.

But then! Mother and I were in a little roadster and we were both so scared that we didn't say a word to each other. I just kept thinking "At least, now I am in Hollywood and have a regular salary and everything for once in our lives is going to be easy for me and my mother! The worst of life's worries are over—"

But are they ever over? Betty Compson will tell of her rise and her fall, her loves and her marriage in Hollywood, in the concluding chapter of her Life Story in the September issue of terrier, or a chow. I just love chows."

VILMA BANKY is almost as hard to see as the President of the United States. You bully her publicity man first, but after that you have to get by the director, the camera man, and a thousand and one assistants. Once cornered, she looked at me with blue-eyed innocence, just as if she really wanted to be interviewed.

For a moment, she pondered seriously over my question, then: "If I knew I must die, well, I wouldn't do any differently than I have been doing all along. Yes," her face lighting up as if she had just discovered something vitally important, "I believe I would continue living my last days just as I have always lived.

"I have never given death a thought. Why should I? I am not going to die for a long time;" wistfully, "I would not like to leave my Rod. I think maybe I'm in heaven—now."

Like a whirling, burning contrast to Vilma came Lily Damita, the red-hot queen from Paris. "To die-ee!" a half scream, "oh, my gosh, how awful! Eef I were to die I'd take the first boat back to Paris. I would not want to die here in Hollywoot. So many peoples, and yet, no peoples for me at all! An' I woot gif all my moneys to the poor little babies, you know, the orphans.

"Eet wot be a terrible theeng to know you were going to die. I could nevaire stan' the waiting. I'd keel myself before I'd wait to die. I am a fatalist. The day of your death ees already wreeten, and nothing you can do weel hurry or deter eet.

"N-no, I woot not take any mens back to Paris with me from Hollywoot. No! Mens in films not interesting. You know? I go back to Paris to die alone. No, I woot not go back to any mens in Paris. My, no! No mens anywheres!"

RONALD COLMAN shrank visibly from the question. "No, I'm not afraid to die. But it's difficult to speak about. We all have thoughts about it, but we don't discuss it. We only know there is an after life, but who knows what it is?"

He hesitated a moment, his dark brown eyes saddening for a moment as if reverting to those 10-cent meals in automatic cafeteria days, hunger, disappointments, and finally, a just reward.

"Right now," he continued, "every day is so full. I have everything that, to me, makes life worth living. Everything. I'd feel rotten if I knew I had to die now."

Just a hint of wistfulness, just a trace of pathos, or maybe it's just that Ronald Colman impresses me that way.

Sue Carol was nursing a cold in the dark seclusion of a prop bedroom. "Death? Heaven? Oh, I don't know. I've always had sort of an idea that good deeds and evil deeds keep coming back into your thoughts and make heaven and hell in your own mind.

"I don't exactly believe in reincarnation, but I believe there are other worlds, and that this is probably not the first life I have lived through."

DOROTHY MACKAILL dragged me up on a theatre set in back of the drops and wrapped her fur coat around me to keep me warm. The interview took place there, on a piano bench, also near the camera. She was intensely serious about the subject.

"I know there is another life, but I don't believe it is of the golden stair variety. Heaven isn't a perfect place; it is just a better world than we are now living in. There is evil in it, but not as much as there is in this world. There will always be thieves, for instance, because someone will always want what someone else has.

"There is another world, and when we go there, we will think there is a hell just as we believe in this world. Maybe this world is heaven. Maybe we have lived through another life, and this earth is the 'other world.'"

HERE Jack Mulhall burst into our conversation. "Heaven? I don't expect to make it. It must be nice there from what I've heard about it." His eyes twinkled. "Of course, I don't know. None of my friends have kicked off and then came back in spirit to say, 'Well, Jack, here we are. It's a great old place.' If I really knew the wonders of heaven, whenever I got a headache, I'd think, 'I'll get rid of all this earthly misery; I'll die and get all this glory immediately.'

"Being an Irishman I naturally believe in harps—not the big heavy ones, just the nice light ones that are suspended from your neck by a string. Maybe they have cymbals in heaven. When I die, I'll get some nice loud ones to bang whenever a celebrity arrives. They won't stay long. Most of them wouldn't feel at home.

"I'll go to heaven on one condition, and that is that I get to look over the crowd up there. If they're too good, I don't think I'll like it. Lots of nice people I know have no more chance of going to heaven than I have!"

A hearty, ringing, jovial laugh, "You bet there are haloes in heaven;" with a mocking look at Dorothy, "she's going to have a beautiful one, all gold, extra thick, but very light. I'm going to have one, too," morosely, "a rusty hoop from off a barrel."

Monte Blue had suddenly disappeared from the set. He could be found no place. His publicity man whispered that perhaps he was hiding out because of the terrible make-up he was wearing during the first part of the picture.

At my question he first grinned that

The Man I Pity Most

POOR OLD JONES. No one had any use for him. No one respected him. Across his face I read one harsh word—FAILURE. He just lived on. A poor worn out imitation of a man, doing his sorry best to get on in the world. If he had realized just one thing he could have made good. He might have been a brilliant success.

There are thousands and thousands of men like Jones. They, too, could be happy, successful, respected and loved. But they can't seem to realize the one big fact—that practically everything worth while living for depends upon STRENGTH—upon live, red-blooded, he-man muscle.

Everything you do depends upon strength. No matter what your occupation, you need the health, vitality and clear thinking only big, strong virile muscles can give you. When you are ill the strength in those big muscles pulls you through. At the office, in the farm fields, or on the tennis courts, you'll find your success generally depends upon your muscular development.

Here's a Short Cut to Strength and Success

"But" you say, "it takes years to build my body up to the point where it will equal those of athletic champions." It does if you go about it without any system, but there's a scientific short cut. And that's where I come in.

30 Days Is All I Need

In just 30 days I can do things with your body you never thought possible. With just a few minutes work every morning, I will add one full inch of real, live muscle to each of your arms, and two whole inches across your chest. Many of my pupils have gained more than that, but I GUARANTEE to do at least that much for you in one short month. Your neck will grow shapely, your shoulders begin to broaden. Before you know it, you'll find people turning around when you pass. Women will want to know you. Your boss will treat you with a new respect. You'll look ten years younger, and you'll feel like it, too. Work will be easy. As for play, why, you'll realize then that you don't know what play really means.

I Strengthen Those Inner Organs Too

But I'm not through with you. I want ninety days in all to do the job right, and then all I ask is that you stand in front of your mirror and look yourself over.

What a marvelous change! Those great squared shoulders! That pair of huge, lithe arms! Those firm, shapely legs! Yes, sir. They are yours, and they are there to stay. You'll be just as fit inside as you are out, too, because I work on your heart, your liver—all of your inner organs, strengthening and exercising them. Yes indeed, life can give you a greater thrill than you ever dreamed. But, remember, the only sure road to health, strength and happiness always demands action.

perfectly fascinating grin of his, and then became quite serious. "I believe in immortality. But there is no other world. Everything is here. As we go along, we advance step by step, and our spiritual side is advancing, too. Keeping pace.

"This modern age is jaded and sophisticated at fourteen. They are going so fast—it is such a tremendous age that they forget that God moves all this. They go madly along with the rest of the crowd. The movies don't mean a thing to them. They can't be thrilled. I may be old-fashioned, (and thank God for it!), but I hope the day may never come when I am so blasé and cynical that I can't feel a tug at my heart-strings and respond to the most average of pictures.

"I have never had to face death. But once I sat in an electric chair where 26 men had died, and all of a sudden I felt horrified, 'Let me out of here!' I shouted. It was just the thought that all of those men had passed to eternity in that chair. It got me."

He departed—for heaven . . . there is a new baby at his house.

Lupe Velez is one who has lived life vividly, one who refuses flatly to give up the game. Not even thoughts of death can disturb her overwhelming zest for life.

"Whoopee! Maybe all my life I dance and sing and make lots of fun all the time, and then when my time come, I'd be so happy and full of pep that I would live for 50 years more!

"If somebody tell me I had just a short time to live in thees world, I show heem what I do, you bet!"

A teasing smile. An impudent glance over her shoulder. A scornful laugh. At death?—perhaps. Who knows?

CORINNE GRIFFITH is exquisite, and her idea of heaven is as beautiful as her body. She smiled at me.

"Nothing good or beautful ever dies. By that I mean that while our bodies may decay, our spirit lives on. You look at me, and you say, 'This is Corinne Griffith.' But it is not Corinne; it is just the physical aspect of her that you see. The real Corinne is inside," she touched her heart lightly; "and long after my physical body is dead, my soul will be living on.

"If we believe strongly enough that physical things do not count, and that the spiritual is all that really matters, we will be so near the spiritual when we die that it will not be too great a change from life to death."

After interviewing Corinne, I called up a publicity man I had seen that morning. "Mr. L—," I said, "I'd like an interview on death with So-and-so and So-and-so."

"Would you?" he asked politely, "well, you won't get it. You've given the whole studio the blues, and I'm getting the creeps myself. When you discover a more cheerful subject, come around."

And that, I reflected thoughtfully, was that.

The Pluck o' the Irish

sons and daughters of Erin, that must be given their share of credit.

COLLEEN has been stimulated to new enthusiasm by the talkies, finding the methods of Vitaphone production refreshingly dissimiliar to the making of silent pictures.

"I feel as excited over Smiling Irish Eyes as I was about my first picture," she told me. "I didn't think I'd ever experience again the combination of thrills and fright I went through during my first few days in pictures, but I was right back there again when we started work on this picture. Until you've made a few dialogue scenes, you can't forget that microphone, hanging over your head like a sword of Damocles. Of course, I'm accustomed to it now, but there are so many other interesting angles to the making of a talking picture that it's a new adventure every day."

When John McCormick decided to put Colleen into a talking production, he didn't stop half way. On the contrary, he selected a story that not only affords her the opportunity to speak lines throughout the picture, but calls upon her to sing several songs as well.

Colleen possesses a pleasing voice, which she enriched by daily lessons and diligent practice for almost three months before production started on Smiling Irish Eyes. Her natural aptitude for music undoubtedly aided her in this preparation, as Colleen studied the piano for seven years before entering screen work. She had never sung professionally, prior to the recording of one of the Irish melodies written especially for Smiling Irish Eyes, but she immediately proved herself almost as capable a vocalist as she is an actress.

THE songs Colleen sings are most exacting. Not that they are particularly difficult in themselves, but the four melodies in which her voice is to be heard range all the way from comedy to heart-breaking tragedy. Smiling Irish Eyes, the title of the principal song, is a gay love-ballad that is woven deftly into the plot of the story; Then I'll Ride Home With You is a humorous number, into which Colleen puts all her sparkling personality; A Wee Bit O' Love is an emotionally romantic piece, while she sings Come Back To Erin in the most effectively dramatic manner.

Quite an order for a vocalist without professional experience, yet if Colleen sings all her songs with the warmth and feeling that characterized her rendition of the one I was privileged to hear, she is destined to win new laurels on the screen.

"Don't forget to say that I'm just like Harrigan—'I'm proud of all the Irish blood that's in me,'" she said laughingly.

And unless they are less bright than I have been led to believe, the Irish are equally as proud of Colleen.

To Those Who Do Not Know

... THIS NEW MODE OF FEMININE HYGIENE ...

THE modern American woman is envied by the other women of the world today because of her independence. She is eager to take care of her self . . . anxious to preserve far beyond the allotted years the bloom and buoyancy of youth. The modern American woman is fast learning that this depends largely upon a subject too often ignored . . . upon feminine hygiene.

Heretofore, feminine hygiene has been achieved at great discomfort. Seldom convenient . . . under some conditions it was impossible.

No Water - No Accessories

Now, however, through the use of a harmless antiseptic in tablet form, which requires no water or accessories, American women are fast learning the convenience of feminine hygiene. Among women who know, among nurses especially, you will hear enthusiastic recommendation of this antiseptic.

These tablets are known as Pariogen tablets. For a long time prescribed by the medical profession, Pariogen is not a poison, contains no carbolic acid, cresol or bichloride of mercury, yet destroys the most pernicious germs in a few seconds.

Brave Toreador!

chulos. They circle the arena with banners streaming and steel flashing. The officers retire to their boxes and the fighters leave the arena. The guest of honor throws down the key to the toril, which is the place where the bulls are kept.

"The corrida is divided into three parts called suertes. A trumpet sounds for each suerta. At the sound of the first trumpet the picadores dash out into the arena on horseback—the horses are blindfolded and really have seen better days. Then the toril is opened and out trots Mr. Bull. The picadores meet him with their pikes, to prepare him for what is to come later on. The poor horses don't last long after that and one cannot help but breathe a sigh of relief when the first suerta is over—and to think I always bragged about having a good stomach.

"Well, the next suerta is more interesting and not so gory. It's called the suerte de banderellear, or, the planting of the darts. The banderelleros are on foot and each carries two darts, decorated with colors to match their costumes. They toss these darts onto Mr. Bull's back and he objects in no uncertain manner. Quite often it is necessary for banderelleros to do a little fence climbing, all of which adds to the general amusement.

THE third trumpet is the crucial one, calling for the suerte de mator, or the killing. The cheering of the crowd almost drowns out the sound of this trumpet. The toreador rides into the arena alone. In this case it was my friend, Canero. He rode jauntily up to my box, tossed his cap to me as a gesture of honor, then rode out to challenge his bull. After a few narrow escapes and quick manoeuvers, he planted his sword in the proper place and Mr. Bull sank down without a murmur.

"That crowd went wild! I'm sure no king was ever accorded a greater ovation than was Canero and I was just as wild as anyone there. The thrill was the greatest of my life! Why, we people in Hollywood don't know what thrills are when compared to that bullfight!

"I went back to the hotel with the glamor of the corrida still hovering over me, but—just between you and me—it was several days after that before I ordered my steak rare."

The Whoopee Club

Ray calls the first real American folk dance.

WE DECIDED to have only two rules," explains Lois, eagerly. "One rule is against drinking. We make whoopee so fast and furiously we don't need to drink. Most people who are going to a party seem to think they must drink before they let themselves go, and then they let go so hard they become disgusting.

"Drinking is so old-fashioned, we think. Maybe it's O. K. for older people—the poor things haven't much imagination, usually—but we are really alive and want to enjoy ourselves when we have all our senses.

"The rule about not getting sore is necessary because no club can be a success if someone's feelings are forever getting hurt.

All serious love affairs are frowned upon. Boys and girls may come to the club in pairs, but it's usually a different pair. They are so busy making whoopee there is no time for petting parties even if the attitude of the club was not definitely against it as "old-fashioned"—the most withering epithet the members use.

When the club met at the Lafayette, three young comedians made separate entrances. The first one walked across the polished floor, stumbled and made a dramatic fall. The manager rushed to him—he looked dazed and pointed accusingly to the floor. The manager could see nothing but he apologized.

Second comedian entered, at the same spot tripped and fell, still more dramatically. More apologies from the manager, more grieved pointing at the floor.

Third comedian repeated the performance, by which time the perspiring manager had convinced himself that something really was the matter with the floor and sent for a menial to reprove him, whereupon all three giddy youths burst into cheers and fell down together.

Up in Santa Barbara, Nick Stuart sent a bell boy to page Mr. Barrymore. Imagine his embarrassment when every male member of the club rose from all parts of the lounge, settled their ties and followed him.

Anything goes in a Whoopee Club—except the stuff old man Volstead and old man Jones prohibited.

Whoopee!

How to Break into the Talkies

must limber up. Shake the kinks out of the old legs. Get them in working order. Then you must learn to dance—master the fundamental steps that are the basis of every chorus routine. And then you are ready for professional training. Not in the movies! Oh no, not yet.

The bulk of movie extra girls of the future will be drawn from three main sources, from vaudeville, from stage presentation acts from the New York stage, and from the professional movie extras who have learned to sing and dance. The girl who would enter the movies henceforth, must first be a graduate from one of these groups.

This will naturally narrow the field, but it will also save a lot of disappointment and heartbreak. It will eliminate to a large degree the element of chance, which in silent pictures has brought sudden success to a few and tragedy and heartbreak to many.

EXTRA work in the talkies will be on a much more satisfactory basis to the people engaged in it. Girls in the chorus will be paid by the week, instead of by the day. Under the old system, the average extra worked only about two or three days a week, so that what seemed on the face of it to be a good salary really amounted to very little. Work in musical pictures will be steadier and for a longer period. Furthermore, there are rehearsals to be gone through before actual production starts.

IT IS safe to say that many a star of tomorrow will come up from the chorus. There a girl has a chance to distinguish herself. Her voice, her beauty, her personality, will all have a chance to stand out, whereas they would be lost in a mob scene of a thousand people.

Furthermore, producers are going to be on the lookout for promising chorus girls. They are going to give them every chance to develop themselves. And as fast as they prove themselves worthy, they will be given a chance at better roles.

The star of talking pictures will need all the attributes that are necessary for the chorus—poise, grace, carriage, a pleasing voice, an attractive figure.

It is a long, hard road, this new road to fame, but there is always room at the top. Remember this: You don't have to come to Hollywood and take a chance any more if you want to break into the movies. In fact, it would be fatal to do so. Like charity, your movie career should begin at home. And then if you have the ability and the courage to surmount the first obstacles in a professional career and can gain some measure of success on the stage, then you have passed your first milestone on the road to movie fame.

Rex Appeal

consult his director, he did a still more unusual thing, he sat down and thought for himself. And, at the end of several hours of steady thinking, he took himself to a coon cabaret on Central Avenue, in the heart of Los Angeles nigger town, and gave himself up to the great god Jazz.

HE SAID to that much maligned diety, "I'm just a quiet boy with ambitions. I can ride a bucking broncho, I can rope a steer, I can rescue the heroine from under the feet of stampeding cattle, and not one of those things will help me now.

"I've got to learn to sing my way through a tired world; I've got to look like every mother's daughter wanted me, and I've got to fairly ooze confidence. I'm putting it up to you, old man Jazz, now get on with your work."

And old man Jazz got to work. For as Rex sat in that tumble down cabaret watching those negroes dance and listening to them play and sing, he realized that their syncopating tunes were born of the conviction that life is short and meaningful.

Rex went back to that cabaret night after night. He took dancing lessons from a negro girl, he learned to play a saxophone, and occasionally he joined in the singing in the cabaret, drinking in the jazz, making its recklessness and light heartedness a part of him.

WHEN the time came to start work on Joy Street, people who knew nothing of the dancing, or the singing, or the saxophone, began to notice a difference in Rex. His eyes smiled as audaciously as his lips, and there was a new assurance in his manner.

"Yes," he answered, when asked if he would like to make a talkie. "I'd like to make one. I don't think that talking pictures should be any more difficult than the silent pictures for the seasoned screen player.

"I'm partial to the talking pictures made by the men and women of the screen, rather than those that feature stage celebrities. On the stage the voice is the thing, but on the screen every thought and idea should be put across by gesture and facial expression as well as voice. I've never made a talkie, although in Joy Street, I sing a song.

Because Rex set out to find the root of confidence and not a sham expression of it, his smile has remained sincere. He believes in himself, and one feels that he has good reason for that belief. The time will probably come when Rex will be a box-office drawing card, and men will envy him, and women adore him, all because he evolved his own method of ridding himself of his inferiority complex, and used his own head in learning how to use his feet and voice and smile.

McLaglen—Soldier of Fortune

this moment. But that Scotch instinct that Andrew McLaglen gave all his children, was there. There was the future to think about. Old age would eventually descend.

About that time, Lefevre, the wrestler, came to town. A match between us was arranged. There were big posters painted, "Great International Wrestling Match Tonight. Lefevre of France and McLaglen of England. Admittance, $1.50." I was offered $150 to wrestle to a draw. The hall was to be given us free.

The afternoon of the bout, a giant figure came up the path to the Lion's Den, as I called my cabin. It was Lefevre. "There's no reason why we can't talk this fight over," he said, as he entered the door. "Now, look here, youngster, I'm old and you're young. I'm soft and you're hard. I need the money and so do you. Let's give 'em about four rounds and I'll fall down."

SO THERE I was, my first professional bout assured and $150 falling into my lap, like so many ripe apples. After that there were other fights. There was one at Pete, the Greek's place, where I fought Fred Snyder for $400.

Along came the spring thaw. With it went my cabin. It had been built on the hard-crusted snow and ice and it sagged daily under the warmth of the sun. The mud fell from the chinks and chipmunks crept in and nibbled my food. A brush fire made me grab my clothes and the $2,000 I had saved and flee for safety. The fire struck the dynamite house at Cobalt and the town was no more. After that I pushed on to Toronto, boxing all comers. My eventual destination was Vancouver, in the far West.

IT WAS in Port Arthur that I met James J. Saxon, formerly with the British navy. He became my manager. He was a nice enough little chap, with a tendency to get drunk regularly. This night, not long after we had become associated, he asked me for $15. Now then, we had agreed that we would put all our money away and get by on just as little as we could. I pointed out this to him, and for answer he picked up a water bottle and slung it at me. With that I let him have it on the jaw, and pretty soon I found myself under arrest on a charge of "doing grievous bodily harm to James J. Saxon." I had put his eye out.

The police chief was a good sort. He said, "You stay in my office with me until I leave."

That night, I had plenty of time to muse on matters, and particularly on the fellow with the checkered cap, who had come up in the cafe and offered me a drink, and, at my refusal, a smoke. When I rejected that, too, he had said, "I like the looks of you. You are a good, clean kid. I'll be sitting at the ringside tonight. I know considerable about this game. I can give you some tips."

THE following morning, I found $500 bail had been put up for me. I had thought I did not have a friend in the town. They told me my friend of the cafe had gone bail. I went around to find him and did.

He was so drunk he couldn't leave the bed, where he was lying, crosswise. "You're a good, clean kid," he repeated. "But stay away from women and drink. They're no good. Look at me. Five thousand dollars reward for me right now. Got mixed up in a jewel robbery and one thing and another. Got mixed up in a $50,000 fur robbery and a couple of Winnipeg tarts squealed on me. Women'll always give a man away. There's only one woman in the world to trust, and that's yer mother. I'm keeping her in Petersborough in a nice little house and she don't know nothing about this. When she dies, I don't care what happens to me. Maybe I'll go straight."

I sat in the dinky little hotel room listening to him. But what bothered my head was what had happened to the fighter I was matched with the night before. "That's all right, son. Don't bother about him. He's sleeping out in the bushes along the road somewhere. I don't carry this little bottle around with me for nothing. A couple of drops in a whiskey and they see the little lamps blinking at them in two minutes."

The next morning the case was dismissed because no one appeared against me and the chap's $500 was returned to him.

From there I went to Winnipeg. Outside of Winnipeg was the Happy Land Park. In it was Holm Duval, a former Edinborough University student; a huge fellow, who offered $25 to any chap who could stay 15 minutes, wrestling with him. He had won his job from a friend by out-staying him.

I took a try and beat him in 12 minutes. After that I had a regular job. One night I wrestled 11 men; two were professionals. Those were busy times.

The C. J. Parker Carnival company ran the show and presently we went on tour, Duval's act being changed to a $25 prize to any team of horses which could pull his arms apart.

WHEN we struck the States and Spokane, Washington, we decided to put on a bit of dog. We rented an evening suit for Kerrigan and sent him downtown for a collar and tie. Later, we ran across him in the gutter, drunk, in his evening suit, but minus collar and tie. It was up to us to substitute for him, which we did, with gusto, elaborating on his already flowery speech.

FAT WOMEN!

HERE IS SPLENDID NEWS

5 to 10 Pounds Off in Two Weeks!

A new discovery now makes it possible for overstout people to quickly reduce double chin, or fat bust, arms, abdomen, hips, legs or ankles at home. It's so easy and harmless that thousands who failed through other means are now getting amazing results in a few days' time.

This new external product is a white, dainty paste which you rub into any fat part you wish to reduce, at night, as you would cream. But it is not a cream and does not contain a drop of water. And the effects are almost magic-like. The parts treated with this new scientific creation, called "COLLIPASTE," are quickly reduced in size and weight, because the paste penetrates and brings about a physiological reaction, heating the surplus fat layers under the skin, the excess fat then actually oozes out through the opened pores with excreted moisture, like perspiration.

Slenderizing the figure this new, easy way is meeting with hearty approval by physicians who warn against dangerous drugs and starvation diets. The success of COLLIPASTE will surely revolutionize methods of reducing, because it is pleasant and healthful to use at night, and works while you sleep. Get a jar now and take away those ugly, fatty, burdensome parts.

Send no money, simply mail Coupon below to Dermolav Laboratories, Dept. 41-D, No. 1700 Broadway, New York, N. Y., for jar costing only $1.95. On arrival pay postman. If you are not more than pleased with reduction, your money will be refunded. Print address plainly.

I was getting a bit fed up. I wanted to go over the western horizon. I went to Hawaii, fighting my way, teaching boxing. I wasn't content with Hawaii. I went on from Honolulu to Australia. In Melbourne, I had dinner with my benefactor of Port Arthur, the safe-cracker. But he was no longer that. His mother had died. He had gone straight, had married, was a father, a successful business man, and even then was running for a seat in Parliament. From there I went to India, stopping at Bombay, at Poona, my itching heel, the McLaglen itching heel, carrying me on.

IT WAS in India at a game of badminton, that I met the Rajah of Arkakoal, the only remaining member of his family who had not died from poison. We went leopard hunting and tiger hunting. In leopard hunting, we tied a goat to a tree in the jungle and that night the leopard would kill his prey, leaving, to return the following night to devour it. The next night, we would be there with our guns. The life was vital and sporting and I liked it. But I left to push on to East Africa, to Zanzibar, to German East Africa, to Portugese East Africa, to South Africa, to Capetown, where I retraced my father's footsteps. It was about then that I learned of the Rajah's death, through poison. He had gone to secure a powder for indigestion and had been given a fatal potion.

The years were passing. Life was pleasant, stirring, always full of adventure. In 1914, came the war. It upset the pleasant conventions of the English colony at the southernmost tip of Africa. Men in the middle country, in the veldt, sold their sheep at a loss and took the first boat for home. It was thrilling to see them board the ship that took me north and to Britain. It was great to see this demonstration of their love for England. On the Island everywhere there was preparation for war. Father had established a chain of free soup kitchens and free nurseries, and was busy with them. Mother had passed on. The boys were at the front. I got a commission in 4/10 Middlesex Regiment (the Duke of Cambridge's own) and recruited a company. We were sent to Baghdad.

We were there for five years. During that time I was appointed Provost Marshal of the city, with the privilege of deciding minor civic problems. It was like being Chief of Police in Paradise, this lazy, delightful desert city, older than man, with Eve, herself, so believed the faithful, buried not many miles hence. That, to me, I believe was the most invigorating, the most pleasant time of my life. Even in this town of legend, written about for centuries, I felt I had existence by the throat, that I had a more tangible reason for living, than I have in Hollywood, where everything seems artificial, a phantasma that will be gone tomorrow.

There was little Apple, her name in Arabic meant just that, and her distinguished Arabian father. I had about made up my mind to ask for my discharge after the Armistice and settle down with the family as a son-in-law and partner in a thriving camel caravan business he had. Already I was dickering with the interned Turks for their gold coins to mold the soft metal into bracelets and bangles for little Apple.

But the war ended. The high tension to which a world was pitched, relaxed. I learned that my brother Fred had passed. I was needed at home. I went. In England, there was not the bright sun of the desert. It was the England of my childhood. All the way around the globe and home again to a Kent village. I rather held myself in abeyance.

SOMETHING would happen. Something did happen. I was approached by a motion picture producer. He wanted to know if I wanted to be an actor. I didn't know. It was beyond my ken how I could be an actor. My life, it seemed, had been too active to confine myself to miniature battles on a screen. The role he offered me was simple. I had merely to play myself, a fighter. It was The Call of the Road, an appropriate title. I took it. It was the first of 20 pictures I made in Britain. One was with Lady Diana Manners, directed by J. Stuart Blackton.

Something else happened. I discovered that a man may roam the continents and come home to find completion. I met Enid Lamonte; her father was in the British Admiralty; and a charming friendship resulted. She was all that typified England to me, sweet and reposeful, after years of travel.

It was after the war. A new vista opened for me. I found myself wanting the invisible, enduring, sweet fetters of a home. I wanted children. We were married.

Never will I forget the pride in my father's eyes when his namesake, Andrew, our first child, now seven, was brought to him for baptism.

Little Andrew is like his grandfather, and like me, and a little like his maternal grandfather, all of us who liked to roam. At our summer home in La Jolla, he will be gone for hours, exploring the rocks and crevices of the California coast. Often he is joined by his sister, Sheila, who toddles along on her chubby, five-year-old legs. Occasionally he asks me to join him on his excursions. I am flattered that he takes me into his confidence. I recognize in him the McLaglen lust for travel and adventure.

ONE day, about five or six years ago, I received word from Commodore Blackton to come to America. He had guided my picture career so dexterously that I came, implicitly. Blackton was to produce a picture with a carnival company hero, The Beloved Brute. Again, I was playing myself. Here I was back in the States, but no longer a rolling

$25.00 DRAWING COURSE FOR $2.98

Haven't you often wished that you could draw some cartoons, illustrate some idea, sketch some pretty face, etc.? You can do all of these things. One of America's most famous Cartoonists and Illustrators has developed a great, simple, system for success in all branches of Commercial Art. This system has revolutionized the entire theory of drawing. It proves that drawing can be as easy for you as writing—much simpler than learning shorthand, bookkeeping or typewriting. We are now placing this original system for learning Drawing, Art and Cartooning, consisting of 34 lessons with over 500 illustrations, within reach of every one. If you will devote a few hours each week to the Course, WE ABSOLUTELY GUARANTEE that you will learn to draw and draw well before you have half finished the Course. If we fail to make this claim good, we will refund every cent paid us. By eliminating a large office force for answering correspondence, expensive catalogs, etc., we are enabled to make a price of $2.98, the cheapest price ever known for a high-grade home study course. Many have sent us letters similar to that of Robt. P. Davis, of Detroit, who wrote: "I can't see how you ask so little, when others with inferior Courses get from $20 to $60 for theirs. It is more than I expected." Learn to draw. It is a big asset, no matter what field you are in.

HAS NO COUGH or ASTHMA NOW

Death Seemed Certain. Tells How Health Was Soon Restored.

Despairing sufferers from asthma and bronchial trouble, will be glad to learn how Mrs. Myrtle Willett, 5900 Maxwell Ave., Detroit, Mich., was restored to health. She says:

"I had bronchial asthma 2 years. Last fall I grew worse, couldn't lie down at all, and slept only 3 hours a night. I was so near death they had to inject medicine in my arm, and I thought every night would be my last. After taking half a bottle of Nacor I began to sleep and eat, and improved every day. My cough soon disappeared, and my strength returned. Now I do not choke or cough at all, and feel perfectly well again."

Mrs. Willett is only one of hundreds of sufferers from asthma, bronchitis and severe chronic coughs who have told how their trouble disappeared and never returned. Their letters and a booklet full of vital information about these diseases will be sent free by Nacor Medicine Co., 696 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind. The more serious your case, the more valuable this free information may be to you. Write for it today.

films. For the most part, their stories have been drawn from stage plays, and the plays of the past few seasons have stressed intimate drama of the drawing room. Consequently, players of polite roles are finding themselves on top of the heap . . . and vododeodo! who of these is more deft than La Tashman?

I DON'T suppose you like it very well out here?"

Recalling the loathing which most picture people profess for the town, I was surprised at the answer to my question. This assuredly was one girl who must lie awake nights, moaning for the glitter of Times Square. But: "I love it! I didn't at first—but I do now. I suppose it's because of the sound pictures. Not only because of the nice way they are treating me, but because they seem to be drawing most of New York out here. The other night we gave a party for about forty people, and I don't recall but three or four of them who are known only through picture work . . . Oh, not that I hold any brief against the films," she hastened to add. "I'm mad about them. But there are other things in life, other interests, other things to be enthused over."

"Then you're not going to hang on in pictures until the bitter end?" I nodded toward a certain passe star; one of the pitiable group which struggles to retain a foothold before the press of changing conditions. "Like her?"

"No; absolutely not. When my day is done, I'm out. There are seven or eight other interests in my life—and I think any one of them could fill the picture gap. Every day opportunities come to me to go into other fields of work. I have a chance to act as a buyer for one of New York's largest shops. And one to go into a business which will issue merchandise bearing my name. And one as a designer of furnishings for a group of apartment houses. I think interior decoration is the work I'll eventually enter when I'm through with this game, but that's all in the future." She spread her slim pale hands. "It's pictures now."

YES, it's pictures now; to their immense luck, recalling her recent work in The Trial of Mary Dugan and Bulldog Drummond. But I suspect that Lilyan will not be content to go on appearing in the roles, smart as they may be, to which she has been relegated by the pigeon-holing tactics of producers. A day will come when boredom, the dread spectre of this modern age, will descend upon her. And then her restless mind and capacity for vital action will be through with motion pictures as surely as it has been the custom of pictures to abandon those who have used up their capacity to interest.

"What I want," she exclaimed, "is to be a real person. Someone ageless and grand. Like Cecil Sorel. Or Bernhardt. Or Mistinguette. Or Isadora Duncan. Despite their faults, those were real women. Immortal. No one ever asked how old they were, any more than we now hear people asking about the ages of women like Jeanne Eagels—or Jane Cowl—or Irene Bordoni—or Ethel Barrymore. Years simply don't affect them. They have some quality which will let them go on forever!"

"And that quality is?" I encouraged.

"A mental force. A directing intelligence. Great women are, as I see it, primarily intelligent. Not intellectual, pray understand—but intelligent. A man might look at a cute young girl and say 'H'mm, what swell hips.' But unless that girl has something with which to back up the lure of her body—no matter how powerful this lure may be—before long his interest must wane."

SHE laughed again, the same vibrant, dazzling laughter. But by now the waiter and the chap at the next table and I all had ourselves a little better in control.

"I was talking to Sidney Howard, the playwright, about women the other evening after seeing The Broadway Melody. I asked him what was the attraction of these hill-and-valley girls. He said that he guessed that the appeal of the Anita Pages of the world to men primarily was to The Beast That Lurks Within... Perhaps that's true. But I've a low-down suspicion that sort of appeal fades like Christmas jewelry."

"What do you think it takes to hold a man?" I asked.

"Intelligence first. That is the general which marshals the rest of the troops. Then charm, a sense of humor, wit, beauty, and sex appeal. Oh, don't make any mistake about that last! Just because a woman is intelligent is no reason why she should be shy on sex appeal. To the contrary: Look, for instance, at the great women of history. What they didn't get with their brains, they got with their bodies."

She hesitated, staring down at her glass. For a moment the mask of the gay and dashing Mrs. Edmund Lowe was moved aside. I had a brief, convincing glimpse of a purposeful young woman, her feet on Celluloid boulevard, her eyes on the soaring reaches of some distant heights.

"If you know what you want," she said steadily, "and drive toward it with all the forces at your command—nothing, nothing in all the world, can keep you from it!"

Then, as if fearful lest she had given indecent exposure to her ambitions, she dropped back into the more familiar character of the good scout. She laughed . . .

And the waiter and I and the fellow at the other table all knocked things over in delightful unison.

Lilyan Tashman—what a woman!

Barker's Worse Than His Bite

REGINALD BARKER, the director, was using a big outdoor set during Hollywood's recent hot spell. A number of Mexicans, required for atmosphere in The Great Divide, just couldn't keep their eyes open.

Finally, Barker barked.

"Hey!" he shouted. "This is a fiesta, not a siesta."

McLaglen—Soldier of Fortune stone. I was a man with a profession, a man with responsibilities. It was not to be, however, that I should rise to the crest immediately.

I was not a star in America. Nevertheless, something of that intangible delight that colored those days in the Canadian backwoods was with me in Hollywood, despite, as I have before said, the fact that I felt it was, and still is, an impermanent phase of life. And, too, I was re-enacting some of the very scenes that I had experienced in my former existence. In Winds of Chance, I had an opportunity to re-live my Canuck days. In Beau Geste, I was again in Morocco on the hot, hot desert. Captain Flagg in What Price Glory? was the ultimate. Here is a picture that I look upon as my best.

I look back over Mother Machree, Hangman's House, Captain Lash, The River Pirate, even The Black Watch, to What Price Glory? as my outstanding effort. It was the army life, the vitality of that existence, that I knew so well and loved. It is with the same intense feeling that I turn to its sequel, The Cock-Eyed World, which we are now filming.

Here is my life. You have it. There is little else to say, except, perhaps, one thing—and that is contradictory. It is inconsistent, in view of my occupation. It is this: I don't want to be famous. I would much rather live in the Canadian backwoods, with my little family, or beside an oasis in Irak, than to follow the flicker of fame in Hollywood—this routine that life has worked out for me.

The End

approached on the First National lot one day by a man who introduced himself, and said: "Don't you think I look like you, Mr. Barthelmess?"

Dick was amazed. "Yes," he said, "there is a slight resemblance, now that you call my attention to it."

"I want a job as your double," offered the enterprising gentleman. "No, don't misunderstand me. I don't mean on the screen. I want to double for you in person at those functions which you don't like to attend. Theatre openings, personal appearances, and so on. I can save you quite a lot of trouble that way." But Dick didn't bite.

Clara Bow's recent experience was rather terrifying.

A young man of nineteen was found lying under her lawn one night, haggard and ragged. He feigned great weakness from lack of food. Clara insisted that the servants give him a room and food until his recovery. A week later, Clara, beginning to smell a rat, suggested he go to the hospital. He stubbornly refused. Meanwhile, he watched Clara as a cat does a mouse. Then one day he disappeared.

About a week later, the fact that several men were shadowing the Bow house, Clara's car, and the studio entrance, became evident. The very next night, Clara's well-known town car, with only her maid inside, was stopped by three masked men, one of whom, in height and build, compared to the mysterious boy that Clara had befriended. But the maid and chauffeur were let go. It was Clara the men were after. Investigation brought to light that the boy was not a criminal bent on kidnaping Clara, but an unwise movie fan who wanted his name connected with the star's at any cost.

THE other day, Norma Shearer received a letter from a young woman who declared that, although Norma had changed her name, she knew her to be a sister. The writer of the letter insisted that Norma come home at once and quit all this nonsense about being a star. She added that their father was ill and that they needed money. Would Norma remit at once with a large check, and not try and get out of it, since the letter writer had recognized her as a sister?

The worst type of parasite, though, is the outright blackmailer who threatens to reveal a scandal in the star's life just when he or she cannot afford to jeopardize an early success. Thousands of dollars are taken from film players each year upon threat of revealing scandal.

Directors are preyed upon by young women who, after gaining an interview, threaten to scream and charge that advances were made. In another day, it was easier to pay a few dollars and save trouble, but this method of blackmail is now such an old story that leading directors all follow King Vidor's plan. He has peep holes drilled in the walls of his office. Through these tiny holes, his secretary and others are able to see all that goes on around the director's desk.

BUT there is one scheme that is never put up to the stars. And that is the time-honored new studio stock sale. For there are studios constantly and continually starting, and stock galore for sale. But film people won't invest. They know this game too well. Such issues of stock go to the outsider—the tourists visiting Hollywood, for instance, who usually buy great blocks of shares, which are later found to be of no use whatsoever save as expensive souvenirs of their California visit.

Yet, despite rebuffs, the bunco wolves continue to pursue the film folks. Why they continue to prowl, nobody knows. Only one in every thousand ever gets away with anything. Perhaps it is the same idea as that which animates the thousands of movie extras—each hopes for a "break" some day in the way of a star who will turn out to be a wash-out.

The wolves are of the opinion that screen folk have no business sense; that they can be easily victimized; that those appearing on the screen are all suckers waiting to be swindled and eager to hand out money to the first schemer who opens his hands for it.

Well, it doesn't work that way today, The stars have been "taken" so many times that they are extremely cautious. Instead, the various propositions offered afford them many a laugh.

Hope you don't feel hurt, O' Wolf.

Hobnobbing With the Film Folk

Merriam, were supposed to be reconciled after many partings and makings up and partings again.

Miss Merriam, a short time ago was playing at the Music Box in Hollywood, in a revue. Rex became very attentive, although the two had been divorced a short time before.

"He wrote me ardent love letters, and was all attention," said Charlotte, the other day. "I was almost won over, and was about to accede to his request that we make up and try it over again when Rex wrote me a note, and said that he had found somebody he could really love. The somebody was Viola Dana, I learned."

Betty Bronson's British Beau

BETTY BRONSON goes far afield for her beau, it seems. Joseph Pendergrass, an Englishman whom Betty met abroad, came away over to Hollywood recently to spend his holidays with Betty. And Betty merely blushes and says nothing when you ask about him.

Nils Asther's Predicament

NILS ASTHER couldn't come to Norma Shearer's party, which Norma and her husband, Irving Thalberg, gave following the opening in Los Angeles of The Trial of Mary Dugan.

So the gallant young actor sent Norma a huge bouquet of roses.

Norma told me the story herself.

"I showed the roses to Irving," she related, "and he merely smiled a little, and said, 'Oh, yes,'—quite nonchalant about the affair. But when Nils heard that the roses were red—he had ordered white ones—he tore his hair.

"'Oh, in Europe,' he cried, 'a husband he keel me if I send his wife red roses!'

"But I assured him," smiled Norma, "that he had nothing to fear."

Happily Ever After!

Instead Joan puckered her lips, very temptingly.

And Dodo pressed his own against them, very tenderly.

"Now you let me go on with our story, won't you, honey?"

She smiled.

"OUR future plans are to be happy," continued Doug.

"Exactly," interposed Joan.

"There you go again," chided Dodo.

"Well, I've got something to say about that, haven't I?"

"All right, then, let's both talk," capitulated her husband.

"This is how we are going to be happy forever," said Dodo, "we're never going to get angry together."

"We get mad just one by one; one at a time," said the missus.

"I'll be the boss," said he, "in matters outside the household."

"I'll be the overseer within the home," declared Joan. "I will also take care of the family budget. If we need new curtains, a new vacuum cleaner or groceries, that's my business, not his."

"Yes," agreed Doug, "and when it comes to deciding who our guests shall be and where we shall go, that's my concern."

"WILL you always be together? How about circumstances which will compel you to be apart?" I asked.

"No, no," they chorused. "We'll be always together."

"Won't you get tired of each other, always in each other's company?"

"Never," they crooned in unison.

"Maybe you might get a little jealous of each other," I hinted.

"No, sir, never!" they asservated.

"You see," Joan went on, "we're terribly in love with each other. With some people, romance ends with marriage. But with us, romance only picks up more momentum with this nuptial step. We're in love, you see."

"We'll be the same six months from now," Dodo declared, "the same six years hence, and God willing, the same sixty years from today."

Doug, Jr., is 19. She's 24.

Both agreed they would have children.

"We love, we adore children," said Joan, "we have dreamed of them all our lives. But of course there will be no addition to our family for some time. We are too much in love with each other. We want to be around each other so much. A child will prevent me from being with him, and as attentive to him as I am now. I don't know whether I shall ever outlive this first thrilling blush of matrimony."

"Then, too," added Dodo, "we have to make our mark in the world. Some day we will hide away from everybody, in our own little Arcady, and let the rest of the world roll by."

How De Mille Handles "Dynamite"

strange when there are only five per cent of the theatres equipped to show them. Yet, that five per cent shows to eighty-five per cent of the picture-going public, leaving only fifteen per cent of the people to see the silent version.

"A few years ago, producers looked to that fifteen per cent for their money. The other eighty-five per cent attended the stage plays and seemed to forget there was such a thing as motion pictures.

"Today, with the talking pictures in almost every theatre of any size, that eighty-five per cent has become patrons of picture houses and they are the ones who are now filling the coffers of the producers. It is to them that motion picture companies are catering. But, of course, we don't want to forget the fifteen per cent which has so nobly helped build up the industry—hence the silent version. Nothing could be more fair than that, could it?"

No, I suppose not, but I do hope the time will soon come when the "little fellow" can hear Conrad Nagel as well as see him.

Final Movie Talkie Contest Letter

Below is printed the concluding prize winning letter in SCREEN SECRETS' monthly contest offering a prize of $5.00 for a letter giving a frank opinion of the talkies.

2931 Chestnut Street,
Oakland, California.

Dear Editor:

The talkies made obsolete all previous forms of entertainment, because they magnify the world's best theatrical endeavor in the realms of drama and musical comedy.

It means that we of moderate circumstances, representative of the vast majority of the people, can have such famous stars as Fred Stone, Ethel Barrymore, and Will Rogers brought to us via the medium of the screen—actors we could never hope to see, because of the limitations of the stage.

We can now enjoy colossal musical revues, such as Ziegfeld's Follies, with their magnificent costumes and beautiful scenes, unhampered by the confining limits of the stage. The movement from the stage to the screen is a progressive and successful step in modern entertainment and will continue to be so for many years to come.

Yours very truly,
MRS. E. L. MADSEN.

Mercolized Wax Keeps Skin Young

Remove all blemishes and discolorations by regularly using pure Mercolized Wax. Get an ounce, and use as directed: Fine, almost invisible particles of aged skin peel off, until all defects, such as pimples, liver spots, tan, freckles and large pores have disappeared. Skin is beautifully clear, soft and velvety, and face looks years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty. To quickly remove wrinkles and other age lines, use this face lotion: 1 ounce powdered saxolite and 1 half pint witch hazel. At Drug Stores.

Banishes Old Style Can Openers to the Scrap Heap and Brings Agents $5 to $12 an Hour!

Here is a truly revolutionary invention. It is something that every woman has been waiting and hoping for. Now, all the danger and wastefulness of old-style can openers is ended. Now, every home in the land can open cans the new, simple, safe, easy way by a handy little machine. Now, no man whose present income is less than $60 a week can afford to ignore the amazing new opportunity for real money that this novel invention has created. Read the GENEROUS FREE TEST offer below. Then act at once.

"Here is my record for first 30 days with Speedo: June 13, 60 Speedos; June 20, 84 Speedos; June 30, 192 Speedos; July 6, 288 Speedos. Speedo sells to 9 out of 10 prospects."
M. Ornoff, Va.

SPARE TIME—$9 First Half Day

"The first afternoon I received my Speedo outfit I made $9."
Mrs. R. Spain, Kans.

PART TIME—$20 in 3 Hours

"I worked about three hours and took 25 orders. This is certainly a money-maker."
O. C. Gregg, Wyo.

WOMEN universally detest the old-style can opener. Yet in practically every home cans are being opened with it, often several times a day. Imagine then, how thankfully they welcome this new method—this automatic way of doing their most distasteful job. With the wonderful little Speedo can opener you just put the can in the machine, turn the handle, and almost instantly the job is done.

A "Million Dollar" Can Opening Machine

The Speedo holds the can—opens it—flips up the lid so you can grab it—and gives you back the can without a drop spilled, without any rough edges to snag your fingers—all in a couple of seconds! It's so easy even a 10-year-old child can do it in perfect safety! No wonder women—and men, too—simply go wild over it! And no wonder Speedo salesmen often sell to every house in the block and make up to $10 an hour either spare time or full time.

Store your suits, overcoats, dresses, shoes, etc., in the large wardrobe compartment. Use the commodious drawers for other wearing apparel. Write letters, keep memoranda in the convenient writing desk. Rich and lovely American Brown Walnut finish, always in style and always attractive. Perfect plate glass mirrors. Sturdy construction throughout!

Sold BELOW COST to Win New Friends

This Chifforobe is offered to you below actual cost. We do not make one cent of profit, we actually lose money . . . all we hope to make on this wonderful bargain is more friends for Spear.

Frankly, it is priced $15 less than the same quality would cost you elsewhere. You save almost one-half. You send only $1. You have 30 days FREE trial. You may take 300 days to pay. Use your credit.

A value almost unbelievable, almost unreasonable . . . but here is the reason: Spear sacrifices profit, loses money, to win your friendship. This Chifforobe is our leader . . . we are confident that it will lead you to order more from Spear, to become one of our 1,000,000 satisfied customers. In a word, we want to acquaint you with Spear bargains and Spear policies. This is our method of doing it. We couldn't afford to sell you everything at such a sacrifice, of course, nor can we continue to sell this chifforobe at this price; except during this sale. Nevertheless, you will be astounded at the many other home furnishing bargains your credit will buy from Spear. Send for our complete catalog. Mail the coupon today. No obligation to buy.

Take 300 Days to Pay. You cannot imagine a more solidly built Chifforobe. It is made of 3-ply veneers, built-up stock, thoroughly air-seasoned and kiln-dried. Frames are stoutly glued and braced. The entire case has a lock corner construction—the best known. Above the small mirror is an attractive floral decoration in rich colors, enhancing the quality appearance. You'll be delighted with this chifforobe! The family will enjoy its convenience.

The case is equipped with a sliding metal hanger bar and 2 garment hangers. Great big mirror on wardrobe door. The oversize wardrobe section is amply large to hold several suits—and dresses, besides. Keep your clothes neat—keep bedroom neater by keeping clothes out of sight. Stores shoes, too. There are 3 big clothes drawers, and 1 writing desk drawer. The writing lid, when closed, is identically like the others—looks like a drawer. When open, the large writing section has 5 compartments for stationery, etc. The Chifforobe is large size, 63 in. high, 39 in. wide, 18 in. deep. The small mirror measures 12 x 16 in.; large mirror, 14 x 38 in. Both of clearest plate glass.

Save money, save space, save steps, save work—order today. Send only $1. Use it as your own for 30 days FREE. If you are not entirely satisfied, return it and we will cheerfully refund your money and transportation charges both ways. Shipped direct from factory to you.

EASY AS A, B, C

IT'S fun

HELLO, POPULARITY!

Learning to play your favorite instrument this "no-teacher" way— takes only a few months!

ALL your life you've wanted to play a musical instrument. And now at last you can realize your ambition! Just choose your favorite instrument—the piano, the violin, the saxophone, whatever it may be—and then let the U. S. School of Music prove that you can learn to play it in an amazingly short time—right in your own home—and without any private teacher.

Mail the coupon NOW—and you will immediately receive an interesting Free booklet that tells you all about this wonderful new system—which has already taught over one-half million students to play their favorite musical instrument.

Musical Talent Not Needed

Even if you have never touched an instrument before you can't go wrong this amazingly easy way. For every step, from beginning to end, is right before your eyes in print and picture. You always know what to do and how to do it. No guess work. No delays. If you make a mistake you correct it yourself and continue. The whole course is as simple as A, B, C—and any child will tell you that studying music this new way is even easier than learning to read.

There are no tricks—no stunts—no long tedious exercises—no dull, monotonous finger practice. Everything is clearly explained and simplified so that you get all the essentials of a thorough musical education—in short-cut fashion. In a few short months you will be able to render popular selections with ease and expression.

Some of our most successful students say that this home course in music is real fun—more fascinating than the most enjoyable game! For you study when you please—and as much as you please—in your spare time. You're not tied down to any specific practice hour either. You go fast or slow—it doesn't make a bit of difference because there isn't any expensive private teacher to pay. With this new form of instruction, the cost averages the same in every case—a few cents a day.

How to Be Popular

You'll be surprised to see how music will give you a greater joy and interest in life. It will enlarge your circle of friends—and will attract many new admirers. If you can play a musical instrument you will never feel "alone in a crowd." For as you dash off the latest song hit—or play some lovely melody from a well-known classic—you will always be in demand—you can't help being popular.

Play Any Instrument

Piano	Guitar
Organ	Hawaiian Guitar
Violin	Drums and Traps
Mandolin	Plectrum Banjo
Ukulele	5-String Banjo
Clarinet	Tenor Banjo
Flute	Sight Singing
Harp	Piccolo
Cornet	Trombone

Amazingly Easy Way to get into ELECTRICITY

Don't spend your life waiting for $5.00 raises in a dull, hopeless job. Now . . . and forever . . . say good-bye to 25 and 35 dollars a week. Let me show you how to quality for jobs leading to salaries of $50, $60 and up, a week, in Electricity—NOT by correspondence, but by an amazing way to teach, that makes you a practical expert in 90 days! Getting into Electricity is far easier than you imagine! Act now, today!

Learn Without Books in 90 DAYS

LACK of experience—age or advanced education bar no one. I don't care if you don't know an armature from an air brake—I don't expect you to! I don't care if you're 16 years old or 40—it makes no difference! Don't let lack of money stop you. Most of the men at Coyne have no more money than you have.

Railroad Fare Allowed

I will allow your railroad fare to Chicago, and if you should need part-time work I'll assist you to it. Then, in 12 brief weeks, in the great roaring shops of Coyne, I train you as you never dreamed you could be trained . . . on the greatest outlay of electrical apparatus ever assembled . . . costing hundreds of thousands of dollars . . . real dynamos, engines, power plants, autos, switchboards, transmitting stations . . . everything from doorbells to farm power and lighting . . . full-sized . . . in full operation every day!

Prepare For Jobs Like These

Here are a few of hundreds of positions open to COYNE-trained men. Our free employment bureau gives you lifetime employment service.

Armature Expert	up to $100 a Week
Substation Operator	up to $65 a Week
Auto Electrician	$60 a Week and up
Inventor - - -	Unlimited
Maintenance Engineer	up to $100 a Week
Service Station Owner	$60 a Week and up
Radio Expert	$60 a Week and up

No Books—All Actual Work

No books, no baffling charts . . . all real actual work . . . building real batteries . . . winding real armatures, operating real motors, dynamos and generators, wiring houses, etc., etc. That's a glimpse of how we make you a master practical electrician in 90 days, teaching you far more than the average ordinary electrician ever knows and fitting you to step into jobs leading to big pay immediately after graduation. Here, in this world-famous Parent school—and nowhere else in the world—can you get such training!

Jobs, Pay, Future

Don't worry about a job, Coyne training settles the job question for life. Demand for Coyne men often exceeds the supply. Our employment bureau gives you lifetime service. Two weeks after graduation, Clyde F. Hart got a position as electrician with the Great Western Railroad at over $100 a week. That's not unusual. We can point to Coyne men making up to $600 a month. $60 a week is only the beginning of your opportunity. You go into radio, battery or automotive electrical business for yourself and make up to $15,000 a year.

AVIATION ELECTRICITY

I am including my new Aviation Electricity courses as well as Radio and Automobile Electrical courses to all who enroll now.

Students wiring and checking ignition on one of the late type Radial Aircraft Engines in our aviation department.

GET THE FACTS

Coyne is your one great chance to get into electricity. Every obstacle is removed. This school is 30 years old—Coyne training is tested—proven beyond all doubt—endorsed by many large electrical concerns. You can find out everything absolutely free. Simply mail the coupon and let me send you the big, free Coyne book of 150 photographs . . . facts . . . jobs . . . salaries . . . opportunities. Tells you how many earn expenses while training and how we assist our graduates in the field. This does not obligate you. So act at once. Just mail coupon.

GLADYS BROCKWELL, who entered pictures fifteen years ago, at the age of seventeen, is dead, the victim of injuries received in an automobile accident.

The Hunchbach of Notre Dame, Seventh Heaven and The Woman Disputed, afforded Miss Brockwell several of her most noted rôles. She had an important part in the first feature-length, all-talking picture, Lights of New York, and her excellent work in this film presaged a brilliant talkie career. Two weeks before her death she finished her last engagement, in The Drake Case, for Universal.

Agnes O'Loughlin, Follies beauty, has announced her engagement to Joe Benjamin, Marian Nixon's divorced husband and former contender for the lightweight boxing championship.

Ada Williams, sixteen-year-old Miss United States of 1927, is now Mrs. William Thomas Ince, bride of the twenty-year-old eldest son of the late Thomas H. Ince. The marriage culminates a romance that began in June a year ago.

Dustin Farnum, long a noted figure on stage and screen, is dead. His most famous stage rôles were in The Squaw Man, The Virginian, Cameo Kirby and The Little Rebel. William Farnum, also an actor, is his surviving brother.

Director Edwin Carewe and Mary Akin Carewe, recently married for the second time, are on their way to Europe for a second honeymoon.

Mrs. Parker Benjamin, who before her marriage was Gladys Lamphere, stage star, has arrived in Hollywood to enter the talkies. She is also planning to open a talkie studio for the Lauder Recording Company, a project similar to the studio conducted by Mrs. Enrico Caruso, her sister-in-law.

Baclanova, one of the few foreign film players to survive the onslaught of the talkies, has completed a successful period on the American variety stage and is back in Hollywood ready to begin work on her next all-dialogue production. The beautiful Russian and her husband, Nicholas Soussanin, opened in New York with their sketch, The Farewell Supper. Their success caused them to appear at the Brooklyn Theatre in conjunction with Baclanova's film production, A Dangerous Woman.

Now, with her vowel complaint corrected, this star is considered a potential first-water luminary for talking pictures.

Helen Morgan, heroine of Florenz Ziegfeld's Show Boat company, has been signed by Paramount for the leading rôle in Applause. She will be directed by Rouben Mamoulian, former New York Theater Guild director, whose work in staging Porgy, Wings Over Europe and Marco Millions, put him in the first rank of stage directors.

Roscoe Arbuckle, the former funny fat boy of the movies, is in difficulties again. This time it's over real estate.

Arbuckle and his wife, Doris Dean, are the defendants against Jos. M. Schenck and his wife, Norma Talmadge Schenck. The Superior Court has been called upon to decide title to the property. The case is an aftermath of the domestic difficulties of Arbuckle and his wife, who more than a year ago sued the former comedian for divorce. This suit still is pending.

Title to the property in ligitation is said to be in Schenck's name.

Dudley Digges, famous stage actor and director, has arrived in Hollywood to direct the dialogue in Condemned to Devil's Island, Ronald Colman's new starring picture. Mr. Digges has also been cast for the rôle of Vidal in this picture. It will be the first screen experience of this celebrated stage character.

Is Clara Bow happy? She'll say she is, for Harry Richman, pictured with her, had presented her with a costly engagement ring just before this photograph was taken at her Beverly Hills home.

Helen Kane, who originated the baby talk fad on Broadway, has left the stage to entertain movie fans with her cooing, via the talkies. Her first featured rôle was in Good Boy, and her work was of such high order in this film that she has been signed on a long-term contract by Paramount. She is at present working on an all-dialogue musical picture entitled Sweetie. It is a story dealing with prep school life. In it she should have no difficulty repeating her former success.

I SELL RECORDS A QUEER WAY

So people tell me, because I will gladly mail postpaid to any person who sends me his name and address, a selection of ten records absolutely ON TRIAL, entirely at my risk. Choose any records you want.

Furthermore, I positively insist that you return the records to me at once, if they are in any way inferior to records that sell for three or four times as much. Don't be "sorry" for me, shoot the records back, and let me stand the postage expense both ways, unless the records are better, clearer and richer in tone than any records you have ever before had, at any price.

I have built a million-dollar business in records on just these "queer" methods, trusting absolutely in the honesty of my customers, and making them the sole judge of whether or not the records will cost them even one cent.

I've built these records to give you pleasure, enjoyment and some real honest good times for months and years to come. I've tried to study the wishes and tastes of the great music-loving public and I've collected, in this list below, the very CREAM of my entire catalog. All the records are electrically recorded and nearly all of them have been done within the last few months, and are in the very latest and best style of the present day. They are all in the standard ten-inch size with music on both sides and play on any phonograph, just like 75-cent records. They include the recent hits, as well as famous old favorites, and I'm willing to stake my last dollar that they are GOOD.

Special List of BEST Sellers

Carolina Moon	Hallelujah I'm a Bum
Rock Candy Mountain	Dream Mother
After the Ball	Wreck of the Old 97

TALKIE TALK

A monthly feature devoted to bringing our readers the latest, most authentic news of talkie personalities and developments.

What Price Talkies?

A SOUND stage eats into a picture allowance at the rate of $1,000 an hour," says William C. De Mille, in discussing the new art as compared to silent pictures. "A sound camera, for example, quadruples film consumption," explains the noted director. For this reason, De Mille attacks his problems before going on the sound stage, maps out the entire action and arranges for every possible technical detail before work goes ahead on the $1,000-an-hour scale.

Bebe Wins a Contest

BEBE DANIELS' splendid singing and speaking accomplishments decided RKO moguls in her favor when they mulled over the question of who was to get the feminine lead in Rio Rita.

The contest for the featured lead was active from the very start. According to William Le Baron, vice president in charge of production for RKO, thirty-five stars of stage, screen and vaudeville were given film tests for the rôle. The choice simmered down eventually to Ann Greenway, Ethelyn Terry and Bebe Daniels.

John Boles, the tenor who made such a hit in Desert Song, will play opposite Bebe.

Tenor Furnishes Inspiration

JOHN McCORMACK'S golden voice has greatly aided Tom Barry in writing the story for the noted tenor's initial appearance on the screen. Winfield Sheehan presented the writer with a Victrola and every record McCormack has made since the first one in 1905.

Measuring Up to the Mike

THEY'RE measuring the stars these days. It doesn't do to have a six-foot-three hero and a five-foot heroine playing before the mike. As Lloyd Bacon points out, all the scenes would have to be shot with the girl sitting in the man's lap, to get them both within the same microphone range.

Barbara Kent, Universal featured player, gives the old version of the lion and the mouse a new angle. The cub, born recently at the studio zoo, poses impromptu for the "lion and the mike."

Talkies at Sea

THE first complete recording plant for the talkie, to be operated at sea is now in operation at Catalina Island harbor. The equipment, valued at $200,000, is being used to record yacht scenes for So Long Letty, the Warner Brothers film.

The yacht was not large enough for the full equipment, so it was placed on a barge which was towed alongside the yacht. Thus the photography and recording was done on the spot.

Voices Across the Sea

AT LAST one of the major companies has taken a definite stand on the question of foreign distribution of talkies. Radio Pictures (RKO) has just announced that its musical extravaganza, Rio Rita, based on the Ziegfeld success, will be released generally abroad.

Polly Wants a Wisecracker

THE first parrot to crash the talkies has two speeches in De Mille's Dynamite. The bird is extremely proud of his lines and repeats them constantly. They are: "This is going to be hot!" and "Don't touch me, I'm a good girl!"

But the gayly colored bird has evidently been listening as well as talking, for he suddenly burst forth, in an excellent imitation of the director's voice: "That's rotten! Retake!"

Foot-pads

THE city ordinance against automobile cut-outs is not more rigidly enforced than is the studio law against French-heeled shoes.

"We have gas bombs ready to throw at anyone who dares walk on a sound stage with a pair of those tap-tap-tap pumps," declares James Gleason. "If an actress or a script girl insists on wearing high-heeled shoes, she must have the heel tipped with rubber or cork. Before a woman visitor is permitted on the sound set, she is first given a pair of wool covers to slip over her footgear."

One-Word Rôle

THE talking part of Leonard Simmons in Half Marriage, at the RKO studio, consists of but one word—"hemstitching." The director was looking for someone to say "hemstitching" in a certain fashion, and Simmons got the part.

Radio comes to the Screen

RICHARD DIX

A screen favorite who occupies a distinct place in the hearts of all picture-goers . . Radio Pictures' newest star.

RADIO . . . colossus of modern art and science . . . now takes its place in the world of motion pictures.

With the release of the first two of its super attractions, "Rio Rita," and "Hit the Deck," Radio Pictures inaugurates an era of new entertainment standards. This new era is the result of the union of great amusement and industrial interests.

Included in this union are such organizations as the Radio Corporation of America; the Victor Talking Machine Division of the Radio-Victor Corporation of America; the National Broadcasting Company; the General Electric Company; and the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company; and such amusement enterprises as RCA Photophone, Inc.; the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Circuit of Theatres, and the RKO Distributing Corporation.

Commanding the cream of the world's talent, and scientific facilities, Radio Pictures will disclose for the first time the true potentialities of electrical entertainment on the screen.

Watch for Radio Pictures' first productions. Be prepared for revelations in investiture, in tonal qualities and in entertainment values generally.

START TONIGHT AND REDUCE WEIGHT!

Start Reducing Tonight at Home and Feel Better Tomorrow Morning Than You Have For Months
(Every Statement Certified From Actual Experience)
SEND THE COUPON FOR YOUR FIRST THREE FAYRO BATHS

Thousands of smart women have found this easy way to take off excess weight once or twice a week. These women take refreshing Fayro baths in the privacy of their own homes.

Fayro contains many of the same natural mineral salts that make effective the waters of twenty-two hot springs of America, England and Continental Europe. For years the spas and hot springs bathing resorts have been the retreat of fair women and well groomed men.

Excess weight has been removed, skins have been made more lovely bodies more shapely, and minds brighter.

The Hot Springs Are Now Brought To You

A study of the analyses of the active ingredients of the waters from twenty-two of the most famous springs have taught us the secret of their effectiveness. You can now enjoy these benefits in your own bath. Merely put Fayro into your hot bath. It dissolves rapidly. You will notice and enjoy the pungent fragrance of its balsam oils and clean salts.

Then, Fayro, by opening your pores and stimulating perspiration, forces lazy body cells to sweat out surplus fat and bodily poisons. Add Fayro to your bath at night and immediately excess weight will have been removed in an easy, refreshing and asolutely harmless manner.

Fayro will refresh you and help your body throw off worn out fat and bodily poisons. Your skin will be clearer and smoother. You will sleep better after your Fayro bath and awaken feeling as though you had enjoyed a week's vacation.

Results Are Immediate

Weigh yourself before and after your Fayro bath. You will find you have lost weight. And a few nights later when you again add Fayro to your bath, you will once more reduce your weight. As soon as you are the correct weight for your height do not try to reduce further. No need to deny yourself wholesome meals. No need for violent exercise. No need for drugs or medicines. Merely a refreshing Fayro bath in the privacy of your own home.

THE EDITOR'S OPINION

¶ Rubbing Aladdin's Lamp

Captain Roscoe Fawcett, Editor

BEFORE the talkies arrived, the motion picture industry was at its wit's end to devise a new cocktail for the jaded appetites of the fans.

What will happen when the novelty of the talkies wears off? Already we are not content to "hear and see"—we want more than a new gewgaw.

This time the producers are prepared.

Try to imagine this—a motion picture broadcast by television into your own home, with full sound accompaniment—and the picture appearing in three dimensions, all in color!

This is no idle dream. Color films, of course, we have, but a new process now proves that as many as five colors can be used with amazing result. Television has been accomplished, and awaits the proper moment for film magicians to haul it forth from the silk hat. Sets have been built which can be installed in the home to receive the broadcast of a motion picture from a central broadcasting point. These sets will not be sold outright, but rented.

The three dimensional picture, giving a steroscopic effect, was once tried out by supplying the audience with red and blue glasses, and then that novelty was forgotten. Now a new principle is involved, using light refracting lenses.

Wonders are on the way. Be patient, while the magicians of Hollywood murmur the magic words!

Talkie Tricks

FILMDOM'S new plaything, the talkies, is proving to be an Aladdin's lamp. The magic of it is bringing new wonders that surpass imagination—and much of it surprises even the ones who rub the lamp in Hollywood.

Right now the talk of the celluloid town buzzes about the strikingly novel Hollywood Revue devised by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Its closest comparison is to the Greenwich Village Follies, but here again comparisons are odious, for every trick of the talking camera is used to startle and amaze.

They simply gathered up all their stars, and "galaxy" is no word for it, and made each one contribute a song, dance or gag to the picture. Tied up with a master of ceremonies, in the person of Conrad Nagel, they frolic through the affair, poking fun at themselves, at the movies, at everything—and rollicking is the result. By reversing the film, one number shows the dancing girls alternately in positive film, then in negative, with weird effect.

As an experiment, the Revue has astonished even its producers. Musical comedies in talking films are not so popular, due possibly to the habit we have formed of expecting a more logical plot to a photoplay. The revue idea does away with plot, and opens a new avenue of entertainment.

Camera Thrills

DR. FEJOS, of Universal, called forth all the trickery of the talking films in making Broadway, and here again is a picture that proves the talkies are meeting the demand for bigger and better things. Broadway is, despite its trick camera stuff, no idle novelty but a commendable piece of craftsmanship. One little whisper of dissent, worthy Doctor—that traveling crane of yours made us dizzy with its whirling camera shots. We've heard others claim they found a thrill in gyrating above the set, similar to the thrill of a ferris wheel, but for us we wish you had kept to Mother Earth for those few feet of film.

Evidence

I BEGIN now to believe these stories of the lure of the sea. Charlie Chaplin has just bought a motor boat for $15,000. When anybody can pry Charles loose from that much money the lure must be considerable.

A Changed Roster

THE talkies have brought about a great house cleaning in the studios.

Charles Rogers, George Bancroft and Clara Bow are the only stars at Paramount who were there when the talkie invasion began. Bebe Daniels has gone to RKO. Richard Dix is headed for the same studio. Wallace Beery has changed over to M-G-M.

Clara's Victory

CLARA BOW says she has struck on being the tough kid of Hollywood in all the pictures. She opines that somebody else can be tough for a while; she is to play a part—as a special concession—where she is sweet and innocent.

Water nymphs a la 1929. Dorothy Sebastian and Anita Page are usually to be found at the Santa Monica beaches when not working at the M-G-M Studios. They may get tanned—but they like it.

The Actor's Plight

THE Hollywood actor is in a tough spot just now. He is in a fair way to being killed with kindness. It's all over the Actor's Equity, which is waging a stiff fight to get a foothold in the industry. They are very unselfish about it. It's all for the actors' own good. The producers are equally unselfish about it. They have made it plain that they will let Equity organize the industry over their dead bodies. But that's all for the actors' own good, too. And all of this is great fun for everybody except the actor. If he comes out flat-footed for Equity, the producers say, "All right for you!" And when a part comes up he doesn't get it. If he comes out flat-footed against Equity, then Equity says, "All right for you!" And if he has had a run of tough luck in pictures, and wants to go on the stage to earn the daily caviar for the wife and kiddies, he finds the stage door is locked against him.

As a result the great popular indoor sport in Hollywood just now is holding meetings about Equity in which actors try to keep from saying anything that they can be quoted on. For which you can hardly blame them. Funny people, actors. They just seem to want to work and earn an honest living.

The magazine business has its problems, but there are moments, and this is one of them, when I thank God I wasn't born to be an actor!

Lupe's Luck

AT LAST it looks as though Lupe Velez, the little Mexican firecracker, was going to get the chance to display her amazing natural talents, which has so far been denied her. She is going to play the rôle of the untamed child of the wide open spaces, which Lenore Ulric made famous on the stage in Tiger Rose. In fact she is at work on the picture at this writing and those who have seen her say she is marvelous. Lupe finds herself in the curious position of one who has received too much publicity. Her dynamic personality has aroused widespread interest in her, but so far, through that peculiar irony which stalks most motion picture careers, she has not had the pictures to capitalize on it. In every picture in which she has appeared she has managed to slip in some bit of pure artistry. But she has never yet been given a part which was wholly suited to her. Some day maybe some producer will cash in on her abilities as a mimic. Her take-offs on Hollywood personalities are the funniest things imaginable. Perhaps it will take Tiger Rose to impress upon the producers that here is a vein of pure golden talent that has hardly yet been tapped.

An Important Venture

THE earnings of the best of the talkies are simply incredible. Mary Pickford will make at least $2,000,000 out of Coquette.

She and Doug are working out the plans for The Taming of the Shrew under the supervision of a herd of Shakespearean scholars. If it is a success, you can bank on a flood of Shakespeare on the screen. And then some more dough will be lost.

Some of the worst flops in the history of the screen can be laid at the door of the immortal Bard.

LILY DAMITA

Lily Damita just for fun decided to don this garb as her conception of how a gold-digger should be dressed—if gold-digging is to be indulged in.

from Gay PAREE

Oo-la-la! This little mademoiselle from Gay Paree tells SCREEN SECRETS readers her life story—a tale of many love affairs and heart conquests, spiced with truth and flavored with sincerity—fascinating, alive!

By Lily Damita

YOU see the many pictures of Lily in lacy underthings, kicking her legs, laughing. You say, "Pouf! She know nothing. She is a scatter-brain. She does not theenk. She is just a leetle girl who dance her way gaily through life without worry, without care!"

Sometimes I wish it were true. I would be happier then. Troubles? Ha! I would laugh at them. But to have the success, it is not easy. I have fight, fight, fight, all the way, for everything I have. I have work like a dog. I have starve. Now I can say I have done it all alone. What I have I get for myself. No one has help me. I owe nothing to anybody. That much is nice.

But I have to put everything out of my life except the success. It has been one long battle between my career and love. I like men. I have met many men in my life, many wonderful men. I would like to stop and fall in love with them. But men are the natural enemy of the woman who wants a career. They take your time, your thought, your heart. You do not go forward, you do not learn more, you do not do more.

So I put men out of my life. I go so far in love. Then I see it is getting to my heart. I say, "Lily, this is dangerous!" And I run away from them. They do not understand. But I cannot help it. They would hurt my career. So I draw a circle around my heart, so that no one can touch me there. And I go on—alone. Sometimes it hurts me very, very much. Sometimes I think there is no career in the world that is worth it. And I am sorry. But for everything that you do in the world you must make the sacrifice and so—

"I draw a circle around my heart, so that no one can touch me there. And I go on—alone," says this little Parisienne, whose life has been "one long battle between her career and love."

I WAS born in Paris, the gay, beautiful city that I love. I am the only child. I have no brothers nor sisters. I am not allowed to play with other children. My mother she keep me always with her. I see the other children playing out in the streets. They are having such a good time. I want to play like that, too. I ask my mother, but she say, "No, you cannot." One day I run away to play with them, but my mother she paddle me good. I do not do it again. So I make playmates in my imagination. I play with my picture books and my dolls.

From the very beginning, my mother she have a great influence over me. When I am even too young to understand, she tell me over and over again that I am to be the grande artiste, the beeg success. So I say to people, "I am going to be the great actress some day!"

Who wouldn't look pleasant and sit pretty for his picture, if the artist were the beautiful and piquant Lily Damita?

My mother shape my life always for me to be an actress. I do not know why. She was never on the stage. If she had known what it meant, the heartbreaks, the battles, she would not have want it for me. Never, never does she tell me her reasons. It is her secret. I think maybe she have the great desire to be an actress when she is young and meet with a terrible disappointment, so she want for her daughter the career which she could not have for herself.

When I am five years old, my mother she say to me, "Lily, I cannot teach you any longer. It is time you go to school in the convent." So she pack our things and we go to a convent near Lisbon in Portugal. She leave me there and take a house close by so that she can be near me all the time.

I LIKE the convent very much. There are other little girls for me to play with. The sisters are very kind. They teach me I should be good. They teach me all about God.

My mother she come to see me every week. She write me long, long letters every day. They are always about the success. I must always work and always study. I must not play too much. I must never, never forget I am to be the great actress.

I like the convent so much I think I would like to stay there always and be a nun. It is so quiet, so peaceful. One day I tell my mother I think maybe I should be a nun. That makes her very, very much afraid. So she takes me out walking with her and give me a long, long talk. She tell me I must not think too much about the convent and about what they teach me. She say it is well enough that I learn about God, yes. Everyone must learn about God. But it is the bigger thing for me that I think about being an actress. I tell her that I think I like the convent better.

So my mother grow very much afraid. The next day she take me out of the convent and we move to another convent, this time it is in Spain. The language is different, the children are different. At first I do not like it. Then soon I grow to like this one, too. So my mother insist that me move again. This time we go to Greece.

WE ARE not long in Greece when my mother decide that I have had enough of convents. It is high time that I forget them, she think. So she say to me, "Now, Lily, I think you are ready for the conservatoire." Then we go to the Conservatoire, in Belgium, which is the dancing school.

This I like even better than the convent. I learn to sing and to dance. That I love. Dancing is to me natural like the flirtation or eating. It is not work. It is play. I am now seven years old, and I begin to think that being the great actress would be fun after all.

After I am in the Conservatoire about a year my mother think I should travel. So we leave the Conservatoire and go wandering off around Europe. It is then that I get the love of travel which I am to have all my life.

It is living to me—always the new things, new places, new experiences, new faces, new books, new ideas. It is exciting, it is interesting.

When I travel I meet new people, interesting people. From all of them who are worth-while I get something. Those who have nothing—I do not bother.

AND I learn to flirt. Flirtation it is a great pastime. To make eyes at a man across the room, to make him look at you and be interested in you, it is what you call the good sport.

All this time I do not know any boys. Then one time my mother and I are back again in Lisbon. We take rooms on the third floor of a house. From the window I see a boy go in and out. I like him. I found out his papa is a dentist, that he live on the first floor. He is twelve years old; he theenks he is a man. He wears a beeg, black hat, like a man, and a man's long trousers and tries to grow a mustache. I theenk he is funny but that he is also very grand.

At the age of fourteen, Lily made her début in the Opera de Paris. It was "rehearse, rehearse, all day long and then hard work until late at night," but success waited for this persevering girl at the end of the arduous trail.

"Oh, boy! Do I like Paris! The cafés, the boulevards, the noisy taxis, all the people I know!" But Hollywood with its cafés and boulevards, presents to Lily a parallel to her beloved Paree—and she's rapidly getting acquainted.

I watch for him every day.

Then one day I see him stick his head out a window and I write a note saying that I love him and I tie it to the end of a string and drop it down to him. He takes it and reads it and ties another note to the string which say he love me, too. That night I dream about him. We write many notes which say we are sweethearts. Then one day he meet me around the corner and walk with me to the gymnasium. Every day after that we walk together and when we are home we write notes.

One day my mother come into the room and catch me sending notes. She is very angry and give me the good licking which I never forget.

So I write a note to the boy and tell him all is discovered and I can never, never see him again. He say he cannot live

AROUND THE WORLD

George Bancroft talks about that came up from the sea things moulded him into

GEORGE BANCROFT sat in his dressing room over on the Paramount lot, reading a fan letter. But it was not just an ordinary fan letter, for it began: "I don't suppose you remember me—"

The letter, as a whole, was very sweet. Very much what the fan letter should be. But that first line—it seemed to touch a tender chord in the makeup of this man.

It took him back, years and years, to the time when he was playing a black-faced comedian and he was in love! Oh, very, very much in love with a little four-year-old girl. A little girl with ruffles and curls and dimples and all those things that went to make up little girls of long, long ago.

And in fancy she again climbed upon his knee and covered his black face with tender baby kisses and whispered in his ear, "I love you, Uncle Georgie." Then, since this is a real life story and not a fairy tale, she drifted out of his life as little girls of long, long ago were prone to do. Whether or not in all those years she ever thought of him, he never knew. She didn't tell him so, but Uncle Georgie never, never forgot the little girl whose devotion he so cherished.

In spite of his gigantic stature and broad features, there is nothing of the brute about George Bancroft. His years in the navy changed him from a scrawny, undersized stripling to an iron man with the constitution of an ox.

George Bancroft's excellent characterization of the master gunner in Old Ironsides was the result of his years of training in the navy.

TO STARDOM

By HARMONY HAYNES

fighting, the stage, and ships —and tells how these three the man he is today.

Three and a half times Bancroft has circled the globe, chasing rainbows, seeking adventure upon the Seven Seas.

AND she thinks I might not remember her," he said aloud, more to himself than to me. "As if I could forget her. My friends were not so numerous in those days that I could afford to forget one."

The blue eyes became a shade deeper and were ever so much more tender as in memory he slowly retraced the span of years.

There were three things that made a deep impression on the tousle-headed George Bancroft, when, as a boy, he played in the streets of Philadelphia. Three things that wove themselves somehow into his destiny. They were fighting, the stage, and the ships that came up the Delaware River like ghosts from the sea. Again and again they recur in his life, like overtones in a symphony.

"When I fight in my pictures," he said, "there is no faking. I sock and I get socked. I pick men who can take punches and get back as good as I give them. I can do this because I learned it in the hard, bitter school of life long ago.

"I was a puny kid, the smallest in the neighborhood. They all used to pick on me and I'd take it. My pal was a young pug who used to pound me to a pulp—regularly, as a pastime. But I idolized him.

ONE day I was standing in front of my house on roller skates. He hit me and knocked me flat. My father saw it. He was a quiet man. He called me over and whispered to me, 'Georgie,' he said, 'you go over now and give that kid the lacing of his life, or I'll give you the lacing of your life.' I was more afraid of my father than I was of him, so I gave him the lacing of his life. After that I fought every kid in town. I learned to defend myself.

Bancroft's work with Betty Compson in The Docks of New York presaged the brilliant future that has since been his. George says: "People won't stand for faking. They want the real stuff. And I give it to them."

"I needed all I knew about fighting when I went into the navy.

"The service was full of roughnecks in those days. At first they battered my poor old nose all over my face. But I learned. I learned to wear 'em down. I learned that it hurts a fighter more to miss than to land a blow. In the end, I licked everything in the navy. It's come in handy, too, because in the kind of parts I play, people won't stand for faking. They want the real stuff. And I give it to them."

Then, the sea. In his early teens, Bancroft, lying about his age, left the pleasant comforts of his home to run away and join the navy. He doesn't know why he did it. He had no wanderlust, no craving for adventure, but he went.

"I'll never forget the nightmare of those first few days," he said, "wak-

SO THIS IS

By ANNE HOWE

Every day is Father's Day to Mildred Gloria Lloyd, daughter of Harold Lloyd, comedy king. Little Mildred is offering her daddy, as a token of affection, a bunch of roses which she has just picked in her garden. Her playground is said to be a Utopian fairyland, so why shouldn't little Miss Lloyd be grateful?

GLORIA SWANSON'S next and as yet unnamed picture should be a success. They are shooting the scenes in five rooms at once. Ten cameras, five recording boxes—a real advance for sound pictures, if we're any judges from standing and watching this unusual procedure.

And work! I tell you Gloria went to work at eleven o'clock one morning and didn't quit until four the next. She was back on the set by ten o'clock. It's an ultra-modern story and Gloria is leaving no stone unturned to add her name to the long list of those who have come back in the talkies.

Speaking of Gloria, there seems to be some misunderstanding. She is still making pictures for United Artists, but she's shooting them at Pathé, under the protecting eye of Joseph Kennedy. Her rental at Pathé is said to be less than at United Artists.

Smaller than New Currency

CLARA BOW is very proud of the paper twenty-five-cent piece in United States money that found its way back to its native country from Lisbon, Portugal. It came to Clara as payment for a photograph of herself.

Old Sol gets a break as Clara Bow encourages him to give her a sun-tan in her backless suit.

The old piece of money is of the series of 1874.

Wal, I Declare!

INA CLAIRE autographed a picture the other day. She signed her name Ina Claire Gilbert. When asked if she intended to adopt the new family name professionally she said, "No, I just wanted to see how it looked autographed on a picture."

Go-Getting Girlies

ALL cities have their confidence games, but Director Monte Brice, responsible, you will remember, for the Beery-Hatton mirth-getters, ran into a new one the other day on Wilshire boulevard when two girls pushed him up to the curb by adroit manipulation of their auto.

"Where have you been?" Blondie hollered. Brice got out and went over to them. He could not remember where he had had the pleasure of meeting them, so he merely said, "Hello, how are you?"

"I'll bet you don't remember us!"

"Oh, I do!" After all, gentlemen don't contradict women.

"Are you living at the same place?" Blondie put all of the questions.

"Sure. Why don't you come out?"

"Now?—Oh, now, you come up to our apartment instead. We'll stop and get some———" (We leave out the beverage in deference to Federal officers.) It was close to the Ambassador, so Brice left his auto at the hotel and jumped in with the ladies. They stopped at an apartment house. "I'll go in and get it here" Blondie suggested. Brice insisted upon footing the bill and gave her $14.

"What about ginger ale?" piped up the brunette sister. Brice handed over another $2. The girl went in and returned in a few minutes with her coat bulging with what had every hint of being a bottle. A few blocks down the street Blondie cried out, "Oh, I forgot the ginger ale! Here's a drug store. Would you mind very much getting out and buying it?"

Charles Chaplin, Jr., puts a loving and chubby hand on his little brother Sydney's shoulder as they face the cameraman together. Charlie, Jr., is a rowdy little fellow, who always wants to be playing some lively game, while little Sydney would rather listen to his dad play the organ or sit quietly in a corner and look at pictures in a book.

Brice went in, bought six bottles, came out to find the car and the girls missing. Ashamed to return the ginger ale, he walked the five miles back to the Ambassador, $16 and six blisters wiser. He had bought new shoes that morning.

Suiting the Action

WESLEY RUGGLES was directing three hundred extras in a café set during the filming of Street Girl. He just couldn't seem to get the action he wanted from his place near the camera. Evening clothes were compulsory in the scene; so Ruggles, all decked out in the directorial golf knickers, borrowed a tuxedo and moved into the foreground, becoming an extra as well as a director.

Line is Busy

CECIL DE MILLE called up his wife and four-year-old son in Paris the other noon. It was eight o'clock, evening, in the French capital.

So This is Hollywood

Finally, Mrs. C. B. said something about being sorry but she "had to go now."

"Where?" was the husbandly answer.

"Oh, that would be telling," and there was a click of the receiver.

Therefore the director maintains that international calls should be made only for business!

Belling the Snack

KAY JOHNSON, slender leading lady imported from Broadway by Cecil De Mille for Dynamite, has a new nickname: Languid Lizz. All because she flops herself in one chair and props her feet in another and lies indolently at ease between scenes and during sequences in which she is not working.

The only thing which will bring her to life is the lay-off call for luncheon. And the fake calls she received during that picture! She started six times in one day for the lunch room only to be recalled with guffaws of laughter.

In Character

BELLE BENNETT'S son, Teddy, had just come from the theater where he had witnessed the opening of his mother's new play.

A friend asked, "Did you like your mother's performance?"

"Oh, yes," said Teddy, "she's more natural when she's acting."

Miss Griffith Introduces—

CORINNE GRIFFITH has returned from Europe with several trunks of new clothes and plans for a château which she is purchasing in Barbizon, a suburb of Paris. Since she is to make only two pictures a year she plans to spend from two to four months in her new possession.

Among her clothes is a nifty tennis costume of sweater and skirt with one button. You press the button at the end of the match and the entire dress drops to the ground. Shocking? Not in the least! Beneath is a bathing suit, all ready for the swimming pool.

Then there's another clever beach contraption. A huge pocketbook which has a bathing suit compartment, a pocket for cosmetics and a nifty beach umbrella.

Now You See It, Now You Don't

MR. JAMES CRUZE was directing Mr. Eric Von Stroheim in The Great Gabbo.

"Now, Von, you will have to put the whole handkerchief in your mouth."

Mr. Von Stroheim looked at the handkerchief, then asked, "Where was it before?"

Shades of Valentino

A PART of the East Indian costume for George Arliss, making the Vitaphone version of The Green Goddess, was a curved sword in a jewelled scabbard. It was rented from a Los Angeles costume house.

Lon Chaney takes a hand in this ticklish bit of makeup for the Mississippi flood sequence in his picture, Thunder Chaney is applying the disguise to James Murray.

Dorothy Gulliver, Universal leading lady, exposes a new wrinkle in ironing as she presses her skirt after being caught in the rain.

Accidental examination of the sword revealed a name thereon—the name of the master lover of the screen—Valentino. It had once been his sword.

Extras' Theme Song: Eucalyptus

IN FILMING Hearts in Exile, six extras, portraying Siberian exiles, had to be completely shorn of their locks in the action of the scene.

But the scene did not suit director Michael Curtiz. Six more victims had to be shorn, and six more and six more, until the scene was retaken six times and when at last the director called "cut," every extra on the lot ran into hiding.

Lupe Goes on Record

LUPE VELEZ is so naïve and natural in her self-admiration that you can never blame her or call her conceited. She was going to play us the first record she has made for the Victrola company and she hunted for a new needle.

"I change the needle only for my own songs. Anything else, no matter how grand, can have any old needle. But songs sung by Lupe, never!"

It's mighty good, by the way, and it has netted her $1,000 and 3 per cent royalties. And believe me, there won't be a person left in Hollywood, soon, who hasn't at least one of those records whether they have a victrola or not. For Lupe is busy being a good salesman so that the 3 per cent will amount to something. She has contracted to make twelve a year at the same profit.

Stars for the Screechies

IRVING WILLAT, director and husband of Billie Dove, was testing the voices of four monkeys for his picture, Isles of Lost Ships. He was attempting to tone down their screeching chatter. Some visitors stepped inside the outer door of the sound stage, paused, listened to the chattering.

"My goodness!" They turned to their escort. "I thought that voices for the talkies must be soft and lovely. I thought everyone in Hollywood was trying to lower the pitch of his voice. Just listen to that. That just proves how much you can believe of these publicity stories."

How Time Does Fly!

FRANK TUTTLE, the director, also does pastel portraits. Not long ago he brought one to the studio with him. In the lower right-hand corner was his name and the date, '29.

William Powell was loud in his praise of the director's work.

"But," said Bill, "you can't fool me, you big cluck. You're more than 29!"

Snicker Over Knickers

AN ACQUAINTANCE wired Gary Cooper that he was en route to Hollywood and would try to find Gary when he arrived.

Gary telegraphed back: "It will be a cinch. I'm the only fellow in Hollywood wearing long pants."

This looks like one from the family album, but it isn't; although their names are Anita Page and Paul Page, they're not related.

Ike and "Mike", but they don't look alike. Cliff Edwards, known as Ukulele Ike, playing in M-G-M's College Days, croons his ballads into a dressed-up microphone.

So This is Hollywood

A Triumph Over Difficulties

"Fair was she to behold.
Black were her eyes like the berry that grows on the thorn by the wayside,
Black, yet how softly they gleamed beneath the brown shade of her tresses."

SO WROTE Henry Wadsworth Longfellow in describing his heroine Evangeline.

Dolores Del Rio, a new Dolores, gentle and sweet, with heartbreak in her eyes, is Evangeline, in United Artists' current production. The old-time fire and hoydenish spirit of the Mexican beauty has left her; in its place is a sweet serenity, born of sorrow and tribulations.

Even during the filming of the picture, trouble lurked on the set. Rain, rain, rain. Torrents of it, beating down, blown in furious gusts of icy winds from a stormy "Pacific" ocean. Marooned on location near Carmel, California, the whole company shivered through a week of cold and sleety rain.

When Edwin Carewe broke his foot, he ordered crutches and a wheel-chair and went right on directing Evangeline. Dolores Del Rio and Donald Reed are on the set watching him handle a scene.

But there were lucky omens, too —if you believe in any such thing as luck or omens. Longfellow's grand-nephew was assistant manager of the hotel in Santa Cruz, where the filming was begun. He had inherited all the poet's heirlooms and aided the first steps in production to go along smoothly. Later, however, Edwin Carewe, the director, rejoiced when obstacles bobbed up. "You know," he stated, "we have a superstition in pictures that a good beginning means a bad production."

Rushes of beautiful waterfall scenes turned out too dark to be used, whole weeks of work were scrapped, 33 members of the company suffered from poison oak, Roland Drew suffered from a boil on his cheek, but the production went on. Some of the greatest moments of his passionate love scene with Dolores were done between intervals of Roland's seasickness.

Latest rumors suggest that Roland Drew's fervor in his love scenes with Dolores was not all acting. Drew is often seen escorting her about Hollywood and there exists the suspicion that Cupid may be in the offing.

Fur coats and galoshes were pressed into service, little muddy rivers covered the ground—a herd of cows stampeded instead of meandered—and as a final misfortune, Director Carewe fell off a platform, broke his foot and had to direct the rest of the picture from a wheel chair.

Judging from the trials and tribulations experienced by the company engaged in making Evangeline, the film version of Longfellow's masterpiece should prove a labor enriched by misfortune and sorrow—a labor which should rightfully enjoy a place beside the immortal poem itself.

"Looks like gas is going up," says the service station man to Gwen Lee, as the M-G-M beauty taxies up to have her ship's tank filled.

A Modern Cinderella

Norma Shearer's "prince" came as unexpectedly into her life as Prince Charming appeared to Cinderella in the fairy tale—only Norma used 20th century aggressiveness and modern feminine wiles to wear the glass slippers and become Mrs. Irving Thalberg.

By RUTH BIERY

Filmdom's modern Cinderella perches herself atop her garden wall and listens to the birds pour out their golden song.

TO SELL the family piano, go into the movies, become a big star, marry a rich producer and live happily ever after, is, I suppose, the wish of every modern Cinderella. Yet I know of only one girl who has done it—Norma Shearer.

I've always wanted the true story of Norma, because, like the rest of the world, I appreciate real fairy stories. And if ever a girl had one—but just try and get it!

Right here I'm going to make a confession. This is the third time I've written this story. Today was the third time I interviewed Norma for the editor of SCREEN SECRETS. Twice, he sent back the manuscript with the instructions, "We want more data. We want the true romance of Miss Shearer and Irving Thalberg." Twice I've been sent back to that simple dressing room, No. 6, on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot, to see if the girl who sat on the witness chair and recited the lurid details of her reel life as a kept woman in The Trial of Mary Dugan wouldn't reveal the intimacies of her real life as a married woman.

"I've just got to have it, Norma—"

[Turn to page 92]

This is not a "whoopee" combination, but a soundly, intelligent, happily married couple—Norma Shearer and her producer-husband, Irving Thalberg.

Inferiority Complex—

Our old friend, the inferiority complex, is back again as the ogre barring the way to success in the talkies—the only way to beat the microphone is to snub it.

By ALVA LANGDON

Laura La Plante manifests only the coolest nonchalance toward the dread microphone—otherwise she wouldn't have a chance to get near it at all.

Victor Nordlinger, Universal casting director who describes the problem of inferiority complexes under the microphone, with Myrna Kennedy, whose "sound personality" is just what he's looking for.

MERNA KENNEDY walked on the set, said "good morning" to the director, and casually glanced at the cylindrical mike overhanging the sound-proof camera-box. And in the casualness of her glance was the reason for her being there.

Laura La Plante, emerging from her dressing room and entering her set, also said "good morning" to the director. There was a mike on her set, too, but she did not even glance at it. And that, also, was the reason for her being there.

Neither star was at all concerned about the mike—symbolical of the talkies. Neither was seized with stage-fright at the sight of it being there. To talk naturally into that mike was as easy for them as to act naturally in front of the camera—otherwise, neither of them would have been there.

They have, in common with all other successful talkie players, an elusive quality which Victor Nordlinger, these many years casting director at Universal, naïvely and correctly calls "sound poise." Sound poise, nowadays, is a mighty essential thing in an actor or an actress—and a mighty essential thing for a casting director to recognize. Otherwise, from now on, he won't be there, either.

MODESTY has no virtue in the movies. In other words, the shrinking violet has no charm to captivate the hearts of photoplay audiences—and particularly is this true now that the talkies have come, made themselves heard, and conquered the screen.

Such is the opinion vouchsafed by no less an authority than Victor Nordlinger, now a production supervisor, who says further that the advent of sound pictures, in addition to literally revolutionizing the theory of casting, raises a completely insurmountable barrier between, for instance, two players who might be equally desirable for the same part in a silent picture.

"There is an indefinable something in a sound picture," he said, "which, while being quite separate and distinct from the voice itself, nevertheless is a sound personality. Two players might move through a sound scene without uttering a word, yet one of them might be obviously at ease in the part, the other obviously inadequate. The difference between two such players, even though one might be just as outstanding as the other in a silent film, is simply what I call sound poise."

This "sound poise," as Mr. Nordlinger explains it, is nothing more nor less than the mental attitude of a player toward sound pictures. Some stars, he said, take as naturally to the talkies as a duck to water, even though they never have had any legitimate stage experience; others, who may have just as good voices for sound reproduction, just as naturally wilt mentally every time they see a microphone, and the recorded result is an enfeebled squeak.

IT ALL comes right down to the old inferiority complex," said Nordlinger. "A good player who has one of them, even though he or she may have been able to hide it successfully in silent pictures, has absolutely no chance in the talkies. They are not sure of themselves, and their mental inferiority inevitably registers not only in their voices but in their screen poise."

Glenn Tyron and Merna Kennedy—these two brilliant players had never made a sound picture prior to Broadway, but they were selected for featured rôles in that picture because they had "sound poise."

Colleen Moore was one of the first stars to sense the portentous change when the talkies came into being. She immediately studied voice training, with the result that her talking pictures have made her more popular than ever.

WHEN talking pictures burst upon the world the prophets had a heyday. Optimists and pessimists gave free rein to their temperaments. On the whole the optimists have had the best of it so far. They predicted that synchronized pictures had come to stay, and they have stayed—and how!

The optimists also said—though with some hesitation—that most of the stars of the old silent pictures would survive the Hollywood revolution. A good many people have been surprised to see this prophecy, too, come true. Up to the present time most of the outstanding triumphs on the synchronized screen have been scored by players who had already made high reputations when unified sight-and-sound was no more than a dream and the subject of long and heart-breaking and apparently futile experimentation.

Of course, Al Jolson in The Jazz Singer, achieved the first smashing victory, which woke everybody up. That was the real beginning of the revolution; the talking pictures that had gone before were merely experiments, and very timid and hesitant ones at that.

Besides Jolson, such prominent stage players as Jeanne Eagels, Chester Morris, Ann Harding, Ruth Chatterton and Eddie Dowling, have recently won new laurels in the talkies, but their cases are really quite exceptional. Where one such success has come about, there have been a dozen failures.

THE plain and very remarkable fact is that the odds are heavily against any stage star who enters the sight-and-sound studios with the expectation of repeating his Broadway triumphs, either artistically or commercially.

Just the same, for a time the Hollywood favorites of the silent screen were worried; and, as things looked then, they had reason to be. Synchronization rose suddenly like a great storm and darkened the smiling sky of their fame and fortune. Those who had had stage experience in the past were not perturbed; whatever happened, they were safe enough, and some of them anticipated new opportunities which have duly come and been utilized to high advantage.

One of the first screen stars to sense the portentous changes was Colleen Moore, who told it herself not long ago to the writer.

For quite a while, it seems, Colleen thought very little about the talking pictures. Maybe they would come into favor and maybe they wouldn't, but those she had seen had failed to give her any reason for alarm. And then, with her husband, John McCormick, she saw The Jazz Singer.

[Turn to page 93]

Dorothy Mackaill placed herself in the hands of Laura Hope Crewes to have her English accent ironed out.

Billie Dove was a Follies beauty before she went into the movies, and as such, she had very little to say. Her natural talent as an impersonator stood her in good stead, however, and she scored a tremendous hit in her first talkie, Careers.

Happy? Why shouldn't she be? "Gee, it's great to be in love!" says Clara.

"She's the sweetest girl I've ever known," says Harry Richman whom Clara plans to marry this fall.

Clara Bow Says Yes!

Will the engagement of the "It" girl, whose romances have been the talk of Hollywood, really "take" this time?

By BOB MOAK

CLARA BOW'S whole life has been one big, colorful romance right up to the moment that she plunged madly into love. Then—

She lay seriously ill in her Beverly Hills home one afternoon recently. Seated at her side, silently holding her hand, was Harry Richman, Broadway musical comedy favorite, now starring in the films. Three physicians entered the room for consultation over the Princess of IT.

"We shall have to ask you to leave," said one of the medicos, turning to Richman.

"But doctor, this is my fiancé!" spoke up Clara.

Clara Bow, Cinderella of the celluloid, had announced her engagement! Could the little red-head's greatest moment have been more prosaic?

Early this fall, Clara, a girl of many affairs of the heart, will walk to the altar with the rich and popular Harry Richman, star of George White's Scandals, owner of four New York night clubs, maker of phonographic records which have set sales marks and whose income is reputed to be in excess of $20,000 a week. He is now completing his first picture, The Song of Broadway.

The date for the wedding cannot be fixed until both have finished their current productions.

"There must be no bally-hoo attached to our marriage," said Clara. "We shall take the world into our confidence only after the knot has been tied."

WHEN Clara went to New York seven months ago, she was a guest at a small party given at the Club Richman. There she was introduced to Harry.

Night after night, from then until the close of her stay in the East, they were seen together. Clara returned home, a very changed person.

No longer was she the "whoopee girl" of Hollywood. When she went out, it was not with one of the old "flames" or even a new one. Her constant escort was her young cousin.

The three thousand miles that separated Clara and Harry meant little to them. They bridged the distance with semi-weekly telephone chats and by daily air-mail letters.

Then Richman came to California to work for United Artists. Clara was at the train to welcome him.

Every minute they could be away from work found them together at Clara's home, at the beaches, the theaters or the Montmartre.

When these three foreign visitors came to Hollywood, they were met by a bevy of the film capital's royal hostesses. In this group, left to right, are: Jane Winton, Juan Toreno, Ona Wilson Brown, Rene Cordona, Camilla Horn, Manuel Sotres and Rita Carewe.

PEACH and apple blossoms, pink roses and golden butterflies transformed the Breakfast Club into a fragrant garden for Peggy Hamilton's dinner-dance, given in honor of Prince Louis Ferdinand of Prussia.

Favors were engraved booklets with a picture of the Prince and a list of the guests, so you will not be surprised to learn that the royal scion spent his entire evening autographing these.

N. B. Fashion note: The prince wore a white tie with his tuxedo, the other males favoring black.

Billy Joy was master of ceremonies during the evening's entertainment, which comprised the efforts of several headliners—Gus Edwards, the Duncan Sisters, Ethel Jenks and two clever children. Billy Joy also announced the "blind date" dance, which was one of the high spots. Each man's name was placed on the inside of a large roll of ribbon and tied to a tall pole in the center of the room; each girl shut her eyes and chose a ribbon, unwinding it to the end, where the name of her "blind date" was revealed.

Among the hundred or more merrymakers were the Jean Hersholts, Pat O'Malleys, Tod Brownings, Don Alvarados, Fred Windemeres (Belle Bennett), Irvin Willats (Billie Dove), Edmund Lowes (Lilyan Tashman), Misses Lupe Velez, Claire Windsor, Julia Faye, Priscilla Dean, Ruth Taylor, Mary McAllister, Dorothy Mackaill, Jeanette Loff, Vera Reynolds, and Messrs. Ivan Lebedeff, Art Goebel, Rene Cordona, Juan Toreno, Jose Crespo, Bob Ellis and Buddy Rogers.

Wish you could have seen the sumptuous, sun-burned backs of Lilyan Tashman and Billie Dove!

Cecil De Mille Tells

David Wark Griffith, veteran director, visits his friend De Mille and tarries a while to see how "the maker of stars" goes about his process on the set.

Making stars out of contrasted types, making the actor bring out his own, true personality, is the spark which lights the way to directorial success. Cecil B. De Mille, "the maker of stars", has coached perhaps one-third of all the screen's vast multitude of players. No two directors use the same method; no one director uses the same technique for any two people. Cecil B. De Mille tells SCREEN SECRETS readers how he supplies direction as fuel to the fire of the stars' genius.

As told to Ruth Biery

By CECIL B. De MILLE

THE general principle of directing is to give the artists an opportunity to bring out what is in themselves rather than putting in them what is in yourself. That to me is the secret of making a star. How to make them bring themselves out is the knack of a director, the central point of his genius. No two directors use the same method; no one director uses the same technique for any two people."

Thus does Cecil De Mille, "the maker of stars", put into a nutshell his secrets of successful directing. Gloria Swanson, Bebe Daniels, Leatrice Joy, Agnes Ayres, Wallace Reid, Jacqueline Logan, William Boyd—all owe their big opportunity to him. Nor is it an extravagance to say that one-third of the screen actresses and actors have at one time or another fallen under his tutelage in at least one picture.

"The average persons who come to you are not amateurs. They have had two or three years of training. But when they get their big opportunity, when a big director (in the mental, not the avoirdupois sense) takes an interest and casts them in a production, mental shells are prone to form. They are seized with inferiority or superiority complexes. Leatrice Joy is an example of the one and Agnes Ayres of the other. Then some method must be devised to crack those shells, to destroy the guards which they have unwittingly erected around them.

"There are two types of players: Those who receive direction as an engine receives fuel; those who receive direction as a necessary evil. The first are the great artists. The second are the lesser ones who must rely solely upon their own interpretations. They have no true art, which is why it is difficult for them to receive direction.

GLORIA SWANSON! For her there was never any breaking of a shell. She is the perfect mold into which you can pour any emotion and be certain of its shaping. Elliott Dexter is another. The only two examples of perfect molds, I should say, without training.

"Mary Pickford, Thomas Meighan, Bebe Daniels and Leatrice Joy are all delightful artists to direct. All understand easily what the director is trying to do."

WITH Leatrice Joy, De Mille had one of his most difficult jobs of "cracking." She was willing, but cold; bound by a mental shell of inferiority. He had chosen her for Manslaughter; he was determined to see her successful. He used all his usual methods upon the set — fury, sarcasm, gentleness, every weapon at the command of a director. Finally, he sent for her to come to his office. He ordered her to bring her brother with her. As she entered the door he said, "I'm sorry but you are not making a success in this picture. I am going to have another girl replace you."

"But Mr. De Mille, you couldn't do that! You couldn't. It will ruin my career, I will never get another—"

"It is necessary. You are cold—"

She was on her knees before him. Sobs racked her being. Her hands groped for his. She pleaded, "You can't; you can't—"

"So you do feel emotions? You are crying. You have feeling. That is what I want from you in pictures. If you will give me this—"

Since De Mille cracked Leatrice Joy's shell of inferiority, she has developed into one of the most charming and capable actresses in the motion picture business. Miss Joy owes this great director much for his sound guidance in her rise to stardom.

Note that he classes her in the list with Mary Pickford, Wally Reid and Bebe Daniels. From that moment, he says, she fell into that group which takes direction as an engine takes fuel—a great artiste!

Kay Johnson and Julia Faye giving aero-wheel racing a whirl, under the helpful hand of their director Cecil B. De Mille, in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's forthcoming production Dynamite.

DE MILLE is noted for ferocity, losing his temper; lashing his subjects into submission. You hear weird tales in Hollywood of things he has done under the spell of bad temper. I asked Mr. De Mille point blank about it.

"My ferocity is always studied ferocity. When something really makes me angry —I get extremely quiet. Anger is no time for words! I use a carefully studied lash. Something of the sort is necessary in almost every production to steady an actor before a big scene. Yes, I have used it on Bebe Daniels. She was an awkward, untutored girl when she came to me. She slumped across a room; she was round shouldered. It was necessary to break her shell, to tear something from her eyes so she could see artistically. There are only two artists in the business on which I have never used this method: Gloria and Elliott Dexter."

De Mille was directing Monte Blue in

Vamping as is Vamping!

Mary Duncan believes that screen vampires should be soft, tender and yielding, awakening the protective instinct in man; her ambition is to play the role of Manon Lescault—and it may come true!

By
EDWARD R. SAMMIS

Mary Duncan's hands are said to be the most beautiful on stage or screen. How eloquent they are in this scene with Warner Baxter!

It is fatal to look into Mary Duncan's eyes—as fatal as to listen to the song of the Lorelei.

Dear Mr. Fox:
Please, please, let Mary Duncan play the kind of vampire rôles she wants to play. Amen.
P. S. And while you are at it, you might send me a Rolls-Royce for Christmas—also a gas book.

YOU can't help feeling that way about William Fox. You feel that he could do almost anything he wanted. Look at the way he buys every lot that he likes and builds a theater on it. And he really should want to let Mary Duncan have her wish.

You can't help feeling that way about Mary, either. You want her to have everything she wants. She affects you that way. And she does want so badly to play her own particular kind of vamp parts.

Mary told me about it quite eloquently, seated in her dressing room, swathed in sea-green silks, but I was entirely convinced before she started her argument. That's the insidious thing about Mary. If she had gone to the window, looked out upon the sunny California landscape and said, "Dear me, look how it's snowing!" I would doubtless have replied with perfect conviction, "Yes, quite so, and I came away without my earmuffs."

Her hands have a way of illustrating her meanings; those exquisite, tapering hands, perhaps the most beautiful on stage or screen. Perhaps she didn't use words at all. In one hand she

Fan Letters Saved Me!

Mary Brian stood at the crossroads of her motion picture career, uncertain, a bit afraid; fan letters flocked in by the thousands—and Mary was saved for her movie audiences the world over!

By ANNE HOWE

"The greatest news I ever heard was Mr. Lasky's telephone message, telling me I had been chosen to play Wendy in Peter Pan," Miss Brian declares.

WHEN the talkies came into being, I stood at the crossroads of my motion picture career. My contract with Lasky's had come to mean very little. I was being loaned to all the other studios and I was beginning to feel afraid that perhaps it was all over for me.

"Then a very encouraging thing happened. Fans the country over who were interested in my career suddenly fairly inundated me with cheery letters—and so they saved me!"

Mary Brian held back the curtain and looked out her window. She flicked a tear off her cheek and there was a serious look of reminiscence in her eyes.

"My father died when I was a tiny baby. He didn't leave Mother much money, so it was necessary that she support herself and me by her own efforts. She was an artist, but in Corsicana, Texas, where I was born, there was little demand for her work. So we moved to Dallas, and Mother found plenty to do.

"I used to watch her bending over her sketches. I knew she was tired, that her arms often ached, and I would say, 'When I am big, I'll take care of you, Mother.'

"Mother would laugh, pat my head and call me 'Little Dreamer.' I suppose I was, but I lived and planned only for the day when my dreams would come true."

MOTHER wanted me to become an artist. I wanted to please her, but there was no money for lessons in drawing. I made the best of what the public schools offered. I could sketch fairly well, but I didn't want to be an artist. I wanted to be a motion picture actress. I never wanted to be anything else. It was funny about my plans and dreams—they never changed. My little cousins used to change their ambitions every day or so. If a circus came to town, they wanted to be bareback riders, if a show came to town, they wanted to be on the stage, and so on. I would say to them, 'You can be what you want, but I am going to be a motion picture actress.'

"I talked movies, lived movies and planned movies until the summer I was sixteen. That summer she said, 'Well, Little Dreamer, we'll go to Hollywood and try it out. Maybe you are right. We shall see. They say if you want a thing badly enough, it will come to you. If you don't make good, we will have to return and you must finish school, forget movies forever and learn something useful.'

"I was so sure I could make good once I got to Hollywood that I never hesitated a moment. We gathered the few clothes we had together and what little money we had

CINEMA SLANTS

By Robert E. Sherwood

Robert E. Sherwood

A Thorough understanding of the motion picture art, born of a background of constant observation, gives Robert E. Sherwood, America's foremost movie critic, his singular ability to present the cinema situation from a distinctly constructive angle. He has observed the workings of the industry from its birth to the present day. His crisp discussion, enlivened by a sparkling vein of humor, is a regular monthly feature in SCREEN SECRETS.

Words and Music

WE'VE seen a great many plays with music on the audible screen—The Singing Fool, The Broadway Melody, Close Harmony, etc. We've seen several out-and-out musical comedies—such as The Desert Song, The Cocoanuts, Rio Rita, and Hit the Deck. We have seen or are about to see some mammoth musical revues—Fox Movietone Follies, Radio Revels, and M-G-M's The Hollywood Revue of 1929.

Now we're to be treated to some celluloid grand opera, and before it arrives I should like to record the guess that it will be terrible. Not that I object to grand opera, as such—but I have sat through some Vitaphone and Movietone short subjects of opera stars, including Marion Talley, Giovanni Martinelli and Titta Ruffo, and while their voices are magnificent, their acting is inexpressibly ham. And ham acting is a great deal more offensive in a movie close-up than it is in the vast interior of the Metropolitan Opera House.

Perhaps they will make "ghost" grand operas—with Alice White acting the part and Mme. Schumann-Heink singing it. I'm afraid that wouldn't be so good, either.

Those Rough Reporters

GENTLEMEN of the Press wasn't, in my estimation, any great shakes as a picture, but it did serve to demonstrate that conversation on the screen can be commendably rough and naturalistic. There were several remarks in that picture which could never have been printed as sub-titles of a silent film.

Another newspaper play, The Front Page (and what a play!) is soon to be reproduced in talkie form—and I can't wait to see and HEAR it.

The Front Page is a grand melodrama, and it contains the lowest and rowdiest profanity and obscenity that has been heard on any stage since the bad old days of the Restoration period.

It is unthinkable that all or even a large part of this uncouth talk will be recorded on the sensitive movietone. It would burn out the vacuum tubes, short circuit the magnetic amplifiers and cause the legislatures of thirty-six states to put through another Constitutional amendment providing for strict motion picture censorship.

"Bits"

ONE of the redeeming features of the talkies is that they give the character actor a better chance than he has ever had before.

In former times (the star system being what it was) it was highly unwise for the small-part actor to be too good. The star liked to be the only goldfish in the bowl, and the lesser fry were commanded to keep themselves hidden down among the seaweeds.

Dialect Story

THE talkies remind me of the story of a peddler down in the Hester Street district of New York. He was propelling his traveling delicatessen along the pavement, calling his wares in a loud, sing-song tone of voice, when Mrs. Yifnif thrust her head from an upper window and addressed him as follows: "Vill you plizz come beck dees hefternoon and bringk me some salami wit' leever-woist wit'? . . . ."

"Theesa afternoon I can no come back," interrupted the peddler.

"Vy not?" asked Mrs. Yifnif.

"Because theesa afternoon," was the reply, "I gotta take-a da test on da Vitaphone!"

the Lives of the Stars

No mauve decade, this, but a span of flaming dates; here is a history of Hollywood's high lights in an amazing calendar actually told by the stars to Dorothy Spensley.

JANUARY 1, 1926—John Mack Brown scores a touchdown for Alabama against Washington at the Pasadena Rose Bowl game and wins his way into pictures.

January 1, 1929—Joe Cobb, aged eleven, of Our Gang, wins his first bet of fifty cents when Georgia Tech takes the game at the Pasadena Rose Bowl, and spends it all on ice cream cones.

January 1, 1926—John Mack Brown, M-G-M featured player, keeps fit between scenes by exercising with Flash, the wonder dog.

April 26, 1904—Dorothy Sebastian first shows her pretty knees to the world, in Birmingham, Alabama.

January 7, 1929—Sally Blane becomes a Wampas Baby Star and feels better about it because sister Loretta Young is likewise honored.

January 12, 1929—Garfield Leon, on a winning Coast polo team, rides to receive the cup from Lilyan Tashman's hands, reins in left hand, cap gallantly doffed in right, feels the girths slip and lands on his back squarely in front of the reviewing stand. Mervyn LeRoy, present, roars with laughter and signs him to a small part in Alice White's Hot Stuff.

January 18, 1917—Buster Keaton journeys out to watch Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle make a two-reel comedy called The Butcher Boy while the Keatons are in Los Angeles on a vaudeville tour and stays to become the films' "frozen pan" comedian.

January 20, 1926—Doris Hill, dancing in a Metropolitan Theater prologue in Los Angeles, is observed by Bob Hopkins of Warner Brothers, and signed for the feminine lead in The Better 'Ole, opposite Syd Chaplin.

February 1, 1926—May McAvoy receives word from Louis B. Mayer to go to Rome and play Esther in Ben Hur.

February 4, 1926—Dolores Del Rio is presented as a Wampas Baby Star and for the first time feels herself a part of Hollywood and its motion picture colony.

February 6, 1918—Enid Bennett says "Yes" to Fred Niblo.

February 6, 1929—Russell Gleason becomes of age and signs his first motion picture contract for three years under the Pathé banner.

February 9, 1916—Karl Dane arrives on Ellis Island from Denmark.

February 15, 1928—Anita Page convinces Louis B. Mayer that she is entitled to an M-G-M contract, despite the fact that she is a Harry K. Thaw discovery.

February 16, 1929—Ramon Novarro signs the contract that enables him to make an opera debut in Berlin and also make motion pictures in Hollywood.

March 10, 1929—Sheila Fitzmaurice arrives to be the permanent house guest of Diana Kane and her husband, George Fitzmaurice.

March 13, 1929—Ken Maynard becomes a Mason.

January 7, 1929—Sally Blane is chosen as one of the 1929 Wampas Baby Stars, along with her sister, Loretta Young.

January 20, 1926—Doris Hill, dancing at a theater in Los Angeles, is observed by a Warner Brothers scout and signed for the feminine lead in The Better 'Ole.

March 18, 1929—Jetta Goudal wins her suit against Pathé, allowing her the right to be temperamental.

March 20, 1926—Polly Moran signs a five-year contract with M-G-M.

April 16, 1889—Charles Chaplin first becomes acquainted with his mother.

April 25, 1921—Ronald Colman, in his dressing room at the Belasco Theater in New York, receives a note from Henry King, who asks him to go to Italy and play the leading male rôle opposite Lillian Gish in The White Sister.

April 26, 1904—Dorothy Sebastian makes her debut into this weary world at Birmingham, Alabama.

May 1, 1915—George K. Arthur, gassed and blinded in the battle of Ypres, recovers his eyesight.

May 1, 1923—Dorothy Dwan meets Larry Semon and becomes his leading woman, and later his wife.

May 2, 1908—William Bakewell joins the rest of us on earth.

May 3, 1923—Marian Nixon loses her job in the chorus of a traveling show and finds two days' work as an extra at Warners'. Six years later she finds herself at the same studio playing opposite Al Jolson in Little Pal.

May 5, 1921—Mary Philbin is chosen by Eric von Stroheim in Chicago at a beauty contest as the ideal picture type and Carl Laemmle signs her to a contract.

May 8, 1915—Norma Talmadge meets Joseph

CUPID'S BULLETIN

The Ambassador of Love shoots his arrows into Hollywood hearts.

CARL VOLMOELLER, author of the famous stage spectacle, The Miracle, and a writer of note, has been in Hollywood of late and has been very attentive to Dolores Del Rio.

The Mexican film star met Volmoeller when she was traveling abroad last year and she and her mother were entertained at his mansion in Venice.

Langdon to Marry Again

HARRY LANGDON, the comedian whose meteoric rise in motion pictures suffered an abrupt drop about a year ago, has emerged fresh from a divorce with his former wife, Mrs. Rose Langdon, and has signed a notice of intention to marry Mrs. Helen Walton, formerly of Toledo, Ohio.

Langdon and his former wife were divorced last year and the final decree was entered July 3, of this year. The decree was accompanied by a property settlement of $70,000 for Mrs. Langdon and an interest in several recent films which are expected to figure strongly in the comedian's comeback attempt.

Divorce for Kerry?

NORMAN KERRY has been sued for divorce by his wife. Mrs. Kerry's charges were answered by a denial on the part of the screen idol. Kerry is now in New York on a vaudeville tour and the case is being handled by his attorney, Michael A. P. Narlian. The couple were married February 29, 1920. They separated November 11, 1928.

May McAvoy Says "I Do."

MAY McAVOY is now Mrs. Maurice J. Cleary, wife of a Los Angeles banker. The couple were married in the Church of the Good Shepherd at Beverly Hills, the Reverend Father Michael J. Mullins performing the ceremony.

Marian Nixon to Wed

MARIAN NIXON has announced her engagement to Edward Hillman, Jr., prominent Chicagoan. The wedding is scheduled to take place following the completion of Miss Nixon's new picture, Young Nowhere, opposite Richard Barthelmess. This is her second matrimonial venture. Joe Benjamin, lightweight pugilist, is her first husband.

Don Douglas Finds Romance

IT NEVER would do for a prepossessing youth like Don Douglas to come to Hollywood without finding romance.

And seemingly he has found it. He and lovely little Charlotte Merriam, divorced wife of Rex Lease, are seen about together a great deal. Charlotte blushingly denies any engagement, however, but admits she and Don are very good friends.

Stepin Fetches a Bride

STEPIN FETCHIT, negro comedian who rose from the obscurity of a small-time vaudeville act to a $1,000 a week salary as a Fox star, is now a benedict. Dorothy Stevenson, seventeen years old, is the lucky bride. The ceremony was performed in St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church in Los Angeles.

Alice Day's New Interest

SWEET little Alice Day, who once was supposed to have been engaged to Carl Laemmle, Jr., has a brand new romance.

This time it isn't with any one connected with the picture business. The man is a tall, handsome business man, and it is likely that the engagement will be announced around Christmas time. At any rate, well founded rumor has it so.

Prudence in Love

AND that Olive Borden-George O'Brien romance seems still to be very warm. So many younger film stars and starlets think they are more popular with the fans if they postpone their wedding dates, and so, in the meantime, heavy crushes make up for romantic yearnings in our local village.

I Can't Make Whoopee

Lupe Velez, Alice White, Clara Bow and Joan Crawford tell why they can't—or won't—make whoopee in the traditional Hollywood manner.

By HELEN STARR

Making whoopee is part of Alice White's blood, bone and sinew—so much so, that First National officials inserted a "conscience clause" in her contract, making it obligatory for Alice "to ask official forgiveness if she violates the rules of ordinary conduct."

"So-o Big" would aptly describe what kind of hit Clara Bow makes in her current picture, Dangerous Curves. It is a story about circus life and the IT girl uses her rôle to make plenty of spontaneous whoopee.

THERE are people in Hollywood I'd like to kick," confided Lupe Velez with a forward thrust of a bare and shapely leg. "I'd like to wait along the streets and kick them hard when they come by!

"If I feel full of whoopee and talk loud, you can hear me for five blocks. American people do not like that. They wish to think. And in society, I am read minder. I know they tell lie. If I do not like someone, I would rather say, 'I hate you and you hate me and that's O. K.' "

You wouldn't think she hailed from a Mexican village that gloried in the merit of having built 300 churches for its 5,000 inhabitants.

Lupe was carrying around a lot of black and blue spots on her active legs. She wore no socks. And there were scratches, too. And mosquito bites. I asked her about the collections. Even in Chicago when snow was on the ground, I had heard that Lupe wore no stockings.

"Somewhere," she explained, "I must be free to run and do as I please. In Hollywood, they are always saying, 'Lupe, be dignified!' And so at home, I can kick and scream and be as free as I please."

SHE lives in a house in wooded, hilly Laurel Canyon, just west of Hollywood, with one of her three sisters, her brother-in-law and her cousin.

"The black and blue comes when I hit furniture running after my sister with water to tease her. The scratches from hunting in the mountains at Gary's ranch. You know Mr. Cooper—Gary? But my house is not large enough to run all I please. The servants say it is too large,

A new type of comédienne was introduced when Bebe Daniels made athletic pictures— running pictures, swimming pictures, racing pictures. Here she steals some mileage in a foot-race.

From Thrills to Trills

Bebe Daniels graduates from a comedy stuntstress into a young lady who climbs to dizzy heights on the musical scale.

By HARMONY HAYNES

AH-a-a-a-a-a-a-a-a-a-a-a-ah! Oh-o-o-o-o-o-o-o-oh!" or something that sounded like that, was pouring forth from the full quivering throat of Bebe Daniels, filling the room with golden notes. Golden, because they were full and rich and mellow. Golden, because they will fill the coffers of the Radio Pictures Corporation to overflowing.

It was quite different from the last time I had seen this same beautiful Bebe hanging by finger tips from the ledge of a belfry tower.

"From thrills to trills, eh, Bebe?"

Bebe's black eyes twinkled, "You tell 'em, infant."

"That's what I'm here for, so loosen up and give me something startlin' to tell 'em."

"Well," Bebe began, thoughtfully, "I was born in Texas—"

OH, TO be sure," I butted in, "You were born in Texas. Dallas, Texas, to be exact. Your mother was an actress and she was Spanish and your father was Scotch. You were carried onto the stage when you were ten weeks old. You played the part of a baby. You played the little Duke of York in a play called Richard The Third

Like a crazy quilt, the brilliant movie career of Richard Barthelmess is highly colored and versatile in pattern.

Rich Richard's Almanac

Richard Barthelmess once pondered over what he'd do for a livelihood; perplexed, he decided to join the navy—but Madame Alla Nazimova had a happy idea—and today Dick is in the front rank in motion pictures.

By BURNS BRADLEY

"YOU give me the idea!" exclaimed Nazimova.

It was a fruitful idea, too, for it resulted in the début of Richard Barthelmess in motion pictures; and had it not occurred to the famous Russian actress, very probably Barthelmess would never have become a screen player at all and his latest starring vehicle, Drag, would never have been.

However, the gods, or destiny, or chance sent that idea into the mind of Nazimova back in the summer of 1914. In those days, Dick Barthelmess was just out of college. His mother, a widow, had been initiating Nazimova into the mysteries of the English language, and a firm friendship had been formed between the two women. With Dick on the threshold of manhood, it was necessary for him to decide upon a means of livelihood. He was not thinking of becoming an actor, either on stage or screen. Just then his youthful hopes were fixed upon a literary career, and he was in the habit of devoting hours daily to the faithful practice of English prose.

Nazimova was about to appear in a motion picture entitled War Brides, and a certain rôle was open—that of a young man named Arno. She thought of that rôle and she thought of young Dick, and the two thoughts fused.

It was then that she cried: "You give me the idea!"

So Dick was offered his first chance on the screen, and he has been there ever since.

THE star of Drag and of so many other successful pictures is a genuine and devoted New Yorker. His full name is Richard Semler Barthelmess. He was born on Manhattan Island, and though for cinematic reasons he has spent most of his time in recent years on the Pacific Coast, he still keeps an apartment in his home town and visits it as often as he can. And he still maintains against all comers that New York is the finest city in the world.

The Barthelmess family is of Bavarian descent. Dick's father, who was in the importing business, died in 1897, when the future screen star was two years old. Mrs. Barthelmess, faced with the necessity of earning a living for herself and her son, went on the stage under her maiden name of Catherine Harris. Years of struggle and hardship followed, but Dick was sent to Trinity College at Hartford, Connecticut, and Mrs. Barthelmess formed the friendship with Nazimova which was later to have such remarkable results.

After years of struggle and occasional hardship, Mrs. Barthelmess has lived to see her fondest ambitions for her son, Richard, blossom into fruition.

At Trinity College, young Barthelmess made a mark and a name for himself, and memories of him still linger there. The same ingratiating qualities which have won

FOR two years I let myself go almost completely," writes Betty Compson in her life story, "but I had come up before—I could come back now." And how definitely and conclusively Betty has come back!

My Life Among the Stars

The smashing conclusion to this whirlwind account of ambition, hardship, success, love and marriage —the Life of a Woman, as told to Ruth Biery

By Betty Compson

FROM a childhood of worry and work I inherited a burning ambition to get away from the drab life of Salt Lake City. I had been playing a violin in a motion picture house for $15 a week, but I knew that some day there would be bigger things for me to do, some day I would find happiness.

My father died. Six months later I would be out of high school. Mother and I laid our plans for my invasion of Hollywood and dreamed of fame and fortune.

About this time my first serious love affair took shape. There was Gattison Jones, who came from a good family—but he was the type who sloughs school; a wonderful dancer, a natural actor. He wanted to go on vaudeville with me. He would draw pictures of a rich drop-curtain with C (for Compson) on one side and G (for Gattison) on the other and tell me that those were what we would have when we were headliners. How I enjoyed dear old Gatty!

Dick Goss, one of the home town boys, organized a vaudeville tour with a couple of other boys and girls, when I was sixteen and had just finished high school. We reached San Francisco, all right, but soon we were stranded. Mother and I hired out as cook and nurse maid, but my penchant for the stage drove me on and soon I was back in vaudeville.

IT WAS about this time that I wondered why people made such a fuss about marriage. I determined to find out. I chose my eighteenth birthday for this new experience, and then if I liked it—

After that, it was months before I would let a man put his arms around me, because of that one evening of supposed-to-be romance.

Laughter with her meals is healthy, believes Betty Compson—and she illustrates by eating her breakfast as she reads the comics.

Los Angeles was the last stop on our vaudeville tour. When we reached there, I took tests for Universal. I waited and wondered, curiously confident that I would pass muster. Then Al Christie sent me a special delivery letter. I was hired, for $40 a week.

I telephoned my thanks to Christie and he sent a car and chauffeur down for me. And that chauffeur was Howard Bertherton, who recently directed me in The Time, The Place and The Girl.

Perhaps I would have fallen in love with this wistful, bashful chauffeur, who cast lingering looks in my direction, if I hadn't been put to work at once, with Horace Davy directing. He received $200 a week. To me that was enormous.

I fell so much in love with him that I ran off to Santa Barbara to marry him. Then, the memory of that other man mauling me; the thought of my career and what a husband might do to it convinced me that I wasn't ready for a husband. My name hadn't been in headlines. I was letting my emotions run away with my head. Just

What Are the Wild

Old Father Neptune rears up and stands a-tiptoe when these Hollywood peaches disport themselves upon his wave-washed beaches. In fact this abundance of beauty takes his breath away and leaves him speechless.

Pert and pretty Sally Phipps strums an accompaniment to the splash-splash of the waves on the beach, but they'd probably come up to meet her even if she didn't serenade.

Barbara Kent shows that she can hit the bull's-eye of a beach target quite as skillfully as she hits the bull's-eye in her screen performances. She's a leading woman for Universal now.

Greta Garbo sallies forth equipped for a swim—everybody knows she's been equipped physically, but very rarely has she been seen in swimming togs.

Waves Seeing?

What does it matter if Kathryn Crawford uses a fielder's glove to play the catcher? Merna Kennedy intends to give the ball such a ride that she won't see it anyway.

Anita Page starts out to give the old Pacific a treat. The morning dip is a great habit with her, and should encourage early rising in Hollywood.

Alice White is a good reason why the proverbial burning sands are burning. Don't get the idea she was all alone on the beach when this picture was taken—Alice always rates a crowd.

Flower of the Lumber Camps

Upon arriving in Hollywood, Jeanette Loff found herself faced with the handicap of resembling too closely a great star, but her talent asserted itself and this girl from the big timber country of Idaho soon blossomed into a brilliant young actress.

By HELEN STARR

SHE arrived in Hollywood when Vilma Banky was riding on the crest of a wave of popularity and she looked so much like Vilma that people stopped, stared and remarked upon the resemblance.

Yes, Jeanette Loff was beautiful, intelligent and attractive—but she looked too much like Vilma and because casting directors do not look with favor upon newcomers who closely resemble established stars, Jeanette found herself on the outside looking in. But not for long, for where Miss Banky comes from a languorously dreamy Hungarian village, Jeanette hails from the big timber country of Idaho, where the inhabitants buck up against Nature's obstacles and live life in the raw.

Miss Loff is of Scandinavian ancestry, and with true Nordic persistence, she watched her initial film work and the work of others, always striving for perfection, until now she ranks as one of the best bets in Hollywood for success in the talkies.

GRANDFATHER, of course, migrated to Minnesota when he first came to the United States," laughed Miss Loff. "That's where all good Swedes and Danes go. He had brought some money from the other side, so he pioneered out to Idaho and bought some land. And he had to fight cougars and wolves, when he cleared the way for a homesite and a lumber camp.

"Mother tells me that when I was a baby she took me from the little town of Orofino, Idaho, where we lived, out to see grandfather's big, new, log house which was only partly completed. The doors had not yet been hung. The men had been hunting the day before and some luscious slabs of venison hung in the hallway.

"The odor of the newly-killed meat attracted mountain lions which came boldly down from the hills and into the uncovered doorways. My mother was frightened almost to death for fear they would finish the meal on us. A possible movie career might have ended right there, but grandfather and the men heard mother's cries and the beasts were cornered and shot."

[Turn to page 101]

Jeanette Loff has the true Nordic coloring—natural golden blond hair, blue eyes and fair skin. She is unlike most Swedish women in figure, for she is slender to the point of delicacy and she has the grace that most north-European women seldom attain.

Letters of a Movie Extra

Dear Dolly:

Hollywood.

Gee, kid, working for Jim Cruze is just like listening to a bed-time story. He gives you an 11 a. m. call and then when you get lined up ready for work he comes out and tells you all good-morning and says, "Run along, kiddies, we won't need you till 1:00."

Then you go back at 1:00, stand around until about 2:00, get checked in and sit down for a while, or until he takes about one long shot, then he says, "Well, out into the sunshine, kiddies, you won't get rosy cheeks sitting in here. We'll call you when we need you." Just like that!

He sprang a surprise on us one day by introducing his new star, who is none other than Eric Von Stroheim. He said, "How many of you artists (I shall never forget that he used that word) have worked for Mr. Von Stroheim?" Nearly every hand in the place went up. Cruze laughed. "That's fine. This is probably the one great moment you all have, at one time or another, wished for. Just sit back comfortably in your seats and enjoy the pleasure of watching Mr. Von Stroheim work." You see we could do that, because it was a theater set and we were the audience.

Von Stroheim plays the part of a ventriloquist. Jimmy isn't doing so bad. He has already made Von swallow a silk handkerchief and eat fire. Von got a big hand from everyone there.

Betty Compson is the leading lady. Well, I suppose she is co-starring, and she is a doll! Gosh, I could just sit forever and look at her. And is she in love with Cruze? And is Cruze in love with her?

The spectacular feature about the Cruze picture is its thirty living statues. Oh, no, not even draped. You see, if they remain perfectly still, it's art, but if they move, it's vulgarity. Good thing to remember in case anyone ever walks in on your unawares.

I'm worried, terribly worried, and I don't know what about. Everyone seems to be worrying about the same thing. It's something they have in the east and it's coming out here. It's called Equity. At first I thought it was a race horse or an airplane flight, but now I don't know. I think I'd better find out, because they say it will just wipe out Central Casting and, and believe me, I want to be in on it in time to laugh.

Went to see Belle Bennett on the stage the other evening. She was wonderful, but I really didn't see much of the show. Jack Dempsey and Estelle Taylor came in late and sat right next to me. Jack is so sweet to Estelle. Seems impossible that a big boxer like that can be so sweet and tender, almost soft, where a woman is concerned.

Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon came in late, too, in fact, too late to even be considered fashionable. They sat right back of me and I couldn't see them very well without turning around and I didn't want anyone to mistake me for a tourist.

Love,

Francois Fern

Harry Carr

IF RAMON NOVARRO makes any more pictures like The Pagan he is due to lose his most devoted fan. Which is me (bad grammar indicating a high state of emotion).

The Ethical Shark

BY EMPLOYING sufficient Christian fortitude, I could stand for a story that sounded as though it had been written by a ten-year-old who was a little backward mentally—a mean, low villain chasing a pure girl around the room until a man-eating shark with a proper understanding of ethical values, bit him in two—or three, or whatever the approved mouthful of a shark may be.

It wasn't the moron story; it was Ramon himself. If he makes many more pictures in this mood and tone, he is cooked.

Too Sophisticated

RAMON'S great charm on the screen has always been a naïve, unworldly charm. He was a sort of Mexican edition of Peter Pan. Seeing him, one never could quite avoid the inner conviction that at night he didn't sleep in a bed, but flew away to roost with the birds. He never was quite of the earth.

In The Pagan, he is dangerously near to being "smarty." He has an air of cock-sureness—of being able to handle his public, that he will find to be fatal if he keeps up.

Patsy's Plans

PATSY RUTH MILLER is to retire from the screen and be a novelist and live in Europe with the kings and queens—but not at this very minute, you understand.

Patsy is going to be married very soon to Tay Garnett, a young director. And they have their lives all mapped out like a scenario.

For five years, they are going to stay in Hollywood and work to beat the band; and make all the money they can between them, which should be considerable. Then they are both going to quit the screen and go to live in Europe and write. Patsy is going to divide her time being a mama and being a novelist. She is going to have at least one child; and I don't know how many novels.

I shouldn't be surprised if it panned out just that way. She is one of the brainiest and most determined girls I have ever known. She had this plan years ago; she told me about it when she was a little girl just starting her career. But of her multitudinous beaux, Tay was the first one who looked like a husband to her. Being a very charming, handsome and brilliant young man, it is probable that many other young ladies have felt the same way about him.

The New Faces

CHESTER MORRIS, Paul Muni, Maurice Chevalier, David Rollins . . . Do you know who they are? I don't. But they are the names now being featured in Hollywood. Almost overnight, the heroes of Hollywood are stars of the stage.

I think this is more or less a deliberate purpose on the part of the producers. They are determined to change the face cards. More than that, they are trying to make the play more important than the high-priced stars. It would help them considerably in their business. But I think they are killing—dare I say geese?—which laid the golden eggs. When they take the adored heroes and heroines from the movie fans, they may find that they have nothing left.

Fate ironically chose the night of the grand opening of On With the Show to mark the passing of Louise Fazenda's pet duck, which had waddled after her for eleven years. Her success in this picture failed to console her. Now she's adopted these puppies to take the place of the duck which quacks no more.

PRIVATE LINE

FROM THE INSIDE

Joseph Schildkraut should be a boon to talkie producers who believe a picture should be done in four or five languages. Joseph speaks English, German, French, Turkish, Rumanian, Hebrew and modern Greek. Here he is at home with his wife, Elise Bartlett. They both appeared in Universal's Mississippi River epic, Show Boat.

The Shimmy Lady

GILDA GRAY, having acquired a divorce, a London accent and much miscellaneous experience, is coming back to Hollywood and the movies.

She is to make a picture for Radio Pictures; and it is going to be St. Louis Blues—or some other kind of blues; possibly the producers'.

Gilda had one whack at the movies for Samuel Goldwyn and it was pretty awful.

Winnie Comes Back

THE smashing hit of Winifred Westover in Fannie Hurst's Lummox is one of the most extraordinary stories I have ever known in Hollywood.

She was one of the girls who broke into pictures in the old Griffith days. She never succeeded in getting to first base. She was glad to give up her cinema work and become just Mrs. Bill Hart. Under the terms of her divorce settlement, she had to stay off the screen for seven years.

I know that she came back with fear and trembling. Now every producer in Hollywood is angling for a contract with her.

Fame School

WINIFRED makes it unanimous. I think that every girl who appeared in the slave scenes of Griffith's Intolerance has become a famous star. Both the Talmadge girls, Pauline Starke, Seena Owen—and I don't know how many more. That picture wrecked Griffith but "made" nearly every actor in it.

Louise Needs Consolation

EVEN her big hit in the first all-color talkie—Warner Brothers' On With the Show—does not console Louise Fazenda. She has lost her duck.

In the old days of the Sennett "lot," Louise was forever finding friends in queer old extra men, one-legged chauffeurs and all the animals. "Teddy," the dog, was her devoted admirer; but the studio-trained duck fell for Louise so hard that they had to let her buy it when she left the studio, to save the creature from suicide or worse.

For 11 years it has been following her around. The night of the Patsy Ruth Miller is to be married very soon to Tay Garnett. Later she intends to retire from the screen and be a novelist and live in Europe with the kings and queens, says Mr. Carr.

Director Mal St. Clair chuckles in harmony with Owen, Matt and Tom Moore, as he thinks what a hit the forthcoming picture, Side Street, is going to be.

Three Brothers

Owen, Matt and Tom Moore reach a glorious climax in their careers, being cast for the first time in the same picture.

By RUTH BIERY

IN A LITTLE thatched 'ouse in Ireland there lived a family of eight. Mother and father; five boys and a girl. A rather remarkable group when one considers that father was forty-six and mother twenty-eight when they went to the tiny church down by the crossroads and were married! The little thatched cottage with the lands 'round about it had provided plenty then, but now with the six additional mouths to feed they must seek new lands so that the newcomers could have the education and advantages which the countryside of Ireland could not offer.

Grandfather and grandmother, who lived across the moor, were heartbroken. So one child was to remain, if he so desired. There was a bridge which separated the front yard from the street. "We will carry all that we have across the bridge and the one who is the last to cross may stay with his grandmother or come with his father and mother," was the father's ultimatum.

Chubby-legged, six-year-old Owen hurried as fast as he could but in the scramble and the scuffle he could not quite keep up with the others. He stood, the last to arrive, on the edge of that bridge and looked back upon the only home he had ever known; upon the grandmother who so wanted to keep him. Then he looked to the road where mother and father and brothers and sisters were piling into the little side-car motorcycle. It was a wrench either way! But when he heard the chug-chug of the motor, he could not bear the thought of their leaving. He grabbed up his bundles and hurriedly thumped across the rough planks, adding one more to the already overburdened motor!

"Where to?" father asked mother. He had been waiting for days for her to make up his mind for him.

"Dublin or America?" Mother closed her eyes and tried to vision the outcome of either decision.

"Let's draw!" suggested one of the boys.

It was father who drew forth two slips of paper, wrote America on one, and Dublin on the other, took off his brown derby, stood them very straight behind the hatband and twirled it around on his finger. It was Joe, the eldest

A PICTORIAL HISTORY OF GARY COOPER

¶ From babyhood on an humble ranch in Montana to an exalted position as one of Filmdom's favorites—fond memories from the pages of the Cooper family album.

At the tender age of three years, Gary Cooper knew of no more thrilling sport than fishing in the horse trough on his father's ranch.

Visions from a joyful past pass before Gary in the smoke from his favorite pipe.

During his high school days, Gary spent many hours astride his trusty motorcycle.

Gary Cooper with his mother and father on the porch of their home at the foot of the hills behind the film city. Despite his wealth, Gary is still a quiet, home-loving youth.

William Haines says his dream girl must have black, bobbed hair, like Aileen Pringle's.

Sally O'Neill has saucy eyes. They seem to say, "Why kiss the Blarney stone when you can kiss me?"

Dorothy Sebastian's Grecian nose would add to the attractiveness of any girl's face, says Bill.

William Haines'

William Haines, Hollywood's noted wisecracker, declares seriously that he has never been in love! —but he has kept his eyes open so that he may recognize his dream girl when she comes along!

WILLIAM HAINES, jovial young star of the cinema, stands out in Hollywood like a broken forefinger in a convention of deaf mutes.

For, believe it or not, the handsome and wealthy Mr. Haines is the one male being in this Romeo-Juliet town who will tell you, under oath, that he never has been in love!

Now don't get the wrong impression of our Billy right off the bat. He isn't a woman-hater. Far be it from Bill to hate anyone, especially the ladies. He likes them all—at least all of those whom he has met during his 29 years on earth.

"The fact that I haven't fallen in love up to this time doesn't necessarily mean that I won't do it some day," Bill told me in a serious moment between scenes during the filming of Speedway, the picture in which he portrays an auto racing driver. "It's just that I haven't come across the girl who fits my mental photograph of my ideal wife."

So get set, girls! The field is open to all comers in this contest for the heart of William Haines.

BILL has overlooked no detail, no matter how small, in listing the specifications for the girl of his dreams.

She has the black, bobbed hair of Aileen Pringle, plus—

The eyes of Sally O'Neill.
The nose of Dorothy Sebastian.
The mouth and teeth of Marion Davies.
The chin of Anita Page.
The neck and shoulders of Joan Crawford.
The body of Marion Davies.
The hands of Greta Garbo.
And the disposition and sense of humor of Polly Moran.

There, set down for you in black and white, is the future Mrs. William Haines!

"Don't misunderstand me," urged Bill. "I'm not opposed to marriage. As a matter of fact, I think it is God's greatest institution.

"Even a dimple couldn't add anything to Anita's chin," is the way Bill describes Miss Page.

Where are there two other shoulders and a dainty neck as attractive as Joan Crawford's?

William Haines considers Greta Garbo's hands as near perfect as any he has ever seen.

Dream GIRL

By BOB MOAK

"But I can't see this idea of married today, divorced tomorrow. It just isn't right, no matter what the excuse may be. If I ever find the girl and go to the altar, it will be in one of those ceremonies where the parson uses the line 'Until death do us part.'

"It is because I haven't been able to take marriage lightly that I still am one of Hollywood's few bachelors. There have been things about every girl I ever met that I liked, but I am yet to make the acquaintance of the lady with whom I can feel sure that I will be happy for the rest of my life."

BILL prefers brunettes, but that isn't the only reason he approves of Aileen Pringle's hair. He's quite strong for the way she wears it, too. In fact, Bill says that the attractive Aileen's bob is the most sensible haircut he ever has seen on a woman.

"Sally O'Neill's eyes are what might best be described as 'melting blue,'" said Bill. "I've worked with Sally and I've been out with her at premières and parties, and I've had a chance to study her. Her's are those Irish eyes that would charm anyone. They seem to say, 'Why kiss the Blarney stone when you can kiss me?'"

Not being an authority on noses, I'm taking Bill's word for it when he says Dorothy Sebastian's is of Grecian architecture. I do, however, agree with Bill when he says Dot's nose would add to the attractiveness of any face.

"Marion Davies has the most beautiful mouth I have ever seen," declared Bill. "It is expressive of great things. In addition to a good looking mouth, Marion has two rows of perfect white teeth."

Bill doesn't care for a pointed chin. Rather he likes the lower portion of the face well rounded, as is that of Anita Page. "Even a dimple couldn't add anything to Anita's chin," is the way Bill expresses it.

"Joan Crawford's neck and shoulders are not overdeveloped as are those of some girls I know who spend most of their time at athletic pursuits, yet Joan's give the Marion Davies' mouth and teeth comprise this most important part of William Haines' dream girl's physiognomy. A figure like Marion's is another of the specifications Bill has incorporated in his list of ideal features.

THE HOLLYWOOD REVUE OF 1929 (Talkie)

HERE is the picture you have been waiting for, although you may not know it; also, the picture we have been waiting for, because now we can use up that supply of glowing adjectives we have trotted out for every previous screen Revue and then filed away for future reference.

The Hollywood Revue of 1929 is the greatest screen entertainment of all time. And you can quote us as saying so. In a gigantic effort to outdo everything that has been done before in the line of singing, dancing, talking pictures, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer executives marshalled all the considerable talent on their own lot and embellished it with stars taken in a raid on the stage.

YOU can't pick an outstanding star from this glittering galaxy nor a particular number out of so many that are breathlessly beautiful.

However, some sort of a medal, perhaps two guffaws rampant on a field of hysterics, should be awarded to Mr. Jack Benny, he of the imperturbable pan whom you have doubtless seen in vaudeville, who served as master of ceremonies with Conrad Nagel, and managed to keep the numbers floating lightly in the air, like a skillful juggler.

And another for Cliff Edwards, better known as Ukulele Ike, who has conjured from his favorite musical instrument the greatest song hit of his career which you probably know by heart even now, Singin' in the Rain. But you haven't really heard it until you hear Ukulele Ike leading the chorus girls while good, honest property rain slips and slithers in their galoshes and patters on the stage.

And still another for grand old Marie Dressler, who puts over several comedy song numbers (first alone, and then assisted by Bessie Love and Polly Moran), that will have you rolling in the aisles.

THEN there are others, too numerous to mention, as they say in picture reviews. Marion Davies, Gus Edwards, Charlie King, and Conrad Nagel for comedy and song; William Haines, Buster Keaton, Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy, for pure and impure comedy; and the Brox Sisters, Joan Crawford, Natova and others, for singing and dancing. Then, too, there is the beautiful balcony scene from Romeo and Juliet, done by Norma Shearer and John Gilbert.

After all this, there is nothing we can say about this picture. You've got to see it for yourself.

We might add, as a footnote, that there is not a double for either singing or dancing in the entire picture, and what is more, they don't make you wish they had used any.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

SCREEN REVIEWS

SCREEN SECRETS REVIEWER

SMILING IRISH EYES (Talkie)

COLLEEN MOORE'S voice should be heard for the first time with a rich Irish brogue, for although Colleen was born in Michigan, by inheritance she is as Irish as a wake. This picture can also go on record as the first talkie in which a theme song plays a vital part in the story.

Colleen, as an Irish peasant girl, inspires James Hall, as a peasant boy, to write the song, Smiling Irish Eyes. They make a pact that no one else is to hear it. He goes to America to make good, but fails, and cannot bear to write home.

Colleen finally follows him, and everywhere in America she hears this song, which has finally made him famous. She thinks he has forgotten her and she goes home, broken-hearted. Finally he returns and persuades her he still loves her.

Colleen does her own singing, and although she has no grand opera voice, she puts her songs over with a dash and a verve. Certainly, no screen rôle Colleen has ever enacted so perfectly suits her appearance and personality.

The songs Colleen sings will do something to your heart-strings, for they range all the way from comedy to heart-breaking tragedy.

Excellent comedy is contributed by Claude Gillingwater and Robert Homans as two country characters.—First National.

ON WITH THE SHOW (Talkie)

WARNER BROTHERS rush in where angels wear snowshoes—and come out with bulging pockets. First they did it with talkies. Now they've done it with color.

Of course you've been saying—don't deny it—that a whole picture in color would be unbearable. Just go see On With the Show if you want to find out how wrong you were.

The array of talent, drawn from both stage and screen, is amazing. From the former we have Joe Brown, of the panicking pan; Josephine Houston; Ethel Waters, that bad blues singer; the Fairbanks Twins, Thomas Jefferson, and many others. From the screen, Betty Compson, Arthur Lake, Sally O'Neill, William Bakewell, Louise Fazenda, and so on into the night. What a payroll that must have been!

The story is the same old back-stage story. The manager hasn't enough money to pay the cast. Everything goes wrong. Then, just to top things off, Nita, the leading lady (Betty Compson), goes temperamental and objects to working without pay, just as the time comes for her big number. Who should step up but Kitty, the coat girl (Sally O'Neill), and save the day? The love theme is between Kitty and Jimmy the usher (William Bakewell). —Warner Brothers.

BROADWAY BABIES (Talkie)

AFTER all, don't you go and try it, girls, just because Dee Foster (Alice White) got away with it. I mean marrying a fathead with a fat roll whom you don't like, on the chance that he will get shot and leave all the sugar to your real sweetie so that he can make you a Broadway star.

Yes, I know, it all happened to Dee in Broadway Babies, but Dee got a break. In fact, she probably used up all the luck for all chorus girls for all time to come.

This is Alice's first talkie, and she puts one over by really doing her own singing. It isn't so bad, either.—First National.

PARIS BOUND (Talkie)

THIS is one of those pictures that seldom happen. Coming quietly along without benefit of ballyhoo, you will remember it long after the super-epics are forgotten. Maybe it is Ann Harding's breath-taking beauty. Maybe it is intelligent dialogue.

Ann Harding is the very modern wife, who remarks, in the presence of witnesses just after her marriage, that it will be nothing to her, if her husband steps out with other women. But when he really does, oh, how differently she feels about it!

Ann Harding proves herself the sensation of all Broadway actresses who have come to Hollywood.—Pathé.

COLLEGE LOVE (Talkie)

THIS picture will send some people to college and some crazy. Your reviewer is among the latter. If you liked The Collegians, you'll like this. Same college, same cast, and—the same old story.

They make college out a grand place. They sing, they dance, make love, play football. Only the property man forgot to have any books around.

It seems George Lewis loves Dorothy Gulliver. On the night before the big game, he gets himself disgraced to save the star quarterback for good old Calford. Then—guess what? He comes back just in time to make the winning touchdown.—Universal.

THE BLACK WATCH (Talkie)

NO, KIDDIES, The Black Watch is not a new fad in jewelry, but the name of a crack Highland regiment. It hasn't much to do with the picture anyway.

It's all about political intrigue in India, where strange things happen under the midnight moon. Myrna Loy, as Jasmine, and Victor McLaglen, as Captain King, play the leads.

The story is highly improbable melodrama, but fantastic photography combined with skillful handling of sound effects by John Ford, the director, elevates it to the rank of one of the best current talkies. And the bagpipes are great on the movietone.—Fox.

FOUR DEVILS (Talkie)

OH, MY friends, my friends! Would you believe that a girl can fall a hundred-odd feet off a flying trapeze and live to go on with her necking, without dropping a stitch? You wouldn't? Then you haven't seen Four Devils. It really happens.

The Four Devils are four acrobats, two of each sex, so that they can fall in love with each other, and everything is lovely until menacing Mary Duncan happens along to lure one of the lads away.

Some great acting on the part of Charles Morton and Janet Gaynor, ably abetted by Nancy Drexel, Barry Norton, and Farrell MacDonald.—Fox.

THE FLYING FOOL (Talkie)

IF YOU'VE got flying fever, you'll like this one. Maybe you'll like it anyway. Who knows?

The dialogue is slangy and full of punch. And the story? Oh, yes, the story. William Boyd is Old Bill Taylor, stunt flyer, and that way about planes and women. Russell Gleason, his younger brother, ditto. The latter falls for Marie Prevost, as a cabaret singer. He thinks she is pure and darned if she isn't. Big brother Bill thinks it's just puppy love, and darned if it isn't.

Well, one of them marries her; we won't tell who. And if you get tired of the story, there are always planes. Gleason shows great promise.—Pathé.

WHITE COLLARS (Talkie)

IN THE next tent, ladies and gentlemen, is the screen version of the popular play, widely known as White Collars.

All about a young millionaire who finds that he has married a battalion of relatives, including Cousin Henry, along with his wife. A very intimate glimpse into the week-day life of those people who drive along the highways, five in a sedan, at 20 miles per hour on sunny Sundays.

Well done, with Conrad Nagel as the millionaire, Leila Hyams as the wife, and Bessie Love and Robert Ober supplying the best comedy.—M-G-M.

THE GREENE MURDER CASE (Talkie)

THE Greenes were an ornery family. As Ernest Hemingway might say, they hated each other's guts. So the two surviving members weren't much put out when the other three were killed.

But curiously, even as you and I, they did what they could to help William Powell, as the impeccable detective, faultless as to logic and taste in clothes, solve the mystery. He makes it seem so simple. The story moves slowly, but tensely, by little surprises. Powell does well by his first not-too-dramatic rôle as a star.

The rest of the cast is neat but not godly. Excellent shots of house provide an air of mystery.—Paramount.

TUNES FOR THE

One of the first things the song writers did when they arrived at the Paramount studios was to order Nancy Carroll's songs to be of the zippy, finger-snapping variety, instead of the slow, dreamy stuff she had been singing. Oh, what a boost to Nancy's popularity!

¶ Tin Pan Alley has up and packed and hit the money trail for Hollywood, assuring the nation's music-lovers bigger and better tunes from now on.

IN THE spirit of the pioneers who crossed our continent in covered wagons in 1849, the denizens of New York's Tin Pan Alley have boarded locomotive flyers and joined the fevered rush for the end of the money rainbow in Hollywood. Thar's gold in them thar California hills and the song writers of the nation have found it out.

Today, the Tinpanalleyans are making more money than they've ever made before and under much better working conditions. Naturally, the result of this will be a radical improvement in the music we will listen to: the talkies, vaudeville and musical shows we attend, the radio programs we tune in on, the numbers we put on the phonograph or thump out on the piano or dance to, will all benefit from this happy condition of the transplanted Tinpanalleyans.

When Al Jolson crashed through to unprecedented box-office returns in The Jazz Singer, he used a lot of numbers that had long been sure-fire for him. The big dramatic moment was when he left the theater to sing the Kol Nidra in the synagogue. People wept as he sang it. It hit them where they lived. Yet it was a question if the audiences didn't get just as big a kick out of some of the other songs—Mammy, for instance.

Certainly there was no question that they were crazy about the others. They had to be given more songs. Nobody but an imbecile would imagine for a minute that the next Jolson picture wouldn't be full of songs. Naturally, it was. But, this time Jolson did not sing the old songs. Instead, he sang some new ones. And one of the new ones—Sonny Boy—had been worked right into the heart of the picture.

Alice White pauses a moment on the set of Broadway Babies to chat with Al Bryan, left, who wrote the lyrics, and George Meyer, who wrote the music, for the song hits of the picture, Broadway Baby Dolls and Jig, Jig, Jigaloo.

TALKIES

By ARTHUR CAYLOR and DUANE HENNESSY

Well, since The Singing Fool, there hasn't been a picture of any importance without at least a special and original theme song. Even in such pictures as The Three Musketeers, silent except for two bits of prologue spoken by Douglas Fairbanks, and Redskin, wholly without dialogue, a theme song is sung by what you might call out-frame voices—voices that are in the synchronization, but not in the picture.

THE theme song idea is not new. Away back before the movies came out of the Great Silence, cue sheets were sent out with every film by the studios, for the benefit of organists and orchestra leaders. They outlined an entire accompaniment. Often they named a theme song to be introduced at this point and that. Once in a while a picture came along that had a special song which not only fitted in but went over big. Ramona is the classic example.

The need for originality in the picture theme song was just as obvious to the film magnates as it had been, earlier, to producers of musical comedies and revues. The magnates didn't even wait to get their sound stages built or to get their sound equipment installed or to find actors who could sing. Forthwith they shook out their fountain pens and began to sign up song writers. The song writers packed their lares and penates, and headed westward.

Evelyn Brent teams up with Moran and Mack, the Two Black Crows, in this famous comedy duet's first all-dialogue motion picture, Why Bring That Up?

Cliff Edwards, popularly known as "Ukulele Ike," fingers his uke gingerly before strumming it to find whether the boys and girls in the chorus of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's The Hollywood Revue of 1929 are in tune with his crooning.

That doesn't mean that all the song writers are now in Hollywood and that over New York's Tin Pan Alley there hangs a sign: "Moved 3,000 miles west; get key from janitor." Here is what it does mean, as put into words by Gus Edwards, who not only writes a mean ballad but also knows everybody worth mentioning in the song writing business.

"More than 50 per cent of the song writers are out here," said Gus, "and of the good ones, considerably more than 50 per cent. Any one of the good ones probably writes more hits than all the second-raters put together, so you can figure for yourself where most of the real successes are being written.

"Friml's still back East. And Romberg. And—let me see—who else? But, anyway, out here we've got Irving Berlin,

HOBNOBBING with the

Grace Kingsley

¶ Intimate gossip from the film capital chronicled by a famous columnist and feature writer who is closely associated with members of the motion picture colony both on the set and off.

By GRACE KINGSLEY

WHEN you are listening pop-eyed to the news that Carl Laemmle, Jr., twenty-one years old, is head of the whole organization of Universal Pictures Corporation, don't forget the fact that Carl, Jr., has always been the pal of Carl, Sr., president.

Carl, Sr., wasn't just a stand-offish human who handed down quarters and half dollars loftily to a little, eager-eyed boy, or who sent him away when son wanted to know about things. He had the youngster with him.

So little Carl saw moving pictures instead of nursery books.

Little Carl even sat in with his father at business conferences, and when the little fellow got tired of studying the faces of the film men and of building castles of books, he would listen to what those men were saying. When the time came to go to the projection room, he would trot along with his dad.

"Because I was always with my father," said Carl, Jr., the other day, when I caught him dashing about Universal City, looking like an eager little boy just out of school, "I never cherished the usual boyhood ambition to be a policeman or a fireman or a baseball star. My burning ambition was to become a motion picture producer. After conferences in the projection room, I used to ask my father all sorts of questions. He was never too busy nor too tired to answer me."

Kathryn Crawford, who came into her own with her songs in The Climax, for Universal, steals away from the set long enough to eat a piece of apple pie.

Charlie, a Devoted Father

IF YOU happen to ask Charlie Chaplin what he is doing next Sunday, he is likely to answer you, "Oh, I have an engagement."

Maybe you think, "Aha! Another romance!"

But you will be wrong.

Charlie's engagement will be with his children, little Charlie and Sydney.

Never a Sunday comes around that Charlie does not see his children some time during the day. Usually he has them with him all day. They are brought to his house by their nurse, and all day he romps and plays with them. Usually these rompings take place in the big garden, but if the weather be unfavorable, the children take possession of the house. If any one else puts things in disorder, the comedian rages. But those little boys can do anything they like. The result is sometimes frowns from Charlie's faithful Japanese valet, but there's never a frown from Charlie.

If Charlie has any preference, it is for the youngest, Sydney, who is possibly of a quieter turn. The baby adores hearing his dad play the big organ, and he will sit quietly an hour at a time and look at pictures in a book. Charlie, Jr., is more rowdy and wants always to be playing baseball or some other lively game.

FILM FOLK

Grace Kingsley's long experience in Pacific Coast newspaperdom has won her unquestioned authority on all things relating to the motion picture industry. Her position as motion picture newswriter and critic of The Los Angeles Times enables her to get authentic news while it is fresh; and her gifted pen does the rest.

Carol Lombard, Pathé's darling, adopts overall pajamas as her beach costume. Old Sol should smile his cheeriest when he sees her.

No Call for Author

WHEN that bewilderingly lovely color film, On With the Show, was given its première at Warner Brothers Theater, everybody naturally expected that, when introductions were made, the author of the story, Humphrey Pearson would be among those called to the stage.

But they do some odd things in Hollywood. Everybody, including the costume designer, was called to appear, except the poor author, who sat and watched the proceedings with Heaven knows what emotions, this being his first big story.

Duncans Back in Hollywood

THE Duncan sisters, Rosetta and Vivian, are back in Hollywood. But they are going to take separate houses when they begin work for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

"You see," explained Rosetta the other night to a group at a party, "Whichever one of us gets in first at night scolds the other for being out late. If we have separate homes, we won't quarrel."

There is another thing which the sisters admit. Vivian is rather extravagant in her tastes as regards clothes, and this irks the thriftier Rosetta, who, as guardian of the treasury in the Duncan family, knows what Vivian's extravagances mean.

However, back of it all is a tremendous devotion between the sisters which nothing can break.

One question which agitates the Hollywood gossip is: Will the Duncans ever marry? Of course they say they will when they get ready. Indeed, Rosetta confesses that there is a business man in New York who possesses her every thought.

As for the beauteous blonde Vivian, people are wondering whether, now that Vivian is on the same picture lot as Nils Asther, the two will make up their differences.

Barbara Kent is a young lady who just can't grow up. She is watching her Ga Ga bird ogle her stuffed puppy on the back of her chair, while her Dutch doll looks enthusiastic and her French doll appears blasé.

Corinne Griffith Loves Paris

CORINNE GRIFFITH loves Paris so much that she is going to buy a little château at Barbizan, near the French capital, and will try to go there every year.

She had yards and yards of tickets for every place in Europe, but was so enchanted with Paris when she got there, that she didn't go anywhere else except Brussels.

But she might have gone to Budapest if, alas! she had only read her mail!

One letter her secretary held out for her to read was written entirely in French and was four pages long. She glanced at it from time to time, but, thinking it only an extra long fan letter, put it back in her desk. Finally, the last day she was in Paris, she took the letter out and read it.

The letter was from the great playwright, Ferenc Molnar, and was an invitation to her and her husband, Walter Morosco, to visit him in Budapest!

"But my time was all gone, and to my undying regret," said the star, "I was forced to decline the invitation."

What it Takes for the

¶ The mike shall inherit the earth—here's what the talkies demand, and here are some folks who can supply.

Six things—six special qualities or abilities—are essential to success in the talkies, and workers under the microphone will succeed or fail largely through their possession or lack of them.

(1) Personality and charm—Dorothy Dwan. The talkies bring the player's personality so much closer than did silent pictures—it's almost as if the player stood face to face with the audience. Dorothy's demure charm will meet the test, with oodles to spare.

(2) The art of wearing clothes well—Joan Crawford. This essential to talkie success is by no means the dynamic Joan's only asset.

(3) Experience in screen technique—Robert Armstrong. The talkies are an art in themselves, differing from the art of the stage in many ways, and Robert Armstrong's screen career enables him to bring to the talkies many gifts gleaned from the days of the silent screen. In addition, he is the rightfully proud possessor of a record of brilliant stage achievement, having won laurels in the overwhelming smash-hit, Is Zat So? Likewise, his experience has included writing, directing, and producing.

Talkies—They've Got!

(4) Stage experience and technique — Irene Bordoni. La Bordoni's stage history is a glorious record of performances of zest, verve and charm.

(6) The art of mimicry—Louise Fazenda. Louise is such a competent mimic that she employs a new voice for each talkie part. And she can do with face and body everything the new medium demands. She has known the thrill and struggle of work in the glare of the footlights, having made her first stage appearance in a stock company at Long Beach. Her gift as a comédienne is largely the result of experience gained in that great training school, the Mack Sennett Studios — although of course much of her ability is a heritage from Portugese, Dutch, French and Italian ancestors.

(5) Sheer beauty of face and figure—Mary Nolan. Ever since her brilliant days as a Ziegfeld beauty, Mary Nolan has ravished the eyes of her lucky beholders with her delicate perfection of feature.

NEW YORK

Marx Brothers still funnier—Libby Holman's comfortable career—New idea in announcements—Our Gang draws tears—Menjou, the elegant—and other news from Broadway.

THOSE four imps, otherwise known as the Four Marx Brothers, opened in a stir at the Rialto Theatre in The Cocoanuts, and are a smarsh. They've warmed over the old material they used in the George Kaufman three-year-old musical show and in some clever, diabolical way, have turned it into by far the most refreshing singie I've yet seen.

They run a trick hotel in Florida where the realtors used to make boom-boom, and raise merry hell with snapping quips, pranks and tornadoes of puns.

Harpo screens wonderfully. He's the only silent actor left to the talking screen today. He chases all the gals as usual, swiping the stepins from their torsos and the gold from their fillings. He also plays the angels' favorite instrument, and beautifully they tell me, but I'll not harp on that.

Chico's as woppishly dense as he's always been, while Zeppo still acts as though his parents had decided on him as an afterthought during a hot summer.

Groucho, of course, is superb. His patter crackles forth as if shot from a machine gun. He scuttles along so fast the audience barely has the chance to laugh at the last crack before he's gotten off a new one.

He says, "Ice water in room 54? Send up some onions. That'll make their eyes water!" And, "You folks can't kiss here. You'll have to go into the mushroom!" And, "I can't get scarlet fever, I was fascinated on the left arm." But of all his horrible, wonderful puns, he always gets me when he's making love to a mastodon of a wench, and, looking deep into her soul, cries: "Your eyes shine like the pants of a blue serge suit!"

Careering in Comfort

LIBBY HOLMAN, the dark and sultry little gal with the dark and sultry singing voice, has to date capped a brilliant and rapid career with a great personal triumph in The Little Show. Libby is a little show all by herself—pretty legs, pretty face, attractive figure, alluring voice.

The most surprising thing about this girl's career is that it has been entirely free of heart-break and struggle. For her there was no tireless tramping from office to office, no rebuffs from wisecracking office boys, none of the discouraging details usually associated with the climb of an actress to fame and big money. She never missed a meal and she landed the first theatrical job she went after.

Miss Holman's story begins in Cincinnati, where she first smiled her charming smile into the beaming faces of her justly proud parents. Papa Holman is a well known lawyer and 'twas he who indirectly was responsible for his darling dawtah's histrionic ambitions. He took her, at the tender age of four, to see a musical comedy and it was then that little Libby tossed up a determined chin and vowed as how she'd be one o' them thar actresses some day.

Her first efforts in this direction were made at the age of five, when she staged a fairy play in a vacant lot, abutting on an apartment house. She, of course, played the queen, and the resultant clamor of knights riding hobby-horses with wash boilers, tin pans, dishpans and kettles as armor and weapons was too much for the frazzled nerves of a middle-aged housewife on the third floor, who emptied a large bowl of water on Libby's paper-crowned head, concluding the afternoon's performance.

Ruth Sato, the only Japanese chorus girl in New York, is one of the attractions in the current showing of Hold Everything!

The unhappy ending of this production failed to dampen the child-queen's ardor, however, and at fourteen she was busy directing a musical extravaganza staged by her high school's junior class.

Before she was sixteen she was admitted to the University of Michigan; while still eighteen, she received her B. A. degree from the University of Cincinnati. Her precociousness caused her father to suggest that Libby study law, but she kissed him lightly and lit out for New York. Her first job came her way so easily that she perhaps blinked her eyes and pinched herself, to prove to herself she was conscious. But after that, her career took on the aspect of just one good break after the other. We wouldn't be a bit surprised if her M. A. degree from Columbia stands for Marvelous Actress.

The Weepies

ONE night I happened into Loew's 83rd St., where there was a preview of the first Our Gang talkie, called Small Talk. It was billed as a comedy and the audience set itself for a big laffest.

For the first few feet of the picture, the audience guffawed mightily as their teeny favorites appeared on the screen and began to squeak. But gradually the mood of the theatre changed. The picture, instead of staying funny, went tear-jerker. It became one of those Over the Hill melancholies, twanging and clutching at the heart-strings, but awfully good.

The audience went up into one big sob and dissolved into tears which ran into the aisles, practically flooding the theatre, and making it so damp in the cellar where the stage hands were playing cards that several were laid up with bad colds. Anyhow, the kids were such marvelous tragedians, they stopped the show.

By the way, they've added a member to their force. Wheezer's his name and he's just two more than no years old. He's going to make Davey Lee look like a barnstormer, believe me, Barrymore. I can't tell you how cute and fetching he really is. You'll have to see for yourself.

Libby Holman is The Little Show—in fact, just about the whole show—in the excellent production of that name now playing at the Music Box.

Adeline Ogilvie is just another one of the many good things for the tired business man to look at in Hold Everything!

The Closed-in Spaces, Where Men are Menjous

ADOLPHE, the Menjou, superior butler and inferior baron, swooped into Town, during the recent hot-dog days, with lovely Katherine Carver, his wife, in tow, and promptly roosted at the Warwick, swellest hotel in these parts. The Warwick's the property of someone called William Randolph Hearst, whose motto, they tell me, is "Hearst come, Hearst served."

Adolphe arrived with 65 trunks, one of which was his wife's and the other 64 of which contained his wardrobe,

Bebe Daniels

Bebe Daniels

LITERALLY born to the screen, Bebe Daniels made her first theatrical appearance with her father and mother at the age of ten weeks. Before she had passed her eighth birthday, Bebe was already playing small parts in Shakespearean dramas. While still in her teens, she became Harold Lloyd's leading woman. From the beginning of her career in motion pictures, Bebe was consistently cast in comedy rôles, but her ambition to become a dramatic actress caused her to leave Lloyd in 1918 to accept a contract with Paramount. This ambition has been consistently thwarted and in spite of herself Bebe Daniels is today the most famous of all feminine screen comédiennes. Her name is being consistently linked with Ben Lyon.

Bebe was first starred by Cecil B. De Mille in Male and Female.

Ina Claire

Ina Claire

INA CLAIRE first opened her baby eyes in the city of Washington, D. C. Only her mother was there to greet her, her father having been killed in an accident four months previously.

Ina attended public schools in Washington, but she delighted in playing hookey. Daily she teased her mother to take her out of school, saying that it was doing her no good; she was going to be an actress and an actress didn't need an education. Her mother finally consented and Ina broke into her chosen career by playing vaudeville.

Later she was taken into the Ziegfeld show and made a hit by singing a song mimicking a star in a Belasco production. Belasco heard her and was amused and gave her a chance in drama.

She was signed recently by Pathé for talking pictures and she then surprised the world by marrying John Gilbert.

John Gilbert

John Gilbert

LOGAN, UTAH, seems to be responsible for the birth of John Gilbert, but the entire United Sates contributed to his education. His parents were stage people and wherever they happened to have an engagement is just where little Johnny happened to attend school. The finishing touches he received at Hitchcock Military Academy.

He played his first part on the stage at the age of one year. In 1915, he played in his first picture. He was an extra then. He worked his way up slowly but surely until he became leading man for Mary Pickford in The Heart of the Hills. Later he produced his own pictures and like many others who try to direct, act and produce, he failed in all three.

The Fox Company signed him for a series of pictures. From there he went to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Lewis Stone

Lewis Stone

LEWIS STONE, motion picture pioneer and war veteran, was born in Worchester, Massachusetts, 47 years ago. He received his early education here, later concluding his studies at Barnard school in New York, just in time to enlist in the army for the Spanish-American war. Following this military service, he made his début on the legitimate stage, where he soon became a notable success. At the outbreak of the World War he was well past the enlisting age, but he served as a Major in the Reserve Corps at Plattsburg Training Camp. Each summer he entrains for a military camp to spend his vacation from film duties. Since the conclusion of his regular military service, he has maintained his connections with the army while steadily rising to fame as a dramatic actor, first on the stage and later in motion pictures.

Marian Nixon

Marian Nixon

A CERTAIN Minneapolis high school lost a bright little pupil when Marian Nixon decided to slip away with a cheap vaudeville troupe. Everything was new and delightful to her, however, until she landed in Los Angeles and the company went broke and Marian went broke with it.

She was too tiny to do much in the line of work, so she tried pictures. After many heart-aches, she climbed to leads, only to flop again and begin at the bottom of the ladder. Three times she did this and now she's on the top and she's smiling. And she has a right to that smile for the talkies have taken a great fancy to her charming voice.

She is 5 feet tall, weighs 105 pounds, and has brown hair and brown eyes. She was at one time married to Joe Benjamin, a prize fighter. She is now engaged to Edward Hillman, Jr.

Myrna Loy

Myrna Loy

AS PREMIERE danseuse at Grauman's Egyptian Theatre in Hollywood, where she began her career as a Fanchon and Marco dancer, Myrna Loy's exotic beauty caught the eye of a photographer who introduced her to Natacha Rambova (Mrs. Rudolph Valentino), who was about to make What Price Beauty? Myrna was given a part. Unfortunately, the picture was scrapped, but Myrna's chances for success were not. Her performance in this ill-fated production resulted in a major rôle in Pretty Ladies. Recent proof of her distinctive ability as an actress of merit may be seen in her work in State Street Sadie, The Desert Song, and The Black Watch. In her latest picture, The Squall, she gives the most creditable performance of her career. Myrna Loy's real name is just plain Myrna Williams.

George K. Arthur, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer comedian, is evidently taken aback at the criticism of some fan, as he starts the task of going through a big stack of his fan mail.

Where's Mabel Normand?

Toledo, Ohio,
July 23, 1929.

Captain Fawcett, Editor,
Screen Secrets,
Minneapolis, Minn.
Dear Editor:

What has happened to Mabel Normand? I never see anything about her any more. I have been told that she is dead, but not long ago I read that she is planning to return to the screeen. Which report is correct?

Since SCREEN SECRETS seems to respond to the public's movie taste, maybe you will print something about her soon. I certainly hope you will.

Editor's Note:

You should be happy to hear that a story on the life of Mabel Normand will appear in the next October issue of SCREEN SECRETS.

Ardent Talkie Fan

Denver, Colorado,
July 30, 1929.

Dear Sir:

The talkies are certainly a marvelous invention! I have been following them from their very beginning and I note a great improvement in each succeeding picture.

I think Gentlemen of the Press, Alibi, The Broadway Melody and Thunderbolt are the best of the entire crop so far. I saw Walter Huston on the stage last year in Chicago and it was a great treat for me to see him again in Gentlemen of the Press and he seemed just as real and human to me as he did across the footlights.

Chester Morris in Alibi gave promise of being the talkies' best bet, but I mustn't forget that George Bancroft, who did such a superlative job in the title part in Thunderbolt, probably deserves that appellation already.

Your magazine has the right slant, I think, in giving the talkies precedence over the silent pictures.

Best wishes,

J. H. F.

Thank You!

Fort Scott Kansas,
August 4, 1929.

Dear Sir:

Your magazine certainly knows what the movie fans want. It has made me very happy to see regular monthly features and pictures on Lupe Velez, Clara Bow, Buddy Rogers and Gary Cooper, not to mention that red-blooded life story on Victor McLaglen and that frank and startling life story on Betty Compson.

I would like very much to see a story about Richard Arlen in your magazine soon. I saw him last in Thunderbolt, with George Bancroft, and I like him better every time I see him.

Let me say again that I think your stories are splendid!

Sincerely,

MRS. E. H.

Love and Gishes

Portage, Wisconsin,
July 25, 1929.

Dear Editor:

Is there a fan club for Lillian Gish and for Bessie Love? These two girls are my favorite actresses and I would like very much to exchange pictures and clippings on other film people for more information about my two favorites. I would like very much to see a portrait of Miss Gish in your magazine.

Bessie Love's work in The Broadway Melody tugged at my heart-strings and I think she is one of the greatest actresses in motion pictures. Her voice is low and musical and makes an excellent impression in the talkies.

If a club were started for these actresses, I am certain it would become quite active in a very short time.

Cordially,

G. H.

THIS frothy bit of effervescent femininity is Thelma Hill, whose vibrant charm, flair for comedy and natural beauty stamp her as one of Educational's best bets.

Backtrailing Movie History

Movie personalities and developments of a decade or so ago.

Al Christie, comedy producer, searched through his studio property rooms, found these antique oddities in dress, dusted them off and decided to pose in the center of this group of glorified bathing girls of 10 years ago. Vera Steadman is the siren at the wheel.

TEN years ago, Mack Sennett took six of his bathing beauties out on a road show. The Chorus Girls' Equity invited them to join. The question to settle was: "Should the producers pay for the full-length hose of the chorus girls?" The bathing beauties had just graduated from full-length to half-length hose, so the question didn't interest them.

Douglas Fairbanks shipped a print of His Majesty, the American, his first United Artists production, to the coast and mountain exchanges by airplane to San Francisco.

Jack Pickford, new Goldwyn star, arrived at the Goldwyn Studios in Culver City and was welcomed by Sam Goldwyn and other officials of that company.

Bessie Love had just made her first success in Over the Garden Wall.

Priscilla Dean signed a long-term contract with Universal.

Harold Lloyd was doing some roller skating sequences in Don't Shove.

Geraldine Farrar and her Goldwyn company were in the Imperial Valley making desert scenes.

Mabel Normand wrote to her ex-soldier brother: "Stay where you are. It would be quite a come-down for a soldier to enter pictures."

Lew Cody outdid all his friends by installing a fountain of ice-water in his dressing room. That was the height of luxury in 1919.

Broken Blossoms was released and broke all records. It established Lillian Gish and Richard Barthelmess as dramatic artists.

Mariam Cooper was being applauded far and wide for her work as Evangeline in a picture of the same name.

Universal Pictures Corporation had the largest line-up of stars of any studio. They were: Harry Carey, Olive Tell, Mary MacLaren, Kenneth Harlan, Ora Carew, Fritzi Brunette, Monroe Salisbury, Dorothy Phillips and Mildred Harris Chaplin.

Harry Carey seems to be the only one of all these to remain in pictures.

Mary Miles Minter gave a clambake at the picnic grounds in Dedham, Massachusetts, where she and her company were on location making Anne of Green Gables. William Desmond Taylor was directing.

Will Rogers made his first picture for the Goldwyn Company. It was called Almost a Husband. Sam Goldwyn was being complimented on his success in finding a different sort of comedian.

Elinor Faire was working for the Fox Company in a picture called Love is Love. When she sprung into prominence a few years ago as the leading lady in The Volga Boatman and wife of William Boyd, we had almost forgotten that in 1919 she was a star.

Hollywood got an extra out that Pauline Frederick had bobbed her hair. Many society women rushed to the barbers and parted with lovely tresses. Then Pauline herself came forward and proved that she had not bobbed, but had merely worn a bobbed wig.

Lily Damita From Gay Paree

without seeing me, so he is going to keel himself, I think. "The big fool! He is only joking." But what does he do? He soak the heads off a lot of matches in a glass of water and then he drink the water. But it does not keel him like he intends. It only makes him very, very sick.

AFTER that my mother give me the good talking to. She say I must never, never be silly about boys again. She tell me men will hurt me if I let them. She tell me I must make myself hard to men, that I must choke the soft side of me, and never, never fall really in love if I am to be the big success.

This make a big impression on me. A few years later I fall in love again, this time very badly. This man want I should marry him. He touch me in the heart. I love him very much. Then I think about what my mother have said. He will hurt my career. I cannot be the great actress. So I do not say a word. But I run away and leave him. It is the hardest thing I ever do. The farther I go from him the more it hurt me. I think: "Why should I leave this happiness to be an actress? What is that?"

But time goes by and pretty soon my heart does not hurt so much. Then the next time I feel myself falling in love it is a little easier to shut my heart against it and each time easier and a little easier, until I learn to keep myself from falling in love because I know how much will be the hurt at last.

My mother and I are still traveling around Europe when the war comes. I am learning to sing and dance all the time. Suddenly everything is changed. Everyone is sad. Life is very dark. All this time my father we have left in Paris, going to see him as often as we can. Now he has gone to the front. Very early in the war a message comes to my mother. I know without her saying anything that my father is never coming back any more. My mother decide it is time we do something, too.

SO I GO to the canteens behind the lines to sing and dance for the soldats. I sing for them the little French songs that I know. I am still a little girl in pigtails. Some of them have girls at home like me. They go wild over me. They shout, they laugh, they cry, these poor devils that are going back to die soon. They give me always the beeg applause. It is my first taste of success, the first time I have hear people shouting and clapping for me. It is like wine. I know what it is like now. I can never go back again. It is the stage for me.

Now my mother and I we have very little money. It is all gone in the war. So I must go on the stage now to make the living for both of us.

I start in the ballet of the Opera De Paris which is like your Metropolitan Grand Opera in New York. It is where girls must start to dance in France.

Those days are so hard I theenk I should die. Rehearse, rehearse, all day long and then work so hard until late at night. Dancing lessons, singing lessons, and then a show again. And do you know what money I get for all that? A few centimees, as much as about three cents a day. Sometimes we go hungry, sometimes we eat rolls and coffee, and all the time fighting, fighting and working to keep some other girls from getting my place.

For two years I do that and it is so hard. But it is good training. After that I am not afraid of anything.

Then the American jazz craze comes to Europe. Everybody is singing jazz tunes. My mother is smart business woman. She see that anybody who can sing the American tune will be populaire. So she organize a company to tour Europe with an American jazz band. And I am to sing the American songs.

FOR three years we travel like this up and down Europe, through France, Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain, all the Scandinavian countries, playing always in the little towns. Sometimes we do not have any dressing rooms and have to dress in hotels. Sometimes we do not get any money and live for three or four days on crackers. But always we are laughing, we are happy.

But one day the lucky thing happen. I am sitting in my dressing room in a little town in Hungary. I am wondering how much longer this must go on. Then in comes my mother with a telegram. It is from the manager of the Theatre de Capucines in Paris, a theater where there is dancing and singing like in the Follies. He ask how I like to come back to work for him. Oh, boy! Do I like to come! To see the wonderful Paris again! The cafés, the boulevards, the noisy taxis, all the people I know! And to live always in one place, not to worry about catching trains, or having wardrobes for shows, and to always have enough to eat! I am singing and laughing and crying all at the same time while I am throwing my clothes into a trunk. And if I had know all that was waiting for me there, I would have been happier still.

Lily Damita tells how she became the toast of Paris, the darling of the boulevards and the companion of kings and princes almost over night, also how her greatest romance came into her life, in the second installment of her life story in the October issue of

Mulhall Interprets the Talkies

JACK MULHALL certainly has his opinion on the low-down on talking pictures. He confided it to a friend, a man visiting from Mulhall's home town, Wappinger's Falls, N. Y. The scene was the Mulhall mansion in Beverly Hills.

Friend: What has become of the old, bull-necked, leather-necked director, now that the actors do all the shouting?

Mulhall: He shouts before and after the scene. An assistant gags him during the action.

Friend: Then there are no megaphones?

Mulhall: Sure. They rehearse you with megaphones and listen to their own voices come back to them via the microphone.

Friend: What has become of all the old actresses and actors who didn't have good voices?

Mulhall: They're on the stage learning to talk.

Friend: What's become of film animals like Tarzan, the horse, and Rin-Tin-Tin, the dog?

Mulhall: They're studying elocution and acquiring an English accent.

Friend: What's become of the Russian and German and Hungarian players who couldn't talk English?

Mulhall: They're playing New Yorkers.

Friend: What's become of the studio atmosphere orchestras who used to make the heroine weep by playing "Hearts and Flowers" off-key?

Mulhall: They're mostly making a thousand a week playing "Hearts and Flowers" off-key over the radio, to make the radio fans weep.

Friend: What's become of the title writer who used to take a three-year old joke from a magazine and put it into the mouth of our heroine to show she's not downhearted when she wants to tell the hero she's going to have a baby?

Mulhall: Why, the heroine tells that one about the traveling salesman, or else what the Dutchman said to the Swede, right out loud.

Friend: What's become of the old-fashioned studio electrician who used to "yes" the director?

Mulhall: He now operates the Vitaphone machinery and makes the director wait for hours while he adjusts the machinery. And if the director kicks, the electrician tells him he's a low-brow who's old-fashioned and doesn't understand modern machinery.

Friend: What about the ultra-temperamental lady star?

Mulhall: She spends her time with ultra-temperamental elocution teachers.

Friend: How have the talkies affected you, Jack?

Mulhall: Not in the least, I just kept on talking.

¶ The Postal Pouch editor will answer on this page any questions you may want to ask concerning the movies. For a personal reply, enclose with your letter a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

FREDDIE A.: Did you send twenty-five cents for Joan Crawford's picture? Maybe you've not waited long enough for it. Yes, she has a good screen voice, and is every bit as nice in person as you say she looks to you. As to the kind of tooth paste she uses, just read the ads and I'll bet the hole in a doughnut, you'll find out half a dozen of her favorite dentifrices. Er—say, how am I supposed to know such intimate details, anyhow?

MR. JACKSON: Your letter was returned to me. Better be sure to send a stamped, self-addressed envelope next time—then you'll be sure of receiving your personal reply without mishap. Film companies are not interested in buying stories from unknown authors, especially now that the talkies have changed the policy so very radically. Successful plays, musical comedies, and operettas are rapidly replacing the old-time fiction story on the screen. Better write short stories for the magazines—they are always considered for picture possibilities.

GERTRUDE L.: Write to George Bancroft at the Paramount Studios, Hollywood. He was born in Philadelphia, is six feet, two inches tall, has brown hair and eyes, and weighs one hundred and ninety-five pounds. So far as I know he has no literary aspirations.

PAUL P.: Unfortunately, aviation, like every other branch of the motion picture industry, is overcrowded with stars, war aces, and amateur flyers—to say nothing of a few professional aces who bow in and out of the newsreels. Better join the Air Mail and See the Sky—only you'll have to grow up into a pilot's license first, you know. Alice White's address is First National, Burbank. Believe me or not, I've not her home address, and it would be against my policy to give it to you if I had. Loop over and see us again soon.

JUNE E.: My, how the Bessie Love fans are crowding into the Postal Pouch—and I'm the president of 'em! She was born in Midland, Texas, on September 10, 1898, and attended school there until her family moved to Los Angeles. D. W. Griffith gave her her first chance on the screen, and changed her name from Juanita Horton. She is five feet tall, weighs one hundred pounds, has dark hair and brown eyes. She is every bit as cute off-screen as on—oh my yes!

Who Will Be Next?

William Haines

EVERY month one of the stars answers a letter received by Postal Pouch and sends to the writer an attractive, large photograph of himself. This month's lucky fan receives a photograph and letter from William Haines. The winner's letter and Mr. Haines' reply appear below.

Dear Postal Pouch Editor:

No foolin', words cannot express how much I enjoy "litttle Billy Haines." What sort of a chap is he in real life? I think he must be a "regular feller," always on the level, willing to give a helping hand, chock full of wise-cracks, and ready for a lot of clean fun. He is my ideal type of man.

Sincerely yours,
EVELYN K.

Dear Miss K.:

That was a mighty nice letter you wrote about me. I can only thank you for the compliments, and answer some of your questions to the best of my ability.

I was born in Stanton, Virginia, went to military school there, then tried to sell bonds until I finally got a job in the movies. Since then I've been more or less busy learning football, baseball, boxing, polo, golf.

It's funny, isn't it, that a fellow who is just a little lazy, like me, and wouldn't of his own will go in for strenuous exercise, has to keep doing it all the time to hold his job? However, there's a big kick in the work, and in the thought that perhaps I'm giving a laugh to people who need me.

Sincerely,
WILLIAM HAINES.

JESS L.: I swear I know the life history of everybody from Farina to Felix. Richard Arlen was born in Charlottesville, Virginia, twenty-eight years ago, is five feet, eleven inches tall, has brown hair and gray eyes, weighs one hundred and sixty-one pounds, was born a Van Mattimore, and is very happily married to Jobyna Ralston. They live quietly out in the country, raising dogs and engaging in outdoor sports—when they aren't busily working before the camera. Write to Dick at the Paramount Studios, Hollywood.

MRS. C. O.: Valentino's pictures included: The Big Little Person, A Delicious Little Devil, Once to Every Woman, All Night, A Society Sensation, The Sheik, Blood and Sand, The Young Rajah, Monsieur Beaucaire, A Sainted Devil, Cobra, and The Son of the Sheik. Gloria Swanson's first two pictures were: Elvira Farina and The Meal Ticket. Many Mack Sennett comedies followed. Her dramatic productions include: Don't Change Your Husband, Male and Female, The Affairs of Anatol, The Impossible Mrs. Belew, Bluebeard's Eighth Wife, Zaza, The Humming Bird, Manhandled, Wages of Virtue, Madam Sans Gene, Coast of Folly, Stage-struck, Untamed Lady, Fine Manners, Loves of Sunya, and Sadie Thompson. You're an old friend of the Postal Pouch—I remember you. Come as often as you like, and stay as long as you can.

ALYCE N.: Your letter was, for some reason, returned, so I'll have to reply through the Postal Pouch. If you'll send a stamped, self-addressed envelope hereafter, there won't be so much chance of mistakes happening. Buddy Rogers was born on August 13, 1904. Mary Brian is twenty-one, and single. Write to Neil Hamilton at Paramount. Yes, Phyllis Haver has retired from the screen and has settled down to being just plain Mrs. William Seaman.

Around the World to Stardom

ing up in the morning to see those bars across the portholes like a jail. Knowing there was no turning back. And beans for breakfast! Beans or mush and milk. You can't imagine what that meant to a boy who had never known anything but the comforts of home.

"It was a hard training school, but a thorough one. Some times I think those were bleak and bitter years. What did I get out of them anyway? A lot of memories I'd rather forget. But they did give me a strong physique. I was a scrawny, undersized stripling of a kid. The iron training of those days at sea gave me the constitution of an ox."

STRONGEST lure of all was the stage. He received his first impetus toward the footlights early in life. Frank Dockstader, the grand old minstrel, lived next door to the Bancroft home in Philadelphia. He looked upon George as his own son, and took him to the theatre night after night.

Later, after Bancroft had run away to join the Navy, the lure of the theatre came back to him and he started writing and producing shows on board ship. His first production was a minstrel show from a script written for amateurs by Dockstader.

The reputation of his shows grew in the Navy and won him a permanent place on the flagship. Everything from minstrel shows to Hamlet was produced at one time or another on that makeshift stage.

The time came when the lure of the theatre became too strong. With a partner, he hastily improvised an act, and opened in Philadelphia, as part of a burlesque show, at $15 a week.

He played comedy rôles for several years, working up to a comfortable salary, then left it all behind to start at the bottom once more.

"One day I met my little sweetheart's mother. She was glad to meet me, naturally, because of the child's devotion, but that meeting changed my whole life.

"She said to me: 'Mr. Bancroft, I do not look down upon comedians. I think most of them are splendid fellows, and we need them, but why should you be a comedian when you could do so much better?'

"'But what could I do?'

"'You could play leads.'

"'Leads! With this face?'

"'Nonsense! You have a splendid form, a magnificent head and your features are broad—perfect! They will look wonderful from out front."

"At last! Someone had faith in me—in my ability. Faith—a little encouragement was all I needed. I could make good. I could be in a class with James Cruze and King Baggot, who were topnotchers then.

WELL, I did make good. It took a little time, but eventually I played leads and I played on Broadway."

George Bancroft hesitated, as though reluctant to dismiss the warm glow of success from his memory.

"And then—" I said, impatiently.

"And then—" he smiled, and the blue eyes twinkled. "What do you suppose happened then, child?"

Mr. Bancroft has a gracious habit of referring to persons just a little younger than himself as children. And, carrying on the child idea, I said, almost breathlessly.

"Pictures!"

"Righto, little one. It was pictures. It was something like starting all over again. I couldn't very well begin at the top in a new profession—I couldn't play leads, so I began by playing heavies, and I am still playing heavies."

"Mr. Bancroft," I suggested, "to the fans you are in a class by yourself. What is this great power you have over them?"

"Oh, I don't know. What would you say?"

"But, Mr. Bancroft, that would be unfair. I know you."

"Probably that's the reason—they know me, too. I have always tried to play my part on the screen as I would play it in real life, were I living such a life. I never step out of character. I am myself no matter what rôle I portray.

IN SPITE of his gigantic stature and broad features, there is nothing of the brute about George Bancroft. He has red-brown wavy hair, covering a magnificent head; his features, although large, are clean cut and perfect; his teeth are small and even and white as pearls; and his eyes—well, it's his eyes that seem to tell the story.

They are as deep and as blue as the seas over which they constantly seem to be gazing, as though searching for a lost sail. They have that restless, furtive look of the eyes of men who never sleep. When someone speaks to him, those eyes twinkle merrily, only to drop again to the level of the horizon. When he is angered, those blue eyes become gray, they narrow and sharpen and Bancroft's voice lowers. I am sure that if he is ever dangerous it is when he whispers.

Three and a half times he has circled the globe, chasing rainbows, searching for adventure upon the Seven Seas; but all that is in the past. He is now searching for the Blue Bird in the hearts of humanity and the abundance of his fan mail proves that he is finding it.

Clara Bow Says Yes!

None of Clara's intimates, however, would take her seriously. "She's just being nice to a visiting fireman," they whispered.

So news of Clara's marriage plans was as much of a surprise to Movietown as it was to the rest of the universe.

Since first crashing fame's gates, Clara has had and tossed aside many loves.

The wealthy Bob Savage slashed his wrists when Clara refused to become his wife during her early days in Hollywood.

Then she became betrothed to Victor Fleming, famous director, but that lasted only a short while.

During the filming of Wings, Clara said she would become Mrs. Gilbert Roland as soon as her task before the cameras was ended.

Later her friends thought that she might marry Gary Cooper.

But Gary soon gave way to Walter Muller, Hollywood auto accessory dealer.

As each of these passed into the discard, Clara would offer her stereotyped explanation:

"I am looking for my ideal and I shall keep on looking until I have found him. I want a family, so the man I would marry must be more than an ideal husband. He must be the ideal father."

Apparently, Harry Richman is that ideal, for Clara's search is ended!

CLARA always has said that when love really came, she would marry whether he be a millionaire or a pauper. However, she said she would prefer to pick a man in her own profession, for he would know the trials and tribulations confronting her in her work. He would have a better understanding of her moods and her temperament.

After the ceremony, Clara and Harry will rent or build a home in Beverly Hills, for Clara's present abode is considered too small for the needs of two.

Both will continue their careers, but Clara has announced that she will make fewer pictures each year than she does now.

Despite all the plans that have been laid for the wedding of Clara Bow and Harry Richman, it wouldn't be surprising if, should Bob and Victor and Gilbert and Gary and Walter gather about the table in Henry's for a midnight sandwich, one or all of them would remark:

"Yea, I'll believe it when the parson signs the papers."

———o———

DOROTHY DWAN has picked up her life again; has come back to Hollywood to resume her screen work. She was the wife of Larry Semon, who died under such tragic circumstances last year. Miss Dwan stuck by him with a loyalty that should earn some great blessing in life.

Says an Office Manager

IN offices throughout the country—in offices all over the world—women are realizing the full value of every working day, free from the problems which once retarded their progress. Kotex has not only meant new comfort and better health but it has brought a priceless mental relief.

Doctors and nurses have helped to teach women the importance of this new sanitary protection. They stress its soft, soothing comfort, its correct absorbency.

Fleecy, soft filler

Cellucotton absorbent wadding, which fills Kotex, offers a type of softness that no substitutes can equal. Surgeons in 85% of the company's leading hospitals insist upon Cellucotton absorbent wadding to give patients the greatest possible degree of hygienic comfort.

The new deodorant

To assure the utmost daintiness of person, Kotex now deodorizes by a process discovered and perfected in Kotex laboratories.

Corners cut and rounded

The fact that corners of the pad are now rounded and tapered means greater mental as well as physical comfort. This one improvement alone has impressed thousands of women, who write us in appreciation of its advantages.

Softer gauze, softer filler to end chafing.

2—Corners rounded and tapered for inconspicuous protection.

3—Deodorizes, safely, thoroughly by a patented process.

4—Adjustable filler may be changed as your needs change.

5—It is easily disposed of.

45c for 12 at drug, dry goods or department stores, singly in vending cabinets through West Disinfecting Company. Kotex Co., 180 No. Michigan Ave., Chicago.

Layers of filler are adjustable. The gauze, as well as the filler, is softer and gentler than ever. And Kotex is disposed of just like tissue. That fact alone has helped to change the hygienic habits of women all over the world.

A Modern Cinderella

"But don't you see? I don't like to talk about my love for a producer. The fans always think of producers as huge men with big tummies and black cigars and funny language. They can't picture a little boy with curly hair and brown eyes who comes home to laugh and to play just like other little boys who chance to be husbands.

THEY'LL never believe that I fell in love with him when I thought he was an office boy leading me to see Irving Thalberg, the producer.

"How did you do it? What was your technique?"

"I wore him down gradually. It took four or five years to do it. First, I tried to gain his admiration through my work; secondly, I saved him trouble when we were going together. If he was late, I called for him to make it more simple.

"You should have Irving tell you about my arrival at his office! He was with Mr. Mayer by this time. He was sitting in his office when he heard a wild roar, a loud rattle, a jamming of brakes and the fence next to his window splintering. Mother and I had arrived in a new Chevrolet, purchased but not paid for. That was my manner of driving! He rushed out to see what had caused the riot.

"This way," he told me. Do you wonder that I thought he was an office boy? I looked him over. I liked his curly hair, his twinkling brown eyes. I felt my heart doing gymnastics. He led me into a perfectly grand office, gave me a chair, then went around and sat behind the big desk before me. It didn't seem possible that this was Irving Thalberg, the producer!

"Right there is where I began my wearing down process although I didn't know yet that he was the man who had sent for me from Universal.

MY FIRST step was an attempt to win his professional admiration. I made a couple of pictures for Louis B. Mayer and then they loaned me out for experience. Rubbing off the rough spots by giving me every kind of experience! At Fox, I was John Gilbert's leading lady. At Lasky's I made Empty Hands; then a slap-stick comedy, Excuse Me, with Conrad Nagel. I played my first mother part, again with John Gilbert; an emotional dual rôle in Lady of the Night; a character part in His Secretary.

"I believe real love is founded upon admiration. Irving Thalberg was the supervisor on my home-lot pictures and I was determined to get his admiration. If he had any romantic inclinations during those years, he didn't show them. One day I was sitting in his office arguing a point with him. I don't remember what it was—a part I didn't want to play, money—something. I was being very independent. 'But you know, Mr. Thalberg, your's wasn't my only offer. I had three at one time from the coast. So, you see—'

"'Yes, I know!' Then—I don't know what it was, the twinkle in his eye, some sudden recollection. But I remembered that palavery letter I had written a certain producer. 'Thalberg—Thalberg—' hadn't that been the name?

"'Were you the man who sent me that first offer from Universal?'

"'Yes and the one who gave you the others!' Then it came out that after he left Universal he had negotiated with several companies and in each conference he had suggested certain prospective players, with my name among them. They had all sent me offers at his suggestion.

FROM that time on—well, he was the winner. I had gone there with my head high; I came out like a soggy potato. Yet it was three years before he asked me to go anywhere with him. Then, one day, he had his secretary call to ask me to attend a theatre with him. I—well, I couldn't believe it. I thought there had been some mistake. I didn't really expect him. When he actually came, we went to the Cocoanut Grove instead of a theatre. That was lucky for me. I could get in better work than at a stuffy theatre.

"What held his interest? I don't know, but perhaps it was because I put his interests ahead of my own. I realized that he was a busy man, with many responsibilities. If he was an hour and a half late I didn't bawl him out. I just said, 'That's all right, I just finished dressing myself.' (He didn't know that this was the truth, until after we were married; that I have always been a notoriously slow dresser!) Or, again, as I have said, I would go around and call for him if it were more convenient. And I talked about things in which he was interested, not just my personal problems. We have been married two years in September. And I have followed the same tactics since we were married.

"I make his interests mine. I like tennis and swimming. He likes golf and bridge. I have been taking golf lessons. And I tell you his joy when he saw me make a good drive on the golf course was greater than any he ever had in seeing me in a picture—even Mary Dugan."

"Then you aren't exactly a modern Cinderella?"

"Oh, yes I am. A really modern one. In this day and age we work for our slippers and our princes—they don't just pop in upon us. I've worked for every inch of my success and it took me years to get the man I wanted. I'm a perfect modern Cinderella and don't you let anyone make you believe you can get either the man or the slippers without just such strenuous effort."

Meeting the Talkie Challenge

COLLEEN is a most energetic young person. She made up her mind to see that Fate should satisfy her ambition in a big way. That meant work, but Colleen likes to work and prides herself on being a "good soldier." So she found a good voice teacher and buckled down to mastering the new technique. Within the past few weeks she has completed Smiling Irish Eyes, in which she not only talks but sings.

Such are the fruits of preparedness.

Laura Hope Crewes, famous on the legitimate stage, is one of the leading voice instructors. Her clients include Norma Talmadge, Corinne Griffith and Dorothy Mackaill. Incidentally, Miss Crewes will be seen and heard with Irene Bordoni in the screen version of the latter's great stage hit, Paris. Helen Ware and Frank Reicher also are engaged in the useful and profitable occupation of preparing mummers for the microphone. And there are scores of others.

Lois Wilson met the talkie problem with characteristic energy and initiative. She proceeded to train herself by going on the stage. Joining Edward Everett Horton's repertory company in Los Angeles, she played feminine leads in such dramas as The Queen's Husband, The Swan and Spread-eagle. Then, feeling that she really knew something about this business of acting with the voice as well as with face and body, she returned to the studios and has appeared with such distinction in a series of rôles that she was recently placed under a long-term contract by First National.

A similar course was followed by Leatrice Joy, who chose vaudeville for her training school. She was scheduled to begin an extensive tour in New York, she preferred to open "cold" at the Palace and the circuit management agreed to let her do so. She took the jaded Palace audiences by storm.

BILLIE DOVE was on the stage before she went into the movies; but a Follies beauty, after all, has very little to say. To all intents and purposes, Billie was just as much of a greenhorn as most of the other Hollywood luminaries with regard to this talkie business. Her friends, however, have long known and cherished her talent as an impersonator which she used to exercise by tumultuous request at parties in Beverly Hills and thereabouts; and in her first talking picture, Careers, she has won the plaudits of some of New York's most critical reviewers.

So the Hollywood stars are sitting pretty. The talking pictures are here, but the stars are here, too, and they are going to remain. Jack and Jill have met the giant, and he is carrying them happily on his shoulders.

Speechless...When a Few Words Would Have Made Me!

But now I can face the largest audience without a trace of stage fright

THE annual banquet of our Association—the biggest men in the industry present—and without a word of warning the Chairman called on me to speak—and my mind went blank!

I half rose from my seat, bowed awkwardly and mumbled, "I'm afraid you'll have to excuse me today," and dropped back in my chair.

Speechless—when a few words would have made me! The opportunity I had been waiting for all my life—and I had thrown it away! If I could have made a simple little speech—giving my opinion of trade conditions in a concise, witty, interesting way, I know I would have been made for life!

Always I had been a victim of paralyzing stage fright. Because of my timidity, my diffidence, I was just a nobody with no knack of impressing others—of putting myself across. No matter how hard I worked it all went for nothing—I could never win the big positions, the important offices, simply because I was tongue tied in public.

And then like magic I discovered how to overcome my stage fright—and I was amazed to learn that I actually had a natural gift for public speaking. With the aid of a splendid new method I rapidly developed this gift until in a ridiculously short time, I was able to face giant audiences—without a trace of stage fright.

Today I am one of the biggest men in our industry. Scarcely a meeting or banquet is held without me being asked to speak. I am asked to conferences, luncheons and banquets as a popular after-dinner speaker. This amazing training has made me into a self-confident, aggressive talker—an easy, versatile conversationalist—almost overnight.

* * * *

No matter what work you are now doing or what may be your station in life; no matter how timid and self-conscious you now are when called upon to speak, you can quickly bring out your natural ability and become a powerful speaker. Now, through an amazing new home study training you can quickly shape yourself into an outstanding, influential speaker able to dominate one man or five thousand.

The Adventurers' Club

A CLUB that breathes of other climes,
Of other faces, other times,
A memory of days we spent
Adventure seeking, pleasure bent.

A club that brings again to mind
Different races, other kind
Of people from across the seas,
Of tribes from the Antipodes.

Of sea dogs and the Northern Lights,
Of blazing suns and tropic nights,
Antarctic snows and desert heat
And jungles where the tom-toms beat.

Of mountain peak and waterfall,
Of forests where the grey wolves call,
Of cataract and rushing stream,
Of gold dust bed and campfire dream.

Of swamps and heaths and mesa lands,
Of foothills where the wild horse bands,
Arroyos, dunes and water holes,
Of treasure, loot and phantom goals.

A tiger's leap, a lion's roar,
The gleaming tusk of charging boar,
A leopard creeping on its prey,
A python lying by the way.

A Buddhist temple, Lama priest,
A surly Kurd from out the East,
A sniper in the Khyber Pass,
A savage in the pampas grass.

Of China and its coolie horde,
A bloody pirate junk to board,
Of Cossack and a well set spear,
A Baden dance hall floor to clear.

Of African and savage black,
The Matterhorn with pack on back,
Of Hudson's Bay and broad snow shoe,
Australia and its kangaroo.

A mosque where Moslem sultans meet,
A narrow barricaded street,
A challenge—Halt! a shot, and cries—
A dead man in the roadway lies.

An S. O. S.—a volunteer
Always ahead and damn the rear!
Out where one is the first to fall,
Out where the gods of courage call.

Now fancy turns from thing and place
And focuses on hard, grim face
Of men whose hand clasp means a friend
Who'll see you through to any end.

Of men who lead the leaders in;
Whose daily roll call shows how thin
Their ranks are growing as each dawn
Finds one or more a-westward gone.

Of men of mettle, men with guts,
At home in palaces or huts;
Of men who know their rifle sights
As well as they know Broadway Lights.

Of men who hold but light their loss
'Neath northern star or southern cross;
Each following the sirens call,
Adventure seeking one and all.

Of men who knew each raw frontier
And men who scorn to halt or fear;
Of men who always set the pace,
The pioneers of every race.

So carry on, and when you're dead,
For epitaph may this be said:
"He had his boots on when he fell
And made adventure out of hell."

—W. S. Van Dyke.

Cecil De Mille Tells How He Does It

Something to Think About when he really lost his temper. Monte was to drown with the breaking away of a dam. When the break came it was smooth, rather than jagged; unnatural rather than natural. De Mille was almost insane with fury. He turned and upbraided the construction foreman in words which do not bear repetition. The foreman stood up to him. He was a tall, burly fellow, not afraid to lick the world's most potent director. Actors and extras cringed in the background.

Then De Mille walked straight to the foreman and said, "I'm sorry!"—But perhaps you will recall that the work in that picture created a sensation and advanced Monte Blue far up the ladder of recognition. The shell of all the players had been cracked—this time unintentionally.

IT IS said that De Mille will go to any lengths except loss of life to secure a good picture. Perhaps one of the most amusing examples was on The Volga Boatman. Eleanor Faire was not hitting the high spots—her mental shell had not been broken. Just at this point it was noted that William Boyd was becoming interested in the leading lady. They were seen slipping out to dinner together in the evenings. Immediately, the number of late night shots began to increase. In fact, the company was forced to eat dinner close to the studio practically every evening. Eleanor and Bill became more and more interested. At the height of their romance, the major shots of The Volga Boatman were taken. There was no imitation in the emotions displayed by the leading lady! De Mille does not admit for publication that he actually promoted this romance to break the shell of her emotions but neither does he deny it. But the facts stand for themselves since night work was technically unnecessary.

The original reading for Fool's Paradise was scheduled for 10:30 one morning. Mildred Harris had an important rôle. Jacqueline Logan, Conrad Nagel, Theodore Kosloff—everyone but Miss Harris was there on the moment. "We will wait for her," Mr. De Mille stated. No one spoke; everyone was thoroughly frightened. When she entered, more than 30 minutes late, he spoke quietly, without raising his voice above the normal, "Would you like to know my opinion of a woman who does not think of the rights of other people? Everyone but you was here on time. You—" and he proceeded to give her his opinion, allowing her no chance to explain. The result of this tongue lashing was that Mildred Harris gave her best to this picture and so did the others. No one was late during the production. The mental mask of every player in the cast had been torn away by this one vitriolic attack upon Miss Harris.

WITH William Boyd it was a matter of years of building. The first time I saw in him a real possibility was at the time Julia Faye fell into a tank of water in Why Change Your Wife? She had on a heavy patent leather bathing suit and couldn't swim. A man stepped out of the extra ranks and pulled her out. The cool-headed manner and ease with which he did it, was characteristic of Boyd. I gave him a bit, a special piece of business, for the screen. I insisted that he begin with small parts and was always giving them to him. And always against opposition. Frank Urson was directing Forty Winks for me sometime later. I wanted Boyd as the juvenile. Urson was angered and begged me not to force an extra on him. I didn't persuade, but I instructed that he be used.

"I kept Boyd waiting seven years for just the right part. He became desperate half a dozen times and came to me to ask if he couldn't go into something else. He was unhappy mentally and no doubt hungry, many of these times, but he was completely humbled. Then, came The Volga Boatman, the part for which I had been waiting for seven years. He was easy to direct; he had an understanding through seven years of training.

Although De Mille has no one way of handling any one person, there are certain psychological tests which he gives to them all. No important artist has played in one of his productions with whom he has not mixed socially before and during that picture. They are guests on his yacht, at his Paradise ranch, a hundred miles from the city. "I can tell just how they react to life psychologically when they are off their guard in a social environment."

A PERSON who has once made good with De Mille is certain of being recalled; but one who hasn't is seldom given a second opportunity.

When he was with Famous Players Lasky, Jane Winton was signed in New York and he was asked to teach her to act. She was young and inexperienced, which excuses Jane and allows her name to be printed. He gave her a part in The Golden Bed. There was Julia Faye and Lillian Rich leaning against a mantel doing a subtle scene in which they politely "cut each other's throats," as rival social leaders. Helen Sullivan, a fine actress of twenty years' experience, was standing close by, taking in every word, every move, every suggestion. Jane Winton, the newcomer, lay on a couch, to one side, talking to a boy friend.

"Miss Winton, I think this is a valuable scene for you to see." De Mille's voice was cold, but the youngster did not realize. She continued her conversation. She has never appeared in another De Mille picture. But neither has she been guilty, since, of inattention.

Without Benefit of Whiskers

By SPEED KENDALL

I FELT positively undressed." That's what Chester Conklin, the famous walrus-mustached comedian, told me on a set at the Paramount studios. The cause for all his shame and bashfulness was the removal of that well-known mustache.

Now, after all these years, his disguise has been lifted. It all comes because of a period picture. When Paramount began preparations to make Stairs of Sand, a Zane Grey story, a stage coach driver of comic tendencies was needed. Conklin was the natural thought of the casting director.

"But they didn't wear that kind of a mustache in 1850," Director Otto Brower protested.

"Then he'll have to take it off," the producers answered.

Conklin started to howl when he heard of the move, but later he took it good naturedly.

Now that the mustache is at last gone, it is time to print a little yarn on the origin of that piece of hair.

Let Chester tell it in his way: "I was born in Oscaloosa, Iowa," he says. "Now don't start saying, 'You would be born there.' That's a good town. When I was fourteen, I started out on my own and four years later I found myself in Memphis learning the baking business.

WORD came to me of the big opportunities in St. Louis, Missouri, where the World's Fair was to be held. I decided to have a look at this thing, so I went up the Mississippi on a river boat. The fair was a success. It got all of my money within two days and I started looking for a place to work. I sold papers for a few days and finally came to a bakery owned by a man named Schultz.

"I walked in and applied for a job. Schultz happened to need a man and I went to work. I can't recall his first name nor where his shop was, but the back door of the bakery opened on the back door of a saloon—but that's another story.

"Schultz had a big, walrus-like mustache just like the one I now wear. He used to spend many moments every day brushing and combing it. It was the pride of his life. He spoke with a decided German accent and I used to absorb it all until I could imitate him to a T.

"I spent a year with Schultz and then went to bake at the Planter's Hotel and was getting along swell as assistant pastry cook when I became stage struck.

One evening I attended a burlesque show and almost wept when I saw the German comedian. He was one of the typical Webber and Fields Dutch comics, with the yellow goatee and the long yellow wig. I decided right then and there that I was a better German comedian than the whole bunch. I had met a lot of Germans and I had never seen any of them with a get-up like that.

"I thought of Schultz and so went to a wig maker and drew him a sketch of the kind of mustache I wanted. He made it perfectly. I broke into a small time vaudeville circuit as a German comedian. As an actor I was a swell pastry cook and got a dismissal slip pretty quick. I decided I needed acting experience and so went with a medicine show, in stock and nearly every other form of stage amusement, ending up as a clown with the Al G. Barnes circus.

FIFTEEN years ago, the show closed at Venice, California, where the winter quarters are still located. While walking down the street one day I saw a bunch of Keystone cops chasing some comedian down the street. I thought that was a sure laugh and decided I'd better have a try at this sort of business.

"A few days later, walrus mustache revived, I walked in on the casting office at Sennett's and made my début in motion pictures as a Keystone cop at $3.00 a day. I donned my mustache the first day and it's been with me ever since."

"It feels funny to face that camera without my mustache," Conklin told me. "I feel silly. Maybe I'll look that way and become a comedian in a different vein. I'm a little afraid at getting up under those lights with an undressed upper lip. Those lights have strong rays and a surface that's been protected so long is likely to get sunburned or blistered when left on its own, with the odds so much against it.

BUT seriously, I'm a little glad to let the public see what I look like. It might save an embarrassing situation such as one that happened in a distant town not long ago.

"I was being shaved in a barber shop when the man who was shaving me said to another barber: 'They're shooting pictures here now. I'm going over. The only guy I want to see is Chester Conklin. I shaved Chet every day for six years in Oakland, California. He's a great fellow with a fine family—six pretty children. If I can meet him, perhaps I can collect that $7.00 he owes me.'

"As I started out the shop, I handed the barber my card and as he looked at me in surprise, I said, 'Of course I never saw you before in my life and the only time I was in Oakland was to take a ferry boat. I haven't any children and never borrowed $7.00 from you. But outside of those minor details, it was a good story and I wouldn't have spoiled it by spilling the beans for anything in the world.'

"Yes sir, my public will know me from now on—and I'm glad of it!"

Getting Personal

Intimate items about the stars not to be found elsewhere.

Bebe Daniels has a hand-carved 17th century Florentine bedstead with a jeweled bell cord, designed by the Mad Monk of Bavaria.

Ernest Torrence, one of Hollywood's foremost character actors, is said to be one of the most talented musicians in the motion picture field.

He is an expert pianist and frequently gives private recitals. He has studied at Stuttgart, Germany, and at the Royal Academy in London. Torrence is also equipped with a splendid baritone voice.

Although the fiery Raquel Torres was born in Mexico, her parentage is only half Mexican. Her mother is a native of Mexico, but her father is German.

Edward E. Horton

Edward Everett Horton has taken a house on Country Club Drive, in the ultra exclusive social center of Los Angeles. Eddie has an interesting Chinaman who controls his household—what John Chinaman tells him to eat, Eddie eats.

Charles Mack, of the famous Moran and Mack Two Black Crows team, was once a catcher in the old Pacific Coast baseball league, playing professional ball at the time Joe Tinker was starring in that circuit.

Harry Gribbon is not only a model husband but an exceptional one. He's actually letting his wife teach him how to drive his car!

Mary Duncan's dressing room is furnished entirely in modernistic furniture, yet she has a rural mail box at her estate in Bel-Air.

Henry King is chestily "measuring them off" for any of his friends who will listen. In Miami recently, he speared the largest swordfish of the season.

In case that fans believe that acting is not really work, Donald Reed can prove that as a lad in his teens he actually worked. The middle finger of his right hand is permanently shortened through his labor at a comptometer.

Lupe Velez

Lupe Velez has a cage of mechanical birds that sing, flutter their wings and twist their heads, when a crank is turned.

Norma Talmadge, Billie Dove, et al, may own deluxe apartment houses, Huntley Gordon his silk stocking factory, Dale Fuller her orange grove—but Edwin Carewe makes his idle money work for him in a more novel way. He collects garbage from the Ambassador, Beverly-Wilshire and other large hotels and converts it into fertilizer for ranchers in Petaluma!

Margaret Livingston may not believe in fortune-tellers, but hardly a week goes by without a consultation with a seer.

Nacio Herb Brown, who wrote the music to The Broadway Melody, has two huge diamonds set side by side in a plain platinum ring.

Bodil Rosing believes in mixing her drinks. Wait a minute before paging Mr. Volstead . . . Bodil refers to coffee and chocolate. She declares that if you mix the two—half and half—you will have a most delicious beverage.

Ken Maynard supports his parents in luxury, refusing to allow them to work.

Back from the Gay White Way, Estelle Taylor went down to Palm Springs for a few days' rest. After two days and two nights in the resort, she hurried home to Hollywood.

Estelle Taylor

"It was so quiet down there, I couldn't sleep!" she cried.

Miss Taylor has a collection of dolls. One of them wears a wig made from Estelle's own hair at the time she bobbed it.

Society in Cinemaland

Constance Talmadge a bride for the third time, but the reception later at her new $100,000 home in Beverly Hills was attended by many film celebrities.

I WONDER if Madame Glyn had met Ona Wilson Brown when she coined that much-discussed word "IT"—for certainly, Ona possesses IT to the nth degree. Her personality, in fact, fairly radiates IT.

As the wife of Clarence Brown, her parties were the smartest in Hollywood, and she entertained royally. It remained for us to see the result when she became "Ona Wilson Brown, former wife of Clarence Brown." Today, she is more popular than ever, has more friends and is entertained more than ever before.

DINNER and supper parties before and after the show featured the première of Warner Brothers' On With The Show, the first all-color-talking-singing picture. Prominent hostesses were Louise Fazenda, Helene Costello, Sally O'Neill, Estelle Taylor, Mrs. Norman Taurog and Lina Basquette.

Seen throughout the auditorium were so many dazzling blondes that Edouard Raquello declared himself quite dizzy. One of the loveliest of the "gentlemen preferred" was Claire Windsor, escorted by a Russian prince. Laura La Plante with her director husband. Betty Compson in peach-colored chiffon, with hers. Edna Murphy. Josephine Dunn. Louise Fazenda wears the most entrancing red wig in the color picture, so it was almost a shock to see her minus the flaming locks—not that she didn't look charming as usual.

Billy Bakewell came with his mother and the Johnny Mack Browns. Estelle Taylor with John Davidson. Helene Costello with the handsome young Cuban, Juan Toreno. There was Marceline Day jumping up and down with excitement because she had bobbed her hair. Arthur Lubin, home from triumphs on Broadway, surrounded by welcoming friends. Pauline Frederick and James Kirkwood.

ESTELLE TAYLOR'S farewell party at her beautiful home on Los Feliz Boulevard was a pleasant affair, as all her parties are. Guests danced or played bridge, according to the mood of the moment. There was a long distance call from Jack Dempsey in New York, regretting that he couldn't be present and wishing all his friends a happy evening.

Among the guests were the three Talmadge girls, Bebe Daniels, Harold and Mildred Lloyd, Ben Lyon, Gilbert Roland, Townsend Netcher, Buster Collier and Buster Keaton.

CELEBRATING the addition of a tennis court and swimming pool on his Beverly Hills estate, Charlie Chaplin gave a garden party recently, to which he invited thirty or more intimate friends.

Which Part Is Too Fat?

From Any Part of Body You Wish Reduced

THIS NEW WAY

"Good-bye fat arms legs and abdomen."

New Discovery Amazing Legions Who Failed to Reduce by Other Treatments and Methods

No Drugs, Diets, Exercise, Apparatus, Baths or Danger to Health to Be Feared!

5 to 10 Pounds Off in Two Weeks!

A new discovery now makes it possible for over-stout people to quickly reduce double chin, or fat bust, arms, abdomen, hips, legs or ankles at home. It's so easy and harmless that thousands who failed through other means are now getting amazing results in a few days' time.

This new external product is a white, dainty paste which you rub into any fat part you wish to reduce, at night, as you would a cream. But it is not a cream and does not contain a drop of water. And the effects are almost magic-like. The parts treated with this new scientific creation, called "COLLIPASTE," are quickly reduced in size and weight, because the paste penetrates and brings about a physiological reaction, heating the surplus fat layers under the skin, the excess fat then actually oozes out through the opened pores with excreted moisture, like perspiration.

Slenderizing the figure this new, easy way is meeting with hearty approval by physicians who warn against dangerous drugs and starvation diets. The success of COLLIPASTE will surely revolutionize methods of reducing, because it is pleasant and healthful to use at night, and works while you sleep. Get a jar now and take away those ugly, fatty, burdensome parts.

Send no money, simply mail coupon below to Dermolay Laboratories, Dept. 111 No. 1700 Broadway, New York, N. Y., for jar costing only $1.95. On arrival pay postman. If you are not more than pleased with reduction, your money will be refunded. Print address plainly.

Many Testimonials
Miss A. B. writes: "I have lost six pounds in two weeks. It really reduces the parts you use it on. I started reducing my hips and stomach and already feel like a new person."

EARLE LIEDERMAN, The Muscle-Builder

Author of "Muscle Building," "Science of Wrestling," "Secrets of Strength," "Here's Health," "Endurance, etc."

NEW BODIES in 24 hours

HAVE you ever watched a magician pick wriggling rabbits out of a high hat? A wonderful trick, you say. Well, I'm a magician of a different sort—a magician that builds health and strength into your body in just 24 hours. And it is no trick. It took me 19 years of tireless planning and experimenting to be able to do it.

People call me the Muscle-Builder, because I take weak, run-down bodies and transform them into strong, virile, handsome bodies in double-quick time. And I actually do it in 24 hours.

In the Privacy of Your Own Room

By this I do not mean that you must exercise 24 hours continuously. My scientific short-cut to healthy, handsome, broad-shouldered bodies must be taken in short 15 minute doses. Because, if you exercised more than that in my high-pressure, quick development way, you would tear down more than I can build up. So all I ask of you is 15 minutes of your spare time each day for 90 days (actually only 22½ hours time) doing simple, easy exercises under my guidance. You can do them in the privacy of your room, if you wish, but you must do them every day to get the best results.

And What Results!

In the first 30 days I guarantee to add one whole inch of real, live, muscle on each of your arms, and two whole inches of the same revitalizing strength across your chest. I'll take the kinks out of your back, strengthen and broaden your shoulders, give you a wrist of steel, and a fighting, peppy personality that just yells youth, vigor and vitality all over.

I Work Inside As Well As Out

Your heart, your liver, your kidneys, your lungs—all your internal organs get the jolt of their young lives when I start to work on them. And they settle down to an orderly, well-mannered existence that means a new kind of happiness for you—the joy of living that only a healthy, virile body can give you. And the headaches, constipation troubles, aches and pains that are always caused by weakened, flabby bodies somehow miraculously disappear.

You See It in Her Eyes

And will your friends notice the difference! Just watch that girl you love so dearly open her eyes, and fight to hold your attention! And the boys in your crowd—they'll look up to you as a real leader. Instinctively they worship strength and leadership that must go with it. But let me tell you all about it. All you have to do is

Classified Picture Guide

[Other reviews will be found on page 70]

DRAMA

BROADWAY—This is by far the finest picture Universal has produced since Foolish Wives, and that was long ago. It is a story of what goes on along the Great White Way and to help the whoopee along there are such characters as Detective Dan McCorn, Steve Crandall, bootlegger murderer, and Nick Verdis, villainous night club owner. Thomas E. Jackson, Broadway theatre star, plays McCorn and scores heaviest of all the cast. Robert Ellis, Paul Porcasi, Glenn Tryon, Evelyn Brent and Merna Kennedy also handle their rôles capably.—Universal.

GENTLEMEN OF THE PRESS—Walter Huston is recruited from the legit to play the part of Wickland Snell, newspaperman. His acting, and the work of supporting members, catches very clearly the heartbreak and the lure and the grind of the Fourth Estate. Kay Francis contributes a sparkling bit of work as the dangerous woman. The climax occurs when Snell's daughter lies in the throes of childbirth, dying, with Snell unable to leave his work because of the necessity of getting out an extra edition.—Paramount.

THE SQUALL—Myrna Loy scores another triumph—this time as Nubi, a gypsy girl who sweeps into the quiet life of a Hungarian peasant family, bringing havoc and seduction in her wake. Nubi is unmoral, hypnotic, entirely without restraint. You'll like this picture—on account of Nubi.—First National.

THE PAGAN—Ramon Novarro blossoms out as a singer and his rendition of The Pagan Love Song is one of the finest things he has done so far. The story concerns the struggle between Novarro as a half-caste who simply wants to be happy in his own way, and a white trader who seeks to exploit him, principally over the latter's adopted daughter.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

BULLDOG DRUMMOND—Here's one that will keep you guessing. Now it's comedy and now it's melodrama, and you're never sure which is which. Ronald Colman is the dashing young Englishman in the title rôle who sets out to find adventure and finds it, complete with damsel in distress. Barbara Bennett is the girl. This is a hair-raising picture and the auto chase at night exceeds the speed limit in thrills. —Samuel Goldwyn.

PRISONERS—Corinne Griffith, filmdom's fragile blossom of loveliness, is as beautiful as ever in this so-so picture. This time she is a cabaret singer who elects to follow the straight and narrow and gets a job in a pastry shop as one step in the right direction. Ian Keith is a struggling young lawyer who defends her against a false charge of stealing money—and then falls in love with her. Who wouldn't?—you will, too, when you see and hear her after her recent absence from the screen. —First National.

WHERE EAST IS EAST—For once Lon Chaney is a bad man with a good heart. Lupe Velez is his daughter and together they catch tigers all day long for circuses. The locale is somewhere East of Suez, and so, when Lloyd Hughes is all set to marry Lupe, along slinks Estelle Taylor as a half-caste vampire and the plot develops complications. You never saw Estelle look so—well, that way. It's perhaps her greatest chacterization.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

CAREERS—Billie Dove comes out in the talkies, with colors flying. Her voice is lovely and she has some excellent support in Antonio Moreno and Noah Beery. This is heavy drama, with a murder inserted to supply the thrill, which comes out in unwinding the mystery of who killed Beery.—First National.

MADAME X—Ruth Chatterton does an even better job of her rôle in this gem than she contributed in The Doctor's Secret. She is a lady of quality who slides into sin, leaving behind her a son. She commits murder, is defended by her son, unknown to either of them—and then, what a climax! Lewis Stone plays his part with power and Lionel Barrymore is the director. Don't miss this!—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

COMEDY

THE TIME, THE PLACE AND THE GIRL—Here is the old time musical comedy made into a bright and rollicking talkie. Grant Withers and Gertrude Olmstead are the loving pair, and Betty Compson, as the wife of Withers' boss, tries to seduce Grant and make it a triangle. There are more angles to this than a triangle and the picture is well worth seeing.—Warner Brothers.

JOY STREET—Lois Moran goes whoopee! She becomes the center of a rowdy crowd of carefree youngsters and she does the best acting of her career. Nick Stuart has the male lead, but Rex Bell steals the honors.—Fox.

Harry Carr's Private Line

grand opening of the picture, it up and died. All she could say over the radio that night was, "I—I have lost my pet duck."

Temperaments Remodeled

THE SHOW BOAT has sent Joseph Schildkraut's stock soaring to stardom. His is the case of a young man who saw the error of his ways. He used to be more temperamental than a grand opera star and more difficult to direct than a herd of young turkeys. He suddenly had a change of heart; became a good sport and began to climb.

Many Tongues

JOSEPH ought to be dear to the heart of the producers who think that our talkies must be made over for the European trade in all languages, including the Scandinavian. I don't know how Joe is on Swedish, but he speaks all the others, including Turkish, Rumanian, Hebrew, Modern Greek, French, German and English.

Clara Just Loves 'Em

CLARA BOW has hastened back from New York to deny that she is going to follow the example of Gene Tunney and refuse to see reporters. She admits that she wore a yellow wig, registered under an assumed name and dodged the newspapermen; but that was just one of Clara's little ways.

As to Clara and the talkies, by the way, I shall have to take it all back. I thought she would never be good in them. She is a knock-out. Clara is a knock-out in everything; even in newspaper interviews.

Gloria

GLORIA SWANSON'S troubles certainly began when Von Stroheim directed her. The picture has been shelved without being finished; and the income tax man is after Gloria. If he can make head or tail out of her tangled finances, he has something on Gloria. She can't.

The New Pictures

HAROLD LLOYD is negotiating for a device which will give ordinary picture film a stereopticon effect.

Mack Sennett says that within a year all pictures will be in color and on wide film—giving about twice the present scope. Also, all pictures will be talkies.

If these changes come to pass, the speaking stage is sunk. Since the advent of talkies, the New York stage has had one of the worst seasons in its history.

Von's Fall

VON STROHEIM has taken up his work as an actor with Jimmie Cruze as director, but I'll bet a nickel that he will be directing again before the year is out. Von brings grief to the producers and early gray hairs, but no one has ever equalled the quality of his work.

From Thrills to Trills

when you were four years old. You were starred on the stage at eight in The Prince Chap at the New York Valencia Theatre in San Francisco. After that you played with Lewis Stone in The Squaxman. The Child Labor officials came down and yanked you off the stage. Then you sneaked over to the Selig Studio and played in pictures. Then you went to the Bison One-Hundred-One Ranch studio and made westerns.

"After that you went back to the stage for a few years. When you were thirteen years old you heard that Harold Lloyd was looking for a leading lady and you" —

"And I borrowed my aunt's clothes and went to apply for the job! That was funny! You see, they wanted a blonde, but were kind enough to tell me that if Mr. Roach was satisfied they would condescend to use a brunette."

"Well, the condescension must have taken place, because you worked on the Roach lot for four years. Then Mr. De Mille—"

BEBE stepped in again. "No, no, no! If you keep on at that rate you'll be arrested for speeding. You're nowhere near the 'then Mr. De Mille' part. The truth is, I wanted to do drama. I enjoyed comedy, but I felt that I was meant for bigger and better things. So just before my contract expired, I told Mr. Roach that I had signed with another company. Of course, they all wanted to know who, especially Harold Lloyd. He said, 'Why, you can tell me, Bebe. You know I'll never tell.' But I said: 'No, I can't even tell you, because I promised on my word of honor that I wouldn't tell a living soul.'

"They gave me a big farewell party on the lot the day I left and again asked me to tell where I was going. Gee, but I would have been so glad to have known. I would have shouted it from the housetops but as it was, I merely pretended to be very mysterious and said: 'Oh, I can't tell you now, because I want to break it in a big way.'

"Some time previous to the expiration of my Roach contract, Mr. De Mille had told me that if I ever left Roach that he would like to have me call on him. I took a chance and sent a note and some pictures over to him, saying that if he were still interested, I was now at leisure. He sent for me immediately and I went to see him. I felt so big and important that I walked right in and said: 'Well, Mr. De Mille, you must have seen some of our comedies.' 'Yes, I have,' he said, 'and if I ever see another one, I won't give you a contract.'

WELL, I guess he never saw another one because he gave me a contract which lasted four years. I played in such pictures as Why Change Your Wife? The Affairs of Anatol, and others on the same order.

"Then they gave me a new contract which put me back in comedies again! True, it was a new type of comedy, with an athletic trend to it, but still comedy. I made running pictures, swimming pictures, racing pictures—that is, when I wasn't in the hospital with a broken-something-or-other. Every picture ended with a big chase of some kind."

"And then came the talkies." I felt it was about time I put in a word.

"And saved my life," Bebe finished for me; "really, I had broken every bone in my body and if I had kept on with those thrillers I would have had to start in on re-breaks. I had always loved music and I began the study of it in real earnest. After many vocal lessons, RKO gave me a voice test and a contract.

I'LL never forget that voice test. I thought it would be simple after having been on the stage so long, but all my first nights, personal appearances and impromptu speeches never gave me the dose of shakes that that voice test gave me.

"The following day I was to hear the result of my painful experience. I dreaded that more than I did taking the test. We got into the projection room and something went wrong with the machine. We had to wait for a half-hour before it was fixed. I shook so that Mr. Reed told me I was shaking him off his seat, and he was three chairs away. Finally they got started. I couldn't believe that the voice was mine. I guess we never know what our own voices sound like, for everyone said: 'Oh, how natural!'

IT COULDN'T have been as bad as I thought it was, for they gave me the lead in Rio Rita. They had that much faith in me. I am making every effort to uphold and keep that faith. I have put myself in the place of a child going to school. I study, study, study hours and hours every day. I practice scales and scales and then some more scales and they are very uninteresting things, but it is the only way to train my voice.

"My instructors do not give me any more privileges than they do other pupils. I wouldn't permit them to. When it is time for my lesson, that is when I take it, no matter what else it interferes with.

"Well, I may break a vocal cord, but there'll be no more broken backs, broken legs, concussions of the brain. No more track work, no more high dives, no more jumping over cliffs, no more climbing steeples, no more dangling from dizzy heights at the end of a rope, no more racing automobiles, or motor boats. Just everlasting security in a land of peace and harmony.

"From thrills to trills is right!"

Flower of the Lumber Camps

Each year her grandfather acquired more lumber land until he had 1,000 acres and was considered one of Idaho's lumber kings. He had several camps in different districts and one camp near the Clearwater river was particularly beautiful. It was at this camp that she spent her summers with her family when she was a little tot.

LOGS shooting down wood flumes from the mountains above and carried along by sparkling, swift moving water until they dipped head first into the river. Bumping along in carts, over corduroy roads, bordered in fragrant giant ferns. Watching those big woods acrobats, the "river rats," riding the logs out in deep water. Those are all childhood memories of the Pathé star.

"Father had warned us that some day, the wolves might come down from the hills and frighten us. 'Never run away from them,' he had instructed me. 'Face it out and they will be frightened and not harm you.'

"So, one afternoon, when we were trudging home from school, we heard those fearful wolf calls far away. And they came nearer and nearer until we saw the beasts themselves come into a valley at the foot of a hill we were approaching. It took all the bravery we could muster to stand still, and clasping hands tightly, face them with a bold front. 'Daddy says we must not run away from them,' I kept repeating. 'Instead, we will walk toward them and perhaps that will frighten them away.' And so we two children walked down the hill and the wolves sat and looked us over and finally, when they had their fill of looking, walked off and left us alone."

HER love of music and her ability as a musician brought her into her first contact with motion pictures, for in Wadena, she played better than any girl in town, and so, at fourteen, she was in demand at the local picture house to play accompaniments for the movies. There were no afternoon performances, and pictures were shown only two evenings a week, so she earned the munificent sum of $1.00 a night and had the largest and stiffest pink taffeta hair-ribbons of any girl in school.

"The arts are all akin," runs an old adage, and undoubtedly Jeanette Loff's musical ability has helped her to better interpret drama, grace in pantomime and to readily adapt herself to the art of acting.

When she was seventeen, her family moved to Portland, Oregon, and that gave Jeanette a chance to complete her musical education at the Portland Conservatory of Music. She studied voice there, which, by the way, is going to be a great help to her in the talking and singing screen plays, and she became such a good organist that one of the largest picture houses in Portland engaged her to play.

I LOVED my music and I have always wanted to keep on with it, but more and more, I began to take an interest in the work of the players and I grasped quite a lot about picture technique by watching the same picture run over and over again at different performances. It didn't seem to me I'd be quite satisfied until I could play, too. So, during a summer vacation, I joined a musical stock company for experience using the name of 'Jan Love.'

"Then I almost went out on a chautauqua tour. Didn't. Took a run down to Hollywood instead. Thought it would be fun to do some bits in pictures to find out what it was all about."

Two astute casting directors gave her bits in Young April and Uncle Tom's Cabin. Instead of going home when her bit was done, she sat on the edge of the sets and learned by watching the others. Then came her lucky break.

Cecil De Mille glimpsed her and asked her to take a screen test. Cast in a serial. Then a lead with Rod La Rocque in Hold 'Em Yale and Love Over Night. Then a really big job.

TO MAKE good as the featured lead in Annapolis! She was assigned to this part and given one day to pack her trunks to depart for the east. Government officials had consented to let the Pathé company use the United States Naval Academy grounds for the making of the picture.

After he saw Annapolis, Sam Goldwyn wished to take over Jeanette Loff's contract from Pathé and have her play leads opposite Ronald Colman, but Pathé would not let her go.

Now she is being coached in voice and rehearsing in famous plays, between pictures, her instructors being two of New York's most famous stage directors, Frank Reicher and Anthony Brown of the Theater Guild.

Jeanette Loff is modest, obliging and has much latent common sense. She is sincere in her work, has a good disposition, but is not easily imposed upon. The fans who write to her come from two widely divergent kinds of people. She has masses of letters from Argentine and South American youths. American men may prefer blondes, but Argentinians demand them.

Her other group of admirers includes bankers and intellectuals, for she is receiving some of the highest type of fan mail that comes to any star in Hollywood.

She has been married once, and undergone a sort of friendly separation. But she doesn't want to marry again—anyhow, not at once, for her career comes first.

And it's no small feat for a beautiful iris from the north woods to keep from wilting in hectic Hollywood!

GROW—

Yes, Grow Eyelashes and Eyebrows like this in 30 days

THE most marvelous discovery has been made—a way to make eyelashes and eyebrows actually grow. Now if you want long, curling, silken lashes, you can have them—and beautiful, wonderful eyebrows.

I say to you in plain English that no matter how scant the eyelashes and eyebrows, I will increase their length and thickness in 30 days—or not accept a single penny. No "ifs," "ands," or "maybes." It is new growth, startling results, or no pay. And you are the sole judge.

Proved Beyond the Shadow of a Doubt

Over ten thousand women have tried my amazing discovery, proved that eyes can now be fringed with long, curling natural lashes, and the eyebrows made intense, strong silken lines! Read what a few of them say. I have made oath before a notary public that these letters are voluntary and genuine. From Mlle. Heffelfinger, 240 W. "B" St., Carlisle, Pa.: "I certainly am delighted . . . I notice the greatest difference . . . people I come in contact with remark how long and silky my eyelashes appear." From Naomi Otstot, 5437 Westminster Ave., W. Phila., Pa.: "I am greatly pleased. My eyebrows and lashes are beautiful now." From Frances Raviart, R. D. No. 2, Box 179, Jeanette, Penn.: "Your eyelash and eyebrow beautifier is simply marvelous." From Pearl Provo, 2954 Taylor St., N. E., Minneapolis, Minn.: "I have been using your eyebrow and eyelash Method. It is surely wonderful." From Miss Flora J. Corriveau, 8 Pinette Ave., Biddeford, Me.: "I am more than pleased with your Method. My eyelashes are growing long and luxurious."

Results Noticeable in a Week

In one week—sometimes in a day or two—you notice the effect. The eyelashes become more beautiful—like a silken fringe. The darling little upward curl shows itself. The eyebrows become sleek and tractable—with a noticeable appearance of growth and thickness. You will have the thrill of a lifetime—know that you can have eyelashes and eyebrows as beautiful as any you ever saw.

Remember . . . in 30 days I guarantee results that will not only delight, but amaze. If you are not absolutely and entirely satisfied, your money will be returned promptly. I mean just that—no quibble, no strings. Introductory price $1.95. Later the price will be regularly $5.00.

I Can't Make Whoopee

but I am so happy, I need a much, much bigger house for running!

"I am trying not to scream so much," says Lupe earnestly, "but it is so hard for me to keep still. When I go hunting with Gary he says, 'Now, dear, when you see the ducks flying this way be very quiet.' I am quiet for a few minutes. But when the ducks are in the air I shout, 'Darling, look. There they are.' And it spoils all the shooting!"

I ASKED her what kind of whoopee little girls could make in Mexico that would be barred in Hollywood.

"Go to bull fights and scream and get excited," she exclaimed, brown eyes glowing. "Flirt more. Be gay on fiesta days. Flirt. Dance in such beautiful ballrooms in the hotels of the City of Mexico. Flirt. Ride along tree-lined avenues past fine mansions two hundred years old. Flirt.

"We Latins are different. We show our feelings always. Nobody suppresses us when we are happy!

"You see, I make whoopee in my own way. But I do not want to do wrong. My public, they tell me and write to me that they love me. If I do wrong I am afraid they will not love me any more. That is why Lupe does not want to make more whoopee!"

I WANT to make a lot of money and a lot of love," Alice White is quoted as saying.

That sounded like whoopee at the very start.

Studio officials when they signed her, studied the facts concerning their new star's life. Her parents had died while she was very young, leaving her to be brought up by two doting grandparents. And grandparents are universally known as experts at spoiling the young. Some tactful parental discipline had to be provided and it was up to the studio to do it.

So they put a "conscience clause" in her contract. She is the only star in Hollywood to sign an agreement containing such a clause.

The "conscience clause" runs something like this: "If party of the second part is worried by any actions in her private life, she must consult with producer or party of the first part, and if she has violated the rules of ordinary conduct, she must ask forgiveness."

The adroit assumption is that Alice would never repeat an error a second time!

"I feel just as I did before I took off the required ten pounds and became a star," she says. "And I'm not making big money yet, so when I blow mine, it isn't like the Fourth of July."

I WANT to do my own Christmas shopping," says Clara Bow. "I'm always giving people the wrong things because I didn't pick them out. I'd like to go to premières and to football games, and to new restaurants to sample the food. But it's impossible."

When they make a waxwork statue of "Hollywood Whoopee" for the museums, they'll pick on Clara Bow for the model. Whenever there's a wild party in Centertown, Missouri, the village devil proves he is alive by wishing Clara were there.

But the party might quiet down perceptibly. Clara would be the square peg. She has no spotlight complex. She'd either break away early, or shrink in a corner and let some other girl be the noisy centrifugal force. She hates public places.

"I get one of my greatest kicks out of swimming in the ocean or driving in an open car with my hair flying in the wind.

"If you are young, and have pep, and have to cut out the things other people can do in public, you can change your whoopee tastes around to suit your own lot in life," says Clara, philosophically.

ALL I'm looking for is the right man," Joan Crawford told her friends two years ago. "When I do, I'll settle down and stop making whoopee."

They laughed at her—and with her—and behind her back. They razzed her in the same relative positions. The whoopee set knew life—and nature. A girl who liked hilarity, gaiety, popularity with a host of attractive chaps, a continual good time, couldn't survive without excitement—that was just one of Joan's momentary depressions.

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., was cast in a stage play. Joan Crawford visited the theatre one night, and after she saw him, she realized she had found the man she wanted. Now Douglas and Joan are Mr. and Mrs.

Joan has become very ardently domestic, and taken on new dignity of conduct to more readily fit into the clan Fairbanks.

She is busy furnishing a new house she has recently bought—a large, rambling Spanish dwelling with a rolling green lawn in front, flanked by big trees and a walled patio at one side and by a charming flower garden on the other extreme.

Joan still makes a dress or so for herself when she has time. She often tells the colored butler and his wife to go to a movie so she can cook dinner for her new hubby. She doesn't go out to after-theater suppers any more or to the night clubs to dance. Joan used to throw her money away uselessly. Now she finds more pleasure in buying something for the new home.

"I don't make whoopee any more, because I love 'Do-Do,'" Joan will tell you, with her firm chin well up. "That's the simple reason."

Vamping as is Vamping!

held a cigarette which she studied with her wide, blue eyes beneath long, curling, black lashes. Let's hurry up and have color photography, so that we can see the color of Mary Duncan's eyes! It is fatal to look into those eyes—as fatal as to listen to the song of the Lorelei. Instantly you feel yourself drowning, drowning in their blue depths. And drowning is such a pleasant death. You simply don't want to be saved.

TAKE Manon Lescault," she was saying, "now there was a vamp for you! She really intended to be true to each of her lovers, but well—somehow love led her from one man to another. But there was nothing hard or mercenary about her. She was a girl who could hold men, who could drive them to distraction—and often did. There is a rôle that I would like to play on the screen some time!

"Screen vampires should be like that —soft, tender and yielding, awakening the protecting instinct in man. Modern life has changed woman. It has made it almost necessary for her to be hard and shrewd to hold her place in the fierce struggle for existence. But it hasn't changed man so much, he still likes to be the dominant male, and the woman who can appeal to that instinct in him is likely to be the successful vamp."

Life has been very kind to Mary. Perhaps it has fallen under her spell. Practically everything she has wanted has been granted her, not without work, but without the struggle that hardens and embitters.

Her first picture was Four Devils, with Janet Gaynor, Charles Morton and Barry Norton. Then came The River, with Charles Farrell; The City Girl, and Through Different Eyes, a difficult picture in which she plays her part three ways as seen by three different people.

Now she is going to play the attractive rôle of the San Francisco cabaret singer who went to hell, but kept her return ticket, in The Man Who Came Back.

Perhaps this may prove to be the kind of a vamp rôle that Mary would like to play. After all, it takes will power to come back from hell, even with a return ticket in your pocket. But will power is something that lovely ladies of the type that Mary would like to play have everything else but.

Come on, Mr. Fox, be a good sport. Let Mary play the kind of vamp rôles she wants to play!

Fan Letters Saved Me!

saved and started for the land of my dreams.

WELL, I got by. They seemed to like my nerve, for I was given a letter to the casting director at Lasky's studio. Mother and I lost no time getting there with that letter. We were admitted at once. It was the first time I had ever been inside the casting office proper. I was so nervous I could hardly wait my turn to see the casting director. I felt all hands and feet and no place to put either.

"When they finally got to me, they told me they were looking for a little girl to play Wendy in Peter Pan. Herbert Brenon had been in New York, but he was returning, and they had to find Wendy. I was sent to Mr. Lasky. I was nervous before, but I was ill with fear now. Mr. Lasky asked me if I had had any screen experience. I said, 'No, but I know I can act.'

"Mr. Lasky smiled, 'You're rather sure of yourself, aren't you?'

"Sure of myself? Of course, I was sure of myself. Hadn't I always intended to be a motion picture actress? Well, they looked me over, sent me to the wardrobe for a long night gown and looked some more. Then Mr. Lasky said, 'Well, I guess you're worth a test any way.'

MOTHER and I went home, each afraid to speak our mind, but I knew that she was praying as only a mother can pray.

"That night the telephone rang. It was the studio. I almost fainted. I just knew it was bad news—only bad news travels so fast. But it wasn't! It was the greatest news I had ever heard. I was so dazed that it seemed a voice from another world was saying, 'You got the part, Mary. Mr. Lasky had to leave for New York, so we rushed the test through for him to see.'

"I was under contract to Lasky's but I did little work there. I was loaned to all the other studios—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer borrowed me to play Brown of Harvard; Fox borrowed me, First National also had a part for me. Then came the talkies! Really, I thought it was Texas for me. But a voice test and fan mail saved me. In fact, I think it was my fans who really saved me, for had they forgotten me the voice test probably would never have come.

"So you see, I do owe everything to my darling Mother. My dreams have not all come true but they have a good start."

But I think Mary's original dreams have come true—these others are new ones which, believing in Mary, we know will also come true.

THRILLS

By Lillian Thrasher

THE LIGHTS OF OLD BROADWAY bring out the Daughters of the Night on Dress Parade, who, whether Blonde or Brunette, are but Kindred of the Dust and Playthings of Desire.

Sadie Thompson, A Daughter of Two Worlds, was Coming Through Quality Street In Little Old New York and spied Beau Brummel, Our Leading Citizen.

She had become Woman Wise after learning the sad lesson Why Girls Leave Home in an attempt at Beating the Game. Life's Twists had indeed given her Something to Think About. Trouble Makers and Scandalous Tongues of Meddling Women had driven the Moral Sinner from The Old Nest Down on the Farm where, with Mother O' Mine, Old Dad and her Sisters, Sally, Irene and Mary, The Country Flapper had lived happily until A Sainted Devil had entered Love's Wilderness.

HER prospective victim was a Son of the Sheik On Easy Street who had been used to Soft Living until Shanghaied by Captain Blood, East of Suez, on His Night Out. Lately he had been Going Straight, but tonight he felt like Bucking the Tiger and was In Search of a Sinner.

A Pair of Silk Stockings attracted the Eyes of Youth and the Altars of Desire lured him on to Hell's High Road for One Exciting Night in a trip to Eden and Return. Always Audacious, The Danger Girl grew Very Confidential and exclaimed, Stop! Look and Listen, Excuse Me, Sonny, but Mum's the Word—Feel My Pulse!

I have only Five Days to Live and even if I am only So Big, Let's Be Fashionable and have a drink After the Show. The Silk Legs of The Branded Woman, her Red Hair, and the Faint Perfume from her Civilian Clothes, warned him that it was Dangerous Business to consort with A Lost Lady.

I FEEL that I should be Calling the Cop said the Don Juan, but you seem to be Almost a Lady and look like A Regular Scout. The Drums of Jeopardy are sounding In the Heart of a Fool, warning me that It's the Old Army Game wherein A Fool and His Money soon part, and that it is Midsummer Madness to flirt with you. But that's Mamma's Affair. Why Worry When Love Grows Cold?

The Untamed Lady noted the Flames of Desire in the eyes of The Talker and agreed to The Rendezvous because She Couldn't Help It. She knew it was The Woman's Place to seize The Wonderful Chance to tread the Coast of Opportunity, but there would be The Devil to Pay if she used Too Much Speed and let The Sheik in Wolf's Clothing get away. They walked down The Street Called Straight to The Palace of Darkened Windows and entered Through the Back Door with The Devil's Pass Key. Bell Boy 13 preceded them up The Winding Stair Through the Dark to a Paradise for Two.

The Grey Dawn was breaking when The Veiled Adventure ended and The Woman and The Love Expert started for home. Life's Darn Funny! They met The Little Girl Next Door in the hall, who proved to be Sally, her Kid Sister. She had reached the Age of Desire and had No Defense for the One Wild Week she had spent with Dr. Jim in a tour of The Underworld. Cheap Kisses and Broadway Gold had lured her on The False Road and The Love Trap had closed on her with Jaws of Steel.

This unexpected meeting was The Turning Point for The Outside Woman and The Kid! They had crossed The Bridge of Sighs and The Cup of Life was running brimful for them. It had been Risky Business in their quest of The Right to Love and the Two Girls Wanted and did return to Daddy, The Good Provider.

Rich Richard's Almanac

such wide popularity for him among the motion picture public carried him to the center of student activities, and his natural initiative and sense of fun set him at the head of them. He became a member of the Psi Upsilon fraternity, and coming events cast their shadow before when he was elected president of the college dramatic club, the Jesters. He was usually leading man in the college plays, and practically always he was stage director and property man. And, in addition, he sang in the Glee Club, and was cheer leader in his senior year.

FORTUNE has favored Dick at many times and in many ways. It was in the merest nick of time that he was saved from missing the big opportunity which came from Nazimova's fateful idea. And it was his mother who saved him. Dick was on the way downtown to sign for a naval training cruise. His mother took a taxicab, reached the naval bureau just as Dick was about to write his name on the dotted line, and told him of the part that was open to him in War Brides.

Dick became one of the most popular leading men on the American screen, and then, a star. His first starring picture in his own right was Tol'able David, and he still thinks that the title rôle was the best portrayal he has ever done. After Tol'able David came a series of pictures that comprised Fury, Sonny, The Bond Boy, The Fighting Blade, Seventh Day, Twenty-One, The Beautiful City, The Bright Shawl, New Toys, Just Suppose, The Enchanted Cottage, Classmates, Soul Fire, Shore Leave, Ranson's Folly, The Amateur Gentleman, The White Black Sheep, The Patent Leather Kid, The Drop Kick, The Noose, The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come, The Wheel of Chance, Out of the Ruins and Scarlet Seas.

His first talking production was Weary River, a First National-Vitaphone picture which achieved one of the greatest successes of his career, its theme song being sung and whistled not only up and down the length and breadth of the Republic, but also taking Europe in its melodious stride. Drag is his second vehicle in the new form of screen entertainment.

SO PLEASANT is Dick Barthelmess' manner, and so universally is he liked by those who know him, that it is surprising to learn that he is one of the most temperamental of all stars while working on the set. He is easy to get along with, but he possesses a nature of peculiar sensitiveness, and unless he feels that a director is sympathetic, he finds it impossible to act before camera and microphone. The directors who have worked with him have learned not to prompt him during a scene. Such interference seems to upset Dick's balance and weaken his grasp of the rôle, and generally the whole scene has to be done over again. But he is always open-minded and receptive to suggestions before or after the actual making of a scene.

He believes in the future of motion pictures and of talking pictures—believes that the art is still in its infancy and hopes to aid in its progress to higher and wider levels of achievement. This hope is quite likely to be fulfilled, for the development of the movies and talkies mainly depends, in the last analysis, on intelligence, and Dick Barthelmess is one of the stars who has brains and knows how to use them.

Six thousand people, on an average, write to him every month. He sits on top of the world, a hard-working, hard-playing young man whose rise to fame will always fill a brilliant page in the history of motion pictures.

And it has all come about because Nazimova had a happy thought 15 years ago!

Cinema Slants

MOST of the members of the Actors' Equity Association have taken tests for talking pictures, and in connection with two of them an interesting story is to be told. They happen to be husband and wife. The husband was an obscure actor who was given employment on the stage solely because his wife, who was a big star, insisted on having him in her companies.

While they were playing in Los Angeles, the wife was asked to make a screen test (this was in the days of the silent films) and she took her husband along to the studio to help her through the ordeal. He appeared with her in the test, and when the officials of the movie corporation looked at the resultant film they realized that, although the famous wife screened badly, the unknown husband came through extraordinarily well.

So he was given a movie contract and became prosperous. She returned to the stage and subsequently dropped out of sight.

Then came the talkies, and the now-celebrated husband was called upon to make a test before the microphone. He had never been much of an actor on the stage, and was nervous about delivering lines, so he asked his experienced wife to coach him and support him in the sound studio. She did so—and this time, when the executives saw and heard the results, they discovered that the husband was a flop on the Movietone, while the wife was marvelously effective.

Now she is up and he is down—and if O. Henry were alive, he'd tell this tale a lot better than I can.

mustache curlers and investments, of which he has plenty. He intended replenishing his wardrobe first thing, and evidently did so, since suits went up 200 per cent in price for a while, Adolphe having probably commandeered all the available cloth in sight.

ADOLPHE'S something like John Gilbert in that way. Whenever Gilbert came tae toon, the price of flowers immediately jumped skyward. Why? Because Jawn would corner the floral market, buying them up for romantic uses with the phrailer sex.

Menjou, I regret to state, is temporarily out of a job. He's just finished a whopper of a contrack with Paramount. He may, however, go back with Mr. Lasky's little group—but not on a sub-treasury salary basis. He'll probably do three more pictures. His last talkie, Fashions in Love, has turned out so swello he looks like a good noise bet. Menjou has a deep bass voice, you know, and there isn't any voice he hasn't practiced in lovemaking on the silencies. He loves to give imitations of Rin-Tin-Tin to show the power and range of his low notes. Well, no noise is really good noise, y'know.

Of one thing I'm sure. I'd hate to see Menjou go down before the squawkies. He's too accomplished an actor and too natural a camera-genius. I'm sure Mr. Lasky and Mr. (Heavy) Zukor (Daddy) would be committing homicide to let him go.

Why not hold a blindfold test to determine his popularity? This'd be the way. Get a theatre full of blindfolded girls. Flash bits of silent film showing Barrymore, Gilbert, Dix, Colman and Menjou! Then let the phrails pick out the one who made them tremble with the strength of his sex-appeal. Who'dya think would win? Menjou everytime. Yeah, bo!

As for myself, I'd be willing to sit on a body of men and judge whether he ought to go. I suppose you'd call such a group a menjoury, nesser par?

For No Reason, I'm Reminded

NOT long ago a famous Hollywood director married the girl after a long, notorious courtship. The girl's mother, being a witty and much relieved person, sent around the following wedding announcement:

SOPHIE TUCKER, the "last of the red-hot mamas," is singing a sob song about the purity of Hollywood at the Palace this week. Sophie's singie, Honky-Tonk, is turning 'em away. . . . . Dick Barthelmess sneaked in and out of town on a short holiday and was hardly seen at any of the better night clubs; nor, in fact, at any of the worse. He came on business, mostly to wangle an extra thou a week out of First National. He's getting only nine grand now or something in the neighborhood, but is he happy? Why, yes!...Jack Buchanan, Charlot Revue favrit, and dollink of the Piccadilly, hopped off a Lunnon liner and into a train for Hollywood on his way to support Irene Bordoni in Paris, for First National. Jack Dempsey and Georges Carpentier, former barons of the cauliflower industry, who once spent four rounds together, spent a pleasant afternoon at the same Astoria studios, but, unfortunately, didn't meet. They came as guests of Mary Eaton, she of The Cocoanuts and G. the A. G., on different afternoons ...Margaret Wycherly, long associated with the Theatre Guild and splendid dramatic actress, has left for Hollywood to work in a Metro talkie...Sil Vara, whose Caprice was one of the Guild hits of the past season, has also been snatched up by Hollywood for original plays, plots and what he has...Jack Yellen (make your own wisecrack) and Milton Agar've hit the trail to Metro, too, to do some creative musical writing... Universal has gone highbrow and hired Professor Walter B. Pitkin, one of the counterjumpers at an intellectual bargain basement known as Columbia University in the City of New York, to come to Universal City for the summer and inject Platonic hypotheses and comic sections into their pictures... Three youngsters, claiming they were once Our Gang kids, are on the Palace bill this week. They are pretty awful ...That's about all, excepting, has it ever struck you that the way to solve the director's yes-men problem on sound stages is to get them from the deaf and dumb asylums? Chippie-chip till the October issue!

Three Brothers

of the year-and-a-half step-ladder procession, who did the drawing.

And that's the way, never printed before, that the Moore family chanced to come to America.

IT'S a long step from the edge of the bridge to stardom in pictures, and the husband of Mary Pickford and Kathryn Perry—but Owen Moore took it; it's a long way from the side-seater "jaunting car" to popular leading man and the husband of Alice Joyce and Renee Adoree—but Tom Moore has done it; it's a big stride from being the baby of six in a thatched cottage in Ireland to a gorgeous bachelor home at Santa Monica and continued success in the movies—but Matt Moore has made it. It's a feat to work from Ireland to Toledo, to New York and Hollywood and become so well-known that a motion picture is written in your honor so that you may play in it—but the Three Moore Brothers have done it. Side Street, one of this season's RKO feature releases, was conceived by Mal St. Clair from the life story of the Moore brothers and they will be collectively starred in it! This is the first time that the three shall have appeared in a screen or stage production together. The picture will be a regular family affair, with Kathryn Perry, who is Mrs. Owen Moore in private life, in the leading feminine rôle.

I talked with all three of the Moore brothers in the interest of this story. They all agreed on one thing: "We don't like to talk about ourselves, but we love to talk about our mother!"

Ah! If she had only lived to play the mother rôle in this picture. The rôle which she herself created in the mind of Malcolm St. Clair while he was exchanging jokes with her!

In the picture one will be a policeman. Tom! Who else but Tom, with his broad-shouldered, black-haired, typical policeman manner! Tom, who has never lost the Irish brogue nor the Irish twinkle in his eyes! Another—an interne. Matt! The intellectual member of the family and the one possessed with a one hundred per cent reserved manner. And the third, a racketeer. Owen!

BROTHER Tom brought Matt into the theatrical profession. Tom was playing one night stands with a small company in Michigan. He had a chance at something bigger and suggested that Matt replace him.

"Has he had experience?" the manager inquired.

"Oh, lots of it!" Tom conveniently forgot that brother had never seen the back stage of a theatre. He wired Matt a lengthy telegram asking him if he would relieve him in Sheboygan, Michigan. Matt wired back one word: "Yes."

IT WAS Owen who pulled Matt into the movies! Owen, by the way, was playing talking pictures twenty years before they were discovered. He stood behind the screen and spoke the lines of the different movie characters. His brothers laugh today when they describe him running from one end to the screen, behind stage, to another and speaking in the voice of a woman one moment and an old man the next.

Matt was playing for eighteen dollars a week in Texas when he chanced to see brother Owen in a movie. That reminded him that he should write home. As a result word reached him that Owen was actually receiving $50 a week for flicker-acting! "I decided to save enough money to get to New York City. It took me a year and a half! Owen was leading man for Florence Lawrence. I became juvenile. At that time we were about the same weight and height and looked much alike. I wore his clothes. When one would exit and the other enter you could scarcely tell us apart. It became so confusing that Pat Powers asked, 'Which one was in that shot? This is too much. One of you will have to go—' That was fifteen years ago. I went, but I had my start in pictures!"

TO TELL the story of these three lads in one story is out of the question. They are an integral part of the history, the romance, the progress of pictures. They even had a hand in The Miracle Man, as it was Owen and Matt who met George Loane Tucker when he arrived in Hollywood with a script in his hand, but no knowledge of where to find his players, his cameramen or his set-pushers. Both had opportunities to play in it. They could not accept, but they did direct Tucker to all of those who helped him to create one of the greatest dramas ever filmed.

Taking it all in all, these three have seen little of each other. At the cottage of their mother; at the bedside of some member of the family. On the street; sometimes on the same studio lot where two of them chanced to be playing in separate productions. During the long years they have been separated, they have not corresponded.

For the first time in years they are really coming together! Their off-hand family experiences are about to be recorded. A fiction has been wound about them. Owen was fired the only time two of them worked together because of the family resemblance. But this time—it is because of that resemblance that the three little lads who crossed the bridge and watched their older brother draw the slip from the hat, the slip marked America, are going to stand side by side and be starred as one in a picture.

My Life Among the Stars

why was I really marrying this fellow? I ran away! Back to Hollywood. Not until I had definitely accomplished something for the name of Betty Compson would I change it.

They have always said that The Miracle Man was my first serious picture. It wasn't. The Light of Victory, at Universal, gave me my first dramatic opportunity. And it gave me the courage to apply for the other.

George Loane Tucker, who made Traffic in Souls, sent for me to come to the Athletic Club to talk to him about this picture. Will I ever forget it? I hired a cab a block from the club so I could ride up in elegant splendor. It was December 23, 1918. If I didn't get this part, it would be a rather woeful Christmas.

THAT interview just happened to bring out the real Betty Compson. Life was—well, I was an idealist one moment, and a complete cynic the next. At first, the young girl who had played the classics on her violin and lived the great thoughts they had portrayed, while she was playing. And again, the woman who had been battered and bruised by Hollywood's screeching rabble—that rabble which screeches for fame and for show and for tinseled honors. Of course, that was the type of woman they were looking for in The Miracle Man. A woman who could combine idealism of the highest order with cynicism of the lowest. It was the logical point of my life to play such a part; it was logical that I should be chosen.

I had G. L. T. call me a taxi, which I dismissed at the corner. I stopped in a drug store to get a cup of chocolate. I was like wet rabbit's fur. My soul hung limp and worn within me, I had so exposed it to the man who had interviewed me. At that time I didn't care much whether he gave me the part or he didn't. But when I reached home, having walked to settle the turmoil within me, he had called three times.

When he called again, he gave me the greatest Christmas present—the lead in The Miracle Man and $150 a week to play it. "Come up on Christmas morning and talk it over," he ordered.

IT WAS a morning I shall always remember. "You must give up your love affairs, Betty. The people who play in this picture must be inspired."

It wasn't only the work which did the inspiring. It was Director George Loane Tucker. He did the same to all of us—Thomas Meighan, Lon Chaney. Even Phil Rossen, the cameraman, became a director when it was finished. But because I was a woman as well as an actress, he inspired not only my soul but my whole being. And when a woman allows a man to inspire her whole being—well, need I add that I fell in love with Tucker? Really in love, this time—not just a momentary emotional transition. He was my God and my hero, just as my father had been to my mother.

AH, THEN for six months I didn't see him. He had a screen put around his bed at the Clara Barton hospital and a place arranged where I could stand that he might see me, but where I couldn't see his sunken, wasted condition. I would stand there by the hour, dressed in my prettiest costumes, gowns purchased just because I thought he would like them. I would bring soup, flowers, delicacies, but never once try to look at him. His wishes were my desires. When he died—do you know that I think a woman loses something to every man as well as gains something from him? Of course, G. L. T. was a man who could have said of either man or woman: "I have taken something from him, yet I have left him with more than he had when he first met me." He took something from the life of Betty Compson, but he left her with a memory which can never be forgotten.

I took a home, when, one day, up bobbed Frank Urson. "Jimmy Cruze is going to make North of 36. I'm going to co-direct it. You should play the lead. Come on, I'm going to take you out there and have you renew your acquaintance."

On the way out, Frank stopped the car on the Flintridge highway. "Don't fall in love with Jimmy Cruze," he warned me. "Please don't, Betty!" he pleaded.

Now, of course, when anyone tells you not to do anything, you are the more susceptible. I walked into that house—already so famous for its huge parties, its nonchalant entertaining—and looked into the eyes of the host and director.

He had a two-weeks' beard, for he was to play a heavy in the picture. By the way, he never made it. He had on his head the big sombrero which he wears frequently to typify the hacienda. "How would you like to give me a kiss?" he greeted me, gaily. "I think I'd like to, in spite of the whiskers," I answered. Somehow, in a few moments we were in the patio, alone with each other.

WHY don't you marry me, Betty? One year from today I'll be a free man. I got my first decree through the mail yesterday. You've worked long enough. Why don't you settle down and be taken care of?"

And that's about all there was to it. All around was peace and quiet, the blue sky overhead, the substantial house which spelled "home" and protection. After all, what else was there for a woman? And I looked at the man beside me. I had said I would marry a successful director, and he was not only successful, but fine and interesting, and he evidently loved me.

"All right, I will." Just like that.

YOU have heard of the fall of Betty Compson in pictures. You have heard correctly. For two years I did let myself go almost completely. I was a good fellow to hosts of people. It wasn't Jim—it wasn't exactly me. It was just the situation. Oh, I did make quickies and, financially, I made as much as at Lasky's. But I made them with my left hand, while my right one was busy at Flintridge. In other words, I lost my grip and I am not ashamed to admit it.

Then Jim went away. I was alone. My manager, Rebecca Uhr, came out to see me. What I owe to that woman, who still handles my business! She—why, she whipped me with her tongue until I was so ashamed I could scarcely face her. Here I was, a woman, forgetting all about the ambitions of the girl who had struggled so valiantly for fame and freedom. I had come up before—I could come back now. The comeback was gradual, much more gradual than people even in this city realize.

I met Fitzmaurice on the street. "Betty, I am going to have a big part for you. We are going to make The Barker. It may be a year, but get ready!"

The Barker! I had always wanted to play Carrie. Here was something worth while. I began in earnest to diet. I refused to take the least drink. And here is something I wish to say: A woman cannot drink, not even the least drink, and keep up her profession. Even one or two highballs or cocktails in the evening are devitalizing. And she must have her sleep. She can't play and work in that way and be successful. I never touch a drop of liquor in any form today.

Jimmy came back. I went straight to him and told him. "I don't want marriage without a career and I don't want a career without marriage. Let's make a go of them together."

It takes a big man and a big woman and a hell of a lot of experience in the backgrounds of both, to do that. We are putting it over.

I HAVE lived life as have very few women. I have run the entire gamut of human emotions. I have come up and gone down and come up again. The public is being very nice. After The Barker, then Weary River—but this can't last forever. There is a limit to anyone's success in pictures. After all, what is there in life for a woman? In a way she does not know how to live until after she is thirty. It takes her that long to come to an understanding with herself. But what would my mother have done without me? My mother will cry real tears when she reads this story, but in a way it will make her happy. I have been all in all to my mother even though I wasn't the boy she intended. You can lose a husband, but you can never lose that maternal yearning over your children.

As I see it now, that's about all there is in old age, for a woman, to watch her offspring struggle as she has struggled, watch them step into the pitfalls into which she has fallen and lend a lifting hand if she can to help them, if it brings only the comfort which only sorrow for them must bring to her.

Yes—I have never told this before, not even Jimmy knows this side of my nature which has developed through living—but I think in a couple or three years I'll have children. It is after all the only way to round out to full completion The Life of Woman!

POSTSCRIPT

AND because Life is Life, since this was written I have left and returned to my husband. Why? Well, to be perfectly honest, he needed a lesson. I was gone for a week. I am back until he needs another lesson. Perhaps we both needed it. We were both, shall I say, a bit frayed with each other? Iron becomes rusty, material gets frayed. Just so do humans. They need a change to restore them.

Couples talk of divorce before they realize that all they need is a vacation from one another. And besides—why not admit it?—all women get restless.

I saw my women friends dashing around here and there, going when they pleased, how they pleased, with whom they pleased, without any second party to take into consideration. I, too, thought I would like to enjoy complete freedom. I thought I would like to live in a house by myself—one which would depict only my personality.

After I had been alone a few days, I began to analyze with my mind, rather than to grope with my emotions. Were those other women really happy or did they merely seem happy? Ah, it is only too true that the next pasture always looks a bit greener. But when you are in it and look back over the fence you wonder if the grass behind was not, after all, more tender! Possibly it is the one who makes the most of his present situation, who creates rather than chases happiness, who is the more contented.

Leave him again? I don't know. When I wrote this life story I had no intention of going. But I did. How do I know that I won't do it again before this is printed? How foolish for woman—woman who is always the epitome of emotion—to foretell her future. But whether we, Jim and I, really learned from this one separation or whether we must go through further fires of purging—that last paragraph of my story stands as written: A child is the real fulfillment for woman. And whether this child comes with Jimmy Cruze or with some future husband, before my career shall have absorbed all of my being, I am going to have a daughter or a son who will be the fulfillment of my life, as I have been the fulfillment of my mother's.

THE END.

William Haines' Dream Girl

impression of a healthy body. Her shoulders are straight and broad, but not too broad for a girl of her height. They are developed, but not over-developed."

Bill doesn't believe a man should marry a girl who is taller than himself. Marion Davies is just his height. He considers Greta Garbo's hands as near perfect as any he ever has seen.

THE companionship that comes with matrimony is a wonderful thing, but there can be no companionship where the wife is constantly picking at the husband or crying about what might have been. That kind of a wife drives her husband away and forces him to seek his happiness in places other than his own home."

And that's just one reason that Bill is so strong for Polly Moran, who takes life as she finds it and assures the world that things are great, whether she believes it or not.

"I have known Polly ever since I first came to Hollywood, in 1921, but not once have I ever heard her utter a complaint against anything or anyone. Polly came into pictures after great success on the vaudeville stage and was going great for a while in featured rôles, at a big salary. Then came lean days and long periods when Polly couldn't get work even as an extra at $7.50 a day. But she never lost her smile—or her sense of humor.

"Polly Moran is one woman in Hollywood who has never been known to refuse aid to anyone in difficulty, financially or otherwise, and I have known of times things weren't breaking for her when she shared her last five-dollar bill with someone who was down.

"That's one thing I hope to find in the girl I shall some day marry. One who will divide her last cent with a mere acquaintance couldn't go so far wrong in the rôle of a wife."

EIGHT years ago, Bijou Fernandez, seeking new types for the old Goldwyn company, ran across Bill on a New York street corner and urged him to call at her office. She pointed out to him the possibilities of the movies, and a few days later he was en route to Hollywood, where he began his screen career in Three Wise Fools.

Bill admits that the only reason he never had a childhood romance was because he was too bashful.

"But that isn't why I haven't had one since I came to Hollywood," explained Bill.

"Well, what is keeping you from the altar?" I asked.

"Don't tell my fans—they might think I'm putting her on too tall a pedestal—but I think the easy way out on that would be to say that I can't get married just now because...

"I haven't found my dream girl yet."

Tunes for the Talkies

Bud De Sylva, Lew Brown, Ray Henderson, Fred Fisher, Martin Broones, Alfred Bryan, Ballard McDonald, Milton Ager, Jack Yellen, Con Conrad, Jesse Greer, Ray Klages, Harry Axt, Dave Dreyer—Oh Lord, I don't know who all."

SPEAKING off-handedly and in a burst of enthusiasm, Irving Berlin set the figure much higher.

"Why," he exclaimed, "nine-tenths of the song writers are in Hollywood right now. It's like a rush to a mining town, or as if somebody had struck oil."

You will find them on every lot. Not always exactly on the lot, either, for already there has been one change since the earliest days. When the first composers arrived, everybody thought it would be nice for them to have rooms right in the studio with their names on the door and all that sort of thing, but after they had spent a day or a week strumming the piano and strumming the piano and strumming the piano, it was discovered that they were the only people in the vicinity who were getting any work done. The rest of the population was spending all its time tearing its hair and holding its fingers to its ears. So the song writers were told that some nice bungalows had been obtained for them—not precisely on the lot, but just down the street a piece, where their artistic concentration wouldn't be disturbed by all the noise and bustle of the studio.

"We've got 'em in bungalows, now," one executive, not on the musical staff, explained, "but we've got 'em where we can lock 'em in until we get a song, if we have to. That's the only way you can handle those babies."

TO AN extent the song-writers work in the movies pretty much as they do when a musical show is being turned out—producing over night a number for this spot, changing a jazz number to a ballad in that. Keyed up. Under pressure. Keeping hot.

Even when the pace is not so fast they find themselves much more productive. Certain studios, for instance, expect a song in one day, if necessary, and in three days on the average. The reason the writers can turn them out at this rate is that the situations and characters the songs are written for give constant, definite inspirations. It is a whole lot different from trying to pluck a song about just something-or-other out of the thin air.

To illustrate: In Our Modern Maidens, Joan Crawford pursues her hero far into the last reel before she gets her man. Gus Edwards considers this situation. "That man is sure hard to get," says he. Ah ha! A title leaps to mind: Hard-to-Get Charlie! and that song is all but written, right there. Furthermore, the idea carries on to a second song and we have I've Waited a Lifetime for You.

The song-writers like this. Under such circumstances they can turn out opus after opus in the time it would take them to capture one undersized inspiration for a song about nothing in particular.

These men are on salary. They do not gather royalties on what the film grosses as they would if writing for a musical show. While they are under contract they can write for no one else and the studio controls their copyrights. They do not mind the lack of royalties, however, for the income from sheet music, phonograph records and radio rights are both sweet and quick.

THE fact that better than 50 per cent of the good song-writers can no longer create tunes for vaudeville or for the musical shows is bound to have an effect on Broadway—an effect which the sly movie magnates may just possibly profit by, as you shall see.

"Lookee," explained One Who Knows, "we can spend $50,000 putting across one song. Twenty thousand is Ziegfeld's limit. He can't possibly spend more, and get away with it. If he does, the first thing he knows the 'nut' is larger than the 'take,' then where is he?

"Another thing is that Ziegfeld has only four or five men to write his songs. We've got fourteen."

One of the men working on the Movietone Follies is Dave Stamper, who was for 17 years with Ziggy. Need one say more to indicate that something is really being gone in for? Stamper is also working on musical comedies for Fox. Musical comedy! Another new term in the movie patois.

By musical comedy one no longer means the plot of The Student Prince or Irene twisted into a film story. Neither does one refer exclusively to the talkization of eye-and-ear stage successes. No sir, one refers, in this connection to nothing less than another of the big developments in Talkiedumb, due to the coming of the music masters —original musical comedy. Yes, indeed, before long now, you will be dropping into your local Alhambra or Abyssinian theater to watch the hero look into the heroine's eyes and say:

WHAT is today?" And she says: "Friday." And he says: "Friday always reminds me that you're the only fish in the sea for me." Whereupon they sing the big duet number entitled I'm Hook, Line and Sinker in Love and go into their dance. And you won't be able to say to the certain party with you: "I saw the stage production in New York, and it was a knockout."

One of the first originals will be Married in Hollywood, unless the title is changed, which—believe it or not—is now being musically adapted by the DeSylva-Brown-Henderson trio for Fox from nothing less than a Strauss opera!

Now will you believe that it means something when Tin Pan Alley goes Hollywood?

SOMETIMES the song writers do something that changes the directors' ideas for them. For example: Before Whiting and Robbin arrived, Paramount had Nancy Carroll singing the sweet, slow and dreamy stuff. Then came the song experts, who took a look and a listen and delivered themselves of a dictum. "That girl ought to be singing jazz," said they. A chorus of "yes sirs," echoed back from all sides, including the directors' section of the yessing-stands.

Since then, Miss Carroll has been doing fast, zippy, finger-snapping, head-swaying, foot-twitching numbers like I Want to Go Places and Do Things.

The song writer's job is to bring forth alive some number that will be so tuneful, so crammed with tricky harmony, so whistly, so neatly fitted with catch words that the audience will accept the hero or heroine as the real thing.

ANOTHER thing that has stuck the song writers is the tensely dramatic moment that occurs now and then in the films. Musical shows do not have such moments. There moments are either romantic or comic. A song may be fitted in, if it seems necessary, almost anywhere. But you can't get heavy with your film music. When Pagliacci discovers what has been going on between Mrs. P. and that slick village feller, he can't stop and sing a heart breaking "Vesta la Guiba." If he does, all he gets for his efforts is a laugh.

The influence of the song writer is therefore behind any movement for more and greater romantic comedy films. When a song is used in a dramatic sequence, it is usually based on the idea of contrast—jazz lips masking a bleeding heart. Or, if the scene is sufficiently sentimental, the day is saved. All the song writer has to do is to turn out another Sonny Boy, a Mother Machree, or some little thing about a sweetheart such as Victor Herbert might have written. Otherwise the dramatic moment is left to the mercies of the dialogue writers, or, if silent, to the musical director who arranges the synchronization. The director will select what he pleases from the whole field of music, but, even though heavier numbers can be used in synchronized accompaniments than in the picture itself, he probably will not go in for anything more weighty than necessary.

THE arrival of the Tinpanalleyans in Hollywood and the significance thereof has been almost wholly overshadowed by the general development of all the talkers. Whether Mary had a good talking voice, or the fate of the foreign favorites, the sudden return of some of the old timers, Charlie's decision to remain silent, the question whether silent pictures were or were not all washed up, all these matters seemed much more important. The most publicity that the boys have got since they first appeared on the scene came the other day when Leonard Stevens, the man who wrote I Faw Down an' Go Boom first was hit by an automobile, then tumbled off a fence.

"The studios have got to get real quality, and to get real quality they must have the men whose work consistently has quality—the top-notchers. I think the day is coming when such men can practically write their own tickets," says Irving Berlin.

"In other words, the movies must have the Belascoes and the Arthur Hopkinses and the Jerome Kernses. The business man will continue to have an important part, but the great figures are going to be the men who create."

On the other hand, Berlin believes that the developments in talking pictures have given a particular enthusiasm to many song writers who had been commencing to grow discouraged with things as they were before the microphone became king.

"It has practically given them new life," he said. "They breathe new air, and it is giving them just the lift and spirit they need to get going as they used to."

BERLIN does not believe that the wide hearing given film music will force the public to accept anything in the song line which would not become popular anyhow.

If you had heard him say it, you would have come away with the impression that this is his idea about the talkies in general, too.

There is a gag floating around that sums up the situation pretty well. A Hollywood preacher is supposed to have risen up in the pulpit—oh, yes, there are preachers in Hollywood—and announced Onward Christian Soldiers as the theme song for the morning services.

Well, if the composer of Onward Christian Soldiers were still among us, where would he be if not in Hollywood? Sir Arthur Sullivan wrote some pretty catchy numbers in his day, you must admit.

The only man who could talk to the Superintendent

"SOON after I began studying," a student wrote to us the other day, "we had a change in management at our plant. I certainly was glad then that I had decided to study in my spare time. For, thanks to my I. C. S. course, I was the only man in the organization who could talk to the Superintendent in his own language. As a result, I was promoted over men who had been here from ten to twenty years. My salary has been increased 90 per cent in the last ten months."

That's a true story of what just one I. C. S. student has done. There are thousands of others. Every mail brings letters from men and women telling of promotions and increases in salary due directly to spare-time study.

One hour a day, spent with the I. C. S. in the quiet of your own home, will prepare you for success in the work you like best. Yes, it will! Put it up to us to prove it.

Wonderful X-Ray Tube

A wonderful little instrument producing curious optical illusions both surprising and startling. With it you can see what is apparently the bones of your fingers, the lead in a lead pencil, the interior opening in a pipe stem, and many other similar illusions. The mystery that no one has been able to satisfactorily explain. Price 10c, 3 for 25c, 1 dozen 75c. Johnson Smith & Co.

MAGIC NOSE FLUTE

Post Paid 10c

The Magic Nose Flute, or Humanstone, is a unique and novel musical instrument that is played with nose and mouth combined. There is just a little knack in playing it which, when once acquired after a little practice, will enable you to produce very sweet music that somewhat resembles a flute. There is no blowing, and once you have mastered it you can play all kinds of music with facility and ease. When played as an accompaniment to a piano or any other musical instrument, the effect is so charming as it is surprising.

Every Boy His Own Toy Maker

A great book for boys. It gives plain, practical instructions for making all manner of toys, machines and other articles, amusing and useful. Tells how to make a Steam Engine, Autographic Camera, a Windmill, Microscope, Electrical Machine, Galvanic Battery, Electric Telegraph, Electrotyping Apparatus, Telephone, Kaleidoscope, Magic Lantern, Aeolian Harp; how to make Boats of all kinds, Kites, Balloons, Paper Toys, Masks, Card Racks, Wagons, Carts, Toy Houses, Bows and Arrows, Popguns, Slings, Fishing Tackle, Rabbit and Bird Traps, etc. Hundreds of illustrations. PRICE 25c Postpaid. Serpent's Eggs

Box contains 12 eggs. When lit with a match, each one gradually becomes itself into a snake several feet long, which writes and twists about in a most lifelike manner. Price per box, 10c postpaid, 3 for 25c.

The "Little Giant" Typewriter

A First Class Writing Machine For $1.50

A perfect little typewriter for $1.50. There are thousands of persons who would like to use a typewriter but whose needs and business do not warrant the expense attached to the purchase and use of a fifty or seventy-five dollar machine. To such persons we confidently recommend our Little Giant. It is strongly made, but simple in construction, so that anyone can quickly learn to operate it, and write as rapidly as they would with pen and ink. The letters of the alphabet most frequently used are so grouped as to enable one to write rapidly, the numerals 1 to 10, and the punctuation marks being together. With this machine you can send your boys girl typewritten love letters, address envelopes, make out bills, and do almost any kind of work not requiring a large, expensive machine. With each typewriter we send a tube of ink and full printed instructions for use of the machine. Price complete $1.50 by mail postpaid to any address in the world.

MICROPHONE TRANSMITTER BUTTON

$1.00 Postpaid

You can easily make a highly sensitive detectophone by using this Transmitter Button to pick up the sound waves. You can build your own outfit without buying any expensive equipment. It is simple and inexpensive. You can make an outfit in your home and hear conversations being held all over the house. You can connect up different rooms of a hotel. This outfit was used by secret service operatives during the war. It is being used on the stage. It is ultra-sensitive and is the greatest invention in micro-phones. You can mount the button on almost any-thing—cigar boxes, stove pipes, stiff calendars, on the wall behind a picture frame, etc. Button is so light and small it cannot be detected. Persons can be overheard without suspecting it. You can listen in on conversations in another room. A detectophone in the attic can hear the speaker. Connected to phonograph, piano or other musical instrument, music can be heard hundreds of feet away. Button may be used to record telephone transmitters; often makes an old line "talk up" when nothing else will. The ideal microphone to use; stands heavy current and is extremely sensitive. Amplifies radio signals. Countless other similar uses will suggest themselves. Experimenters find the button useful for hundreds of experiments along the lines of telephones, amplifiers, loud speakers, etc. Many fascinating stunts may be devised, such as holding the button against the throat or chest to reproduce speech without sound waves. PRICE $1.00.

MAGICIAN'S BOX OF TRICKS

Apparatus and Directions for a Number of Mysterious Tricks, Enough for an Entire Evening's Entertainment . . . $1.00

Anyone Can Do Them

It is great fun mystifying your friends. Get this Magician's Cabinet, and you will be the cleverest fellow in your district. It contains the apparatus for ten first-class tricks, including the MAGIC BALL AND VASE TRICK (a wooden ball is placed inside, and upon replacing the lid has disappeared and is found in someone else's pocket); THE HINDOO TRICK CARDS (can be made to change completely in no less than five times); DISAPPEARING COIN BOX (a coin, placed in the wooden box, vanishes entirely or changes into a coin of another denomination); THE GLASS GOBLET TRICK (a coin is dropped into a glass of water and when the water is poured out the coin is found somewhere else); THE BLACK MAGIC FACTORY FROM THE MOUTH TRICK (a seemingly endless supply of colored paper ribbons comes out of your mouth); the DISAPPEARING HANDKERCHIEF (a handkerchief held in the hand mysteriously vanishes); the WIZARD'S RING COIN TRICK; the ENCHANTED BOTTLE (no one but yourself is able to make it lay down); the GREAT HAT AND DICE TRICK (a large dice is placed on top of a hat, disappears, and is found underneath, yet no one has touched the hat), and last, but not least, the GREAT PHANTOM CARD TRICK, or two from five leaves nothing. Full instructions are sent for performing each trick. In addition to the above, a number of other tests and illusions are fully explained for which you can easily make or procure the necessary apparatus. Price complete $1.00 postpaid.

DISSOLVING VIEWS 50c

You may have a lot of fun with this little peep-show. A regular artist. Made entirely of metal, having a circular opening fitted into one end. When the victim is absorbed in admiration of the opened end, you turn the button in the confident expectation of seeing something interesting, a spring syringe is brought into action, and the observer experiences a very great surprise. 50 cents each postpaid. JOHNSON SMITH & CO.

Lover's Knot or Friendship Ring

Made of 4 strands of genuine 14K gold filled wire, woven into the True Lover's Knot, symbolic of love or friendship. Very pretty, yet not showy. Each ring is made by hand by gold wire expert. It looks good and it is good. Price 50c Postpaid

Johnson Smith & Co.

SEX Indicator 25c

Hold the MAGIC INDICATOR over a man's hand, instantly it moves in a straight line, backward and forward. Hold it over a woman's hand and it describes a complete and continuous circle. The same action can be obtained over a letter written by a man or woman, etc. It is fascinating baffling. We have never been able to figure out how it's done, but we have never seen it fail. Many novel and entertaining feats may be performed with the Sex Indicator. For example, similar results can be obtained with animals, cats, dogs, rabbits, over birds, chickens, canaries, etc. Also used to predetermine the sex of chickens and birds, etc. In fact it is sold as a patented egg tester in Europe. Price 25c, or 3 for 65c, postage prepaid. JOHNSON SMITH & CO.

BABY TANK 25 Cents

Most remarkable toy ever invented. By drawing the Tank backward, either with the hand or over the floor or table and then placing it down it will crawl along, overcoming all obstacles, in the same fashion as the large Tank that has proved so deadly in the great war. What makes it go is somewhat of a mystery, for there is no mechanism to wind up as is usually understood with mechanical toys, yet this tank will keep plodding along ten times longer than the ordinary toy tank. It will perform dozens of the most wonderful stunts. 25c prepaid. 2½ Inches long

ITCHING Powder

This is another good practical joke. It is a fine powder concealed in the clothing of your victims to everyone but themselves is thoroughly irritating. All that is necessary to start the ball rolling is to deposit a little of the powder on a person's hand and the powder can be relied upon to do the rest. The result is a vigorous scratch, then some more scratch, and still some more. 10c box, 3 for 25c or 75c per dozen. Shipped by Express. Johnson Smith & Co., Dept. 908, Racine, Wis.

ANARCHIST BOMBS

One of these glass vials dropped in a room full of people will cause more consternation than limburger cheese. The smell entirely disappears in a short time. 10c a Box, 3 Boxes for 25c or 75c per Dozen. Shipped by Express. JOHNSON SMITH & COMPANY

SNEEZING POWDER

Place a very small amount of this powder on the back of your hand and blow it into the air, and everyone in the room or car will begin to sneeze without knowing the reason why. It is most amusing to hear the remarks, as they never suspect the real source, but think they have caught it one from another. Between the laughing and sneezing you yourself will be having the time of your life. For parties, political meetings, church, or anyplace at all where there is a gathering of people, it is the greatest joke out. Price 10c, 3 for 25c, 75c per dozen. Shipped by Express.

Johnson Smith & Co., Dept 908, Racine, Wis.

COMICAL MOTTO RINGS

Lots of harmless fun and amusement may be had with these rings. Made in platinoid finish to resemble platinum, with oxidized or enameled, as illustrated. Price 25c ea. Postpaid

Johnson Smith & Co., Dept. 908, Racine, Wis.

Rubber Chewing Gum

It is just like a package of chewing gum and looks so real that it fools everybody. And no one of course suspects it is not genuine until they start to chew it. There's a world of fun in this rubber chewing gum. 4 sticks to the package. Price 10c Package; 3 for 25c; 12 for 75c, Postpaid. Stamps taken.

A De Luxe Edition of our new 1929 CATALOG mailed on receipt of 25c. Handsome binding. Bigger and better than ever. Only book of its kind in existence. Nearly 600 pages of all the latest tricks in magic, the newest novelties, puzzles, games, sporting goods, rubber stamps, unusual and interesting books, curiosities in seeds and plants, etc., unprocurable elsewhere. Remit by Stamps, Coin, Money Order, Check, etc. Unused U. S., Canadian and Foreign Stamps also accepted.

INEXPERIENCED MAKES $23.00 FIRST 5 HOURS

I have had very little selling experience, but sold, in less than five hours yesterday, 16 can openers and 16 sharpeners. They are SOME machines!—A. Gray, Md.

MAKES $18.00 FIRST DAY

Received my first 24 Speedos yesterday; the entire lot is now delivered and more sold. In all my years of selling I never saw anything that met with such universal approval. —W. R. Duncan, Montana.

$5.00 HIS FIRST HOUR

Received Speedo outfit April 1st. Left the house after supper at 6:30 P. M. Returned just one hour later with six orders. Speedos are a necessity in every home—W. W. Marshall, Ill.

Let These Twin Inventions Hand You

Double Profits...$5 to $11 IN AN HOUR!

Men, here's a proposition that's amazingly simple. Yet the profit possibilities are nothing short of startling! For now, an old, well-known manufacturer offers you direct, TWO unique, patented inventions. Items used every day in every home. Yet so revolutionary that they positively sell on sight! So just read the facts below. Then mail coupon for FREE OUTFIT and FREE TEST OFFERS.

Works Like a Charm

Just insert can in holder and turn crank. Top is cut completely out inside the rim of can. Juices can't spill out. So simple a child can operate with perfect safety.

Food Pours Right Out

No fuss or muss. All food pours right out of can without scraping or "spooning." Even foods frozen in the can slip out easily.

No Jagged Edges

Speedo cuts the top out, smooth, slick and clean. Ends forever the danger of infection from fingers cut on jagged tin edges.

EVERY man who has cut his eye teeth in the selling game knows this: The big clean-ups are always made by men who get in on the ground floor with something new and sensational. Think, then, what a doubly sensational chance literally to coin money is now yours! For here are offered you two unique patented devices—pronounced by experts everywhere to be absolutely revolutionary—approved by Good Housekeeping Institute, Modern Priscilla, etc—and real necessities in every home in the land. In your wildest dreams, could you ever conjure up such an amazing opportunity for quick, easy profits?

A Real Million-Dollar Can Opener

Imagine a little automatic can opening machine, that opens any can, round, square or oval, simply at the turn of a crank. Cuts the entire top off, slick, smooth and clean! No more stabbing and hacking with old-style can openers. No more fingers cut and infected on jagged tin-can edges. For Speedo holds the can—strips the top out—flips up the lid—all in a couple of seconds! And men, it's inexpensive! No wonder women simply go wild over it. And no wonder 4 out of 5 buy on a 10-second demonstration!

The "Magic Groove" Sharpener

Women never saw anything even remotely like this other "twin" invention, the Speedo sharpener. Just demonstrate the "magic groove" principle and watch their eyes pop open with amazement. Now anyone can put a keen, smooth edge on everything that cuts. Even scissors are ground to a perfect cutting bevel! Every woman sees instantly that here is an end to the waste and drudgery of dull knives and tools. That's why agents everywhere report as much as $10 and $12 in a single hour with Speedo sharpener alone!

Exclusive Territories—Generous Co-operation

This company has been in business over 20 years. Speedos are made entirely in our own big factories, under exclusive patents. Each item is backed by a printed guarantee of 5 years perfect service. We give you absolute protection in exclusive territory. Over 100% profit! We train you from A to Z, and supply you with a complete selling outfit FREE.

Mail the Coupon TO-DAY

Any ambitious man with just ordinary common sense can see the possibilities of this proposition at a glance. If you are that kind of a man, I want to send you my FREE OUTFIT and FREE TEST OFFERS. I want to show you what real big money means. Mail the coupon today. Then get set to test the fastest, dizziest profit makers of your life. Write me this minute!

Sharpens Like Magic

Just rest blade in magic groove and turn handle. Sharpens a ten-inch knife in six seconds by the clock. Puts a razor edge on straight or curved blades, sickles, chopping knives, everything that cuts.

Grinds Scissors Perfectly

Now anyone can sharpen scissors and shears. No trick or knack to it. Just rest blade against scissors guide, give the handle a couple of turns—Presto! Scissors are sharp as new.

SHOWERED WITH HONORS

Fox pictures, actors, directors receive bewildering array of awards for artistic merit

FOX wins Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences First Award

This organization, composed of the leading stars, directors, producers, writers and technicians, headed by Douglas Fairbanks as President and regarded as the representative voice of the motion picture industry, awarded the most coveted prize in the screen world to FOX for the most unique and artistic production of the year 1928, "SUNRISE" ➨ They also bestowed upon Janet Gaynor, petite Fox star, the first award of the Academy for her artistic performance in her portrayal of the role Diane in "7th HEAVEN," this being adjudged the best screen performance of the year. Miss Gaynor's other noteworthy performances during the past year include "STREET ANGEL", "FOUR DEVILS" and "SUNRISE". ➨ Frank Borzage, director of "STREET ANGEL" was similarly honored by the Academy, who bestowed upon him the first award in the field of dramatic directors. ➨ The awards for the best adaptation was also won by FOX with Benjamin Glazer as the cited author.

FOX wins the Photoplay Gold Medal

One of the most important awards of the year is the annual PHOTOPLAY GOLD MEDAL, presented by the publishers of Photoplay Magazine as a result of a poll of their readers made each year. The American public, as represented by the readers of Photoplay Magazine, voted "7th HEAVEN" the best motion picture of the year.

FOX Pictures receive important awards throughout the world

In a nationwide poll among dramatic critics, conducted by the Film Daily, three FOX pictures were named among the ten best of the year 1928—this poll included 295 critics in 188 cities representing 326 periodicals. The FOX pictures selected were "STREET ANGEL", "FOUR SONS" and "SUNRISE". ➨ In a WORLD-WIDE survey of 25 countries, "SUNRISE" was adjudged the best picture of the season by Der Deutsche, famous German publication. ➨ In Japan, "7th HEAVEN" won the contest conducted by Kirewa Jumpo, most popular motion picture magazine in Japan, for the best picture released in 1927. In 1928 the first award was won by "SUNRISE".

FOX Movietone is Americanizing the World
